Beneath this a zealous Christian has inscribed the feelings of his heart as follows: "A very low remark; I wonder the citizens of Rockford do not boot him out of town." This piece of good-natured suggestion was preceded by the original remark that "man shall not liv by bread alone," etc.

A nicely framed piece of paper in a Wisconsin barber shop bears this legend, "In God we trust, all others cash down." It would be well for the proprietor not to let the account against the first named individual get too large.

Hon. Hendrick B. Wright, of Pennsylvania, than whom no truer, nobler man ever sat in the halls of Congress, in the course of a very able speech upon his bill to extend government aid to actual settlers upon the public lands, made the astounding assertion that our sea gates should be open to all who will "worship the God of our fathers." Then it follows the Atheist, and the believer in some other myth than the "God of our fathers" will not be permitted to make America their home. Will Mr. Wright please tell us when belief became a test of citizenship in this land, or, if it has not already, why it should in future? And does he suppose that we Atheists and Infidels, his fellow-Labor-reformers, are going to stand upon such a platform as that?

An earnest co-worker writes: "This League is badly troubled with whispering Liberals." They will cry aloud some day, when, alas! the tyrant's chain shall gnaw the flesh. Speak out, comrades of the forlorn hope!

Mrs. Mattie Hulett Parry is universally recognized as one of the very best speakers in the Liberal lecture field. She will be at the Marshalltown Convention and delight the multitudes there assembled with her burning eloquence and brilliant elucidation of the principles of Freethought and Liberalism.

Come up to the Marshalltown Convention and let us counsel together. There is much for us to do, and we cannot too soon begin the practical work which lies before us.

Mrs. Mattie Hulett Parry, Mrs. H. S. Lake, W. F. Jamieson, W. F. Peck, and A. J. Clark will be among those who will break the bread of life on that occasion. Let me hear from you. Address me at Norway, Benton Co., Iowa.

E. C. WALKER.

Liberal News Items.

BRO. E. C. WALKER, of Norway, Iowa, is a grand representativ of the Liberal League movement of that state. His constituents should see to it that his physical wants are supplied. It is a little discouraging not to know where the material for the next meal is coming from. I know by experience.

BRO. WALKER informs us that there is to be a mass meeting of the Liberals of the West at Marshalltown, Aug. 27th, 28th, and 29th. That is a grand idea. It should be numerously attended. Nothing helps our movement like large gatherings. I am confident under the supervision of E. C. Walker it will be a success.

I DESIRE to say "amen" to all that Elmina D. Slenker says of "Pocket Theology" by Voltaire. Every Liberal should own a copy. It is good for digestion—the most witty book I ever read. The cheap edition just published by D. M. Bennett should hav a large sale. Reader, send at once for a copy.

THE last "item" reminds me of a very interesting piece of news. Our distinguished Liberal friend James Parton, will soon complete his life of Voltaire, and I predict it will hav the largest sale of any book published since the war. I understand Mr. Parton has been engaged for the last twenty years procuring the material for this work. There is a number of reasons why I desire this book to be published soon; oue is that Mr. Parton promises me that if he can get it off of his hands before Sept. 1st, he will attend the Freethinkers' Convention.

I AM pleased to learn that the indefatigable worker in the Liberal ranks, Bro. E. Campfield, is recovering his health and will soon organize for a fall and winter campaign in Kansas. He writes: "Nearly all my time is occupied in working up the annual meeting at Bismarck Grove. I think that the meeting will be a good one this year. I am getting our petitions for the taxation of church property ready for circulation. We will go at it in a thorough manner and expect to secure the submission of an amendment by the next legislature to the people. The tone of our local papers is very strong in favor of taxing everything at its full value, and quite a number are open advocates of church taxation.

THE Savannah (Ga.) Evening Zeitung has been sent me by some good friend, and I am glad to learn this able German paper is an advocate of the Liberal League movement. The Zeitung recommends the German and American-born citizens of the South who favor the movement to immediately organize themselves into Auxiliary Liberal Leagues. I am confident when our German citizens fully understand the movement they will very generally join it. For some reason our German citizens are constitutionally lovers of liberty, and any cause that has for its object the liberation of man is pretty sure to enlist their sympathies. We hav no better citizens than our German citizens.

H. L. GREEN.

W. S. Bell Still at Work.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: While our village is as yet without any organized League, we may truly say that the spirit of Liberalism is by no means wanting in this vicinity.

The Fourth of July was celebrated by a Liberal grove-meeting, addressed by W. S. Bell. The attendance was large, and composed of the "true metal," and in every respect the meeting was an entire success. Mr. Bell began his address by reviewing briefly the life and character of Thomas Paine, showing in his clear and forcible manner that to this martyr of slander and falsehood we are indebted for the secure basis upon which our republic stands—a Godless Constitution.

Mr. Bell is a very earnest and humorous speaker, a clear thinker, and one who handles his subject in a manner that carries conviction to his hearers, showing that the arguments are conclusiv.

The lecture was highly spoken of among the audience, and it may truly be said to be one of Bro. Bell's best endeavors. May this Bell be kept ringing. Mr. Bell is about the only lecturer that has been among us, but good results hav always attended his labors. A. E RINGER.

Lyons, N. Y., July 5, 1880.

Entire Circle of Reform.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: No thanks to orthodoxy, but thanks to Liberalism that you are out of prison and at the head of THE TRUTH SEEKER again. The manner of your reception and return to your family and numerous friends and to THE TRUTH SEEKER was a glorious victory. All hail to so grand a triumph! But we must not rest here. I hav hoped to see your paper take the lead of all other papers in the world. Will it do so? It is the leader now in one or two directions; will it not take the lead in all directions? There is now no one publication in the world, so far as I know, that is doing so. I know not how it is with others, but in regard to myself I hav to take a number of publications advocating different reforms in order to get the food I need and must hav. Why can we not hav a first-class publication that will allow contributors to take up and discuss both sides, or all sides for that matter, of all the reforms of the present day, and all the vital and advance questions of the age, whether popular or unpopular.

Is it not an admitted fact by the students of science that all sciences co-operate together, are but parts, and necessary parts too, of one stupendous temple, one complete circle? Is it not equally true of reforms? Is there not a complete and perfect circle of reforms as there is of sciences, and is not each and every one of these reforms just as indispensably necessary to the other as each and every part of the sciences is to the great whole? Why, then, shall we discriminate?

I see a friendly challenge in a recent number of THE TRUTH SEEKER by Mr. W. F. Jamieson to the Spiritualists to discuss the truth of their doctrines. Now this is, I think, as it should be. I am very glad to see the challenge. Will our Spiritualistic friends accept the challenge? I certainly hope they will, and that the discussion will go on and be conducted in a fair, friendly, genteel, and orderly manner, not for the purpose of achieving a victory but for the divine purpose of spreading the truth.

Our good friend Moses Hull challenged Mr. Underwood to a discussion of the Freelove doctrines. Mr. Underwood after all his severe and unjust denunciations of Freelovism did not dare to accept the challenge. Why? Can there be but one reason? Mr. Underwood is a debater. That and lecturing is his profession. No one doubts his scholarship and ability; he does not doubt it himself. He never has, and I presume never will, fear any orthodox opponent that can be brought against him. Then, I ask, is there any other reason under heaven why Mr. Underwood would not accept Mr. Hull's challenge to discuss the Freelove theory, or, as Mr. Underwood claims, the Freelove fallacy, than the simple fact that he well knew that he had not the arguments on his side of the question? What other reason could he hav had? Simply none. Now, I ask, is this Liberalism? If it is, then I frankly say I am not a Liberalist. I am for truth in all directions, no matter where it leads me, if it is to hell itself. But I am not afraid it will lead me there. Now will our Spiritualists back down on Mr. Jamieson's challenge like Mr. Underwood did with Mr. Hull? I do most certainly hope not. Spiritualism is most certainly one of the grandest truths (if truth it be) that was ever published on earth, at least to my mind. I would rather know to-day that Spiritualism is true than to know all the other truths I now know or shall ever be likely to know in the future of the world. I do not want to resign my being to annihilation, with all its boundless capabilities and resources for enjoyment and intellectual culture. If Materialism is true, then annihilation is my destiny; but if Spiritualism is true, then I hav an eternity of time in which to complete the work of culture and enjoyment that as yet I hav barely commenced in this life. Materialists may tell me, and do, that I ought not to desire in that direction but be satisfied with this life, which is all sufficient. But, I ask, then, why do they desire to liv till to-morrow; why not die to-day? They certainly take as much pains as Spiritualists do to preserve their health and lives here and to ward off and prevent disease and death. Why do so if life is not pleasant? Do they not desire continued life here? Then why blame Spiritualists for desiring continued life hereafter? They say, One world at a time; why not one day at a time and one hour at a time, and not think of what lies beyond? Is this science? I do not think so. I believe in paying full attention to this world, to the present day, the present hour; but it is not prudent or wise to not think of the next hour, the next day, or the next world. Nor do I believe in Mr. Spencer's idea of the "unknown and unknowable." That there is a great deal unknown in this world is true, bnt that these things can never be known I do not believe. Science is the key that will unlock all mysteries in the future and in all directions. We shall know sometime, if we do not now, whether there is a life beyond the grave or not.

The point is, Do we know it now? Can our Spiritualists prove this one fact to the world to-day? I think if thay can that they are able to bestow more enjoyment and blessings upon the world than all the religion the world now possesses can possibly giv. If they hav this beautiful arcana will they not hand it out to the millions of longing and starving hearts everywhere around us? Everywhere I go men and women ask me, Can you prove the immortality of the soul? I say No. I believe and desire it myself, but I do not know it. I only wish I did. Belief proves nothing. Old orthodoxy has no proof whatever, not in the slightest degree, of continued existence. All is black in that direction as Egyptian midnight, and the world is longingly turning to Spiritualism for the proof. Shall we be disappointed? I have been watching this young child from its infancy up, hoping and doubting that it might be able to give to the world this fundamental and all-glorious truth of immortality or continued existence. I hav gone through all the Spiritualistic literature, and am still reading it. The child is now thirty-two years old, according to its advocates and devotees. Its devotees claim wonderful things from it—that our departed friends show themselvs in innumerable instances, so that their friends still in the flesh can feel them, see them, and talk with them. Now, I hope this is all true; but is it true? is the question. If so, let us hav the proof. The age of belief is fast passing away. We want the proof; nothing else will satisfy. I know crushed and bleeding hearts by the thousands who are thirsting and dying for the truth of immortality. Come, brothers and sisters of the Spiritualistic faith, if you hav got it giv us this proof, for it will bless our world as no other truth can bless it, and make our old world blossom and bloom as the rose. Get your debaters ready on both sides; hold your meeting in New York, Boston, or Philadelphia. Bring forward your best test and materializing mediums. Get your cabinets in good order, and all the conditions favorable, and then commence the work and continue from day to day until it is fully and fairly settled whether Spiritualism has the truth of immortality or not. Let all go who wish to, and will properly conduct themselves, and charge each one sufficiently to pay all expenses, but no more. Do not undertake to make money out of the occasion. Hav reporters for THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Boston Investigator, the Word, and for all other Liberal and Spiritualistic papers, for the benefit of those who cannot attend.

Now, would not our departed spirit friends help to do this great work, to show themselves to the world? And if our Spiritualists and departed spirit friends can do this great work, bring this proof before the leading minds of the age, then old orthodoxy will be buried forever, and the fight between Materialists and Spiritualists closed up forever.

I hav been well pleased to see the discussion going on in THE TRUTH SEEKER between the Spiritualists and Materialists, but very sorry to see the bitter feeling displayed sometimes by the debaters. It seems to me that element is everything else but Liberalism. We are all teachers and all learners. Let us be, then, as one family, as indeed we are, and let not our opinions divide us, for they prove nothing.

Brush Creek, Kansas. R. E. LAFETRA.

Mrs. Slenker's Request.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Outside of our Liberal papers I count as first in my estimation of all other publications the New York Physiologist, and to-day I promised myself to go to work for this paper in good earnest, and do all I can for its success and prosperity. I consider health the foundation of all that is valuable in life. We must study hygiene if we wish to be strong, vigorous, and full of life. There is no help to any aim in life like that of a good periodical devoted to the object, and making its regular visits to our homes. It is always fresh, new, and inspiring. It tells the best way, and keeps all the time nudging us along toward it. A book is read and laid away. Advice from a friend or neighbor is in one ear and out of the other, but a paper is like a fresh running stream, always bringing crystal drops from the fountain-head itself. Now, I want all who read this, and feel a real interest in one of the best movements of the age, the regeneration and right generation of men and women, to take hold and help sustain the Physiologist. Talk for it, write for it, and send money for it. I hav sent out, circulated, and lent to friends hundreds of copies of the paper ever since its first issue, and it is now in its third volume, and without one exception, every one I hav let hav it pronounced it a good, valuable, and interesting paper. A verdict so unanimous as this is rarely bestowed upon any periodical, so you may be sure it will not be lost labor or lost money to invest in it. I am wondering just now if some of my five hundred personal TRUTH SEEKER friends will not sit right down and send in a subscription at once on my invitation, as a special favor to ELMINA.

Snowville, Va, June 31, 1880.

Discussion.

Mr. Mair's Third Letter.

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 7, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: If an elaborate enumeration, showing much erudition in oriental religions, suffice to prove a proposition, I must yield you the palm. But perhaps a closer scrutiny of your proofs may show that the myths and facts you recall have after all as much affirmative evidence to prove the divine origin of Christianity as you think they possess negative. The force of these proofs I should like to examine, however, preparatory to examining some of the proofs themselves. Let us inquire, then, if granting that all you assert be true, that is, in brief, admitting the facts adduced to uphold your first thesis, what weight would they have against the truth of Christianity? and secondly, is there any fact related in the Bible centuries before the advent of Christ which require that as a necessary consequence such traditions as you enumerate must arise? This consideration, if overlooked, would greatly affect the conclusion rightly to be drawn from a study of mythology.

Of course I do not believe, and therefore cannot grant, nor can it possibly be proved from any premises, that Christianity was "borrowed" from preceding religions. The strongest conclusion that can be drawn from your facts is that before Christ, but contemporary with Judaism, which was confessedly a "shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ," several religions similar to it, in one or more particulars, existed in countries that were clustered quite near together geographically or bound by ties of trade, conquest, or consanguinity. Whether Judaism was borrowed from these or those borrowed from Judaism, or whether both were derived from some previous truths or facts, would, I presume, be answered according to the bias or creed of the inquirer. But reserving this for later consideration, what does the fact prove that contemporary with the religion of the Bible there existed many other similar, though in some respects more or less different, religions? does it prove that none of these can be true? If I have before me a number of coins, and I find that ten out of a dozen are counterfeits, does that prove that of necessity the other two must also be counterfeits? Who is willing, because that he has two or three bad coins given to him, to cast away all that he has? I claim that though ten be counterfeits, that is not the slightest proof that the other two are likewise bad. The fact, though, of their being counterfeits, as has often been argued, establishes an a posteriori argument that somewhere there must be the true. I am certain, and I presume that every one is assured, that there is in the universe truth, there is a religion that is truth, and that every other religion must be to a greater or less degree false. It is most illogical, unreasonable, and unscientific to assume that they are all false. The fact of false religions being in the world morally bind me to search for the true, and when I have found truth, the fact of distorted reflections being found among false systems in no wise impugn or invalidate the true.

Secondly, for I must admit that a great many of the facts you adduce cannot be gainsaid, I insist that they are just such a spectacle as a student of the Bible might expect to see on lifting his eyes from its pages to survey a lost, rebellious, and yet conscience-terrified world. I think, however, that the myths and traditions are related with perhaps a circumstantiality that can never be proved to have been held for hundreds of years after their alleged origin, and I expect to show by one or two comparisons that they are in no way to be compared with the religion of Jesus Christ.

I believe it cannot be seriously denied that the Jews existed as a nation before the date fixed by the most reliable historians as the birth of Buddha, and unless all human evidence is utterly unreliable, and past facts absolutely incapable of proof, the books of Moses, which were proved to be ancient by Josephus two thousand years ago, were also then in existence. In one of these books there is a relation of the creation of the world and the placing by the Creator of two human beings on this earth, the progenitors of its present human inhabitants. He was pleased to put them under a certain law to himself, enforced by adequate reward for obedience and condign punishment for disobedience. The narrative further continues that through the subtlety of an evil spirit these creatures were seduced from their allegiance to their Maker and plunged themselves and their posterity of whom they were the federal head into ruin and despair. A serpent was the vessel used by the tempter to accomplish his malignant purpose. In declaring the curse of the broken law, and yet in a degree revealing his unquenchable love for his undeserving creatures, God said, speaking to the serpent, as symbolizing the evil spirit, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed; he shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." That this was understood to be a prophecy of a "Savior and a great one" by Adam and Eve is shown by the exclamation of Eve on the birth of a son, "Lo, I have gotten a man from the Lord." I argue that this promise made to our first parents is the origin of all the hopes and traditions (true or false) of oriental saviors, incarnations, avatars, or whatever else they may be called. The chain of reasoning is perfect in explaining the varied myths so strikingly similar in their universal expectation or tradition of a savior in so many widely separated lands and different tongues. The fact is absolutely necessary to any reasonable elucidation of the universality of this article of faith, and none of the religions or facts or myths adduced in the reply under review can he traced with a shadow of proof to a time prior to this book of Genesis.

Allow me to make another observation before looking at the learned array of ancient gods, etc., brought before us. To claim the personal existence of Buddha (which I believe) on the proofs adduced in the eleventh paragraph, and then insinuate a doubt, after the manner of Volney, as to the personal existence of Jesus Christ, to which fact there are far more proofs than can ever be adduced for Buddha, is, to my mind, inexplicable inconsistency. To believe that tens of thousands, contemporary with Christ, should surrender comfort and wealth and reputation for the sake of one who never existed, should persist in the belief of his existence despite the most cruel tortures for no possible gain; that rich and poor, learned and illiterate, alike should be seized with the same mania; that this faith should have almost immediate universal diffusion; that many imposed the belief upon themselves that they were healed by him, when, in fact, he never existed; that they likewise deceived themselves and others into the belief that they performed miracles, restored the dead to life, healed the crippled, etc.; that contemporary historians should mention him; that governmental archives should solemnly preserve the alleged crucifixion of a mythical personage; that books pretended to have always been in the hands of his followers were not written until a hundred years after the death of those who constantly quoted them in their writings, preserved until this day; that the enemies of the faith he founded should believe he existed, and should combine, as Celsus and Porphyry, to join in this gigantic fraud with Christians, and that the world should accept this delusion until the erudite academician, the author of the "Ruin of Ages," after seventeen hundred years had elapsed, should expose the falsehood—the belief of these and many other impossible absurdities is the credulous superstition of Infidelity that outbeggars the faith of a Christian in accepting an impossible miracle to which all the miracles of the New Testament are as the most ordinary everyday occurrences. Truly, it seems as if "God sent them a strong delusion that they should believe a lie . . . because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved."

I do not know what you mean by the words "the New Testament story of the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary holding their celebrated interview." I cannot find any such interview related in the Bible, and I have not been its least observant reader.

I regret the use of the following language, "The foundation dogma upon which Christianity rests is that God cohabited with a mortal female, by which means she conceived and ultimately brought forth a demigod or a being half divine, half human," because the thought is nowhere contained in the Bible and is believed by no sect of Christians of whom I have ever read. The language shows more acquaintance with the "Age of Reason" than the scriptures; and while from a desire to be uniformly courteous I forbear to pass any further criticism, I merely contrast it with the scriptural statement, "And the angel answered her (Mary), The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." I will further object, however, that Christ is never taught to be "a demigod, a being half human and half divine," but is the eternal Son, coeternal and co-equal with the Father, and who, having assumed human nature, became the God-man—two natures, but one person.

In the long list of ancient faiths, the amours, celestial and terrestrial, of pagan deities, monster offspring, etc., there is the display of considerable learning, but no proof that "Christianity is neither new nor original, but borrowed from older systems of religion." You have adduced no type or shadow of any character, of any mission, of which it can be at all said Christ is a copy. The words "redeemer," "savior," etc., which have been applied to the alleged offspring of gods and goddesses, or human beings, are delusive titles unmerited by any doctrines taught by those so styled.

The bare quotation of such names as Gentant and Quexalcote of Mexico, Hesus and Bremrillah of the Celtic Druids, Odin of Scandinavia, Thor and Balder of the Norsemen, is unworthy the name of argument. They can in no wise prove anything for your cause. As to the fact that many claimed to be inspired teachers, it has never been called into question and has no bearing whatever upon the thesis under consideration, although the fact will form part of my argument hereafter. I could supply you with many other names quite as much to the purpose, and I should not notice this lavish waste of powder were it not that with many a list of names such as you have given, with the captivating title of the "World's Crucified Saviors," is considered ample reason for flinging away the Scriptures without further evidence or examination. I expected at least to receive from you some arguments or facts that were worthy of serious comparison and refutation, but with two or three exceptions you have adduced nothing at all pertinent to our present proposition. It is strange men do not argue in this manner except when they are opposing Christianity.

The gods of Babylonia, Assyria, Egypt, or India, have no prototype of Christ. The person and office of the Son of God, the equal of Jehovah, the subject of prophecy, vaguely foretold at first, but more and more revealed as the "fullness of times" draw nigh; the glory of every page of the Old Testament where the date and place of his birth, his divinity, his doctrines, his miracles, his prophecies, his death, his resurrection, his ascension, his salvation, his sacred advent and millennial glory are all foretold, oft-times appearing, as to Abraham and others, in anticipation of his incarnation; the Son of David, and yet this Lord; the mighty God, yet a babe born in a manger; the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; the earnest expectation of his own people, the Jews, and yet, when he came, rejected by them; the Desire of all nations, yet crucified by the world he came to save—all these are without a parallel in any other religion.

You do not, as I take it, however, instance all your proofs as disproving Christianity but rather as proving the ingenuity of men in framing gods and deifying in them their own lusts, etc. This is certainly all a great many of your instances prove, and to quote them with any other object deprives them of all force. But as compared with the Christ of the New Testament they are my witnessess to confirm the unique solitary glory and sinlessness of the Lord Jesus, and prove that the conception of such character was absolutely impossible by men of this world. I should like, had I time and space, to critically compare every myth and fact adduced in your article with Christ and his doctrines, but I have not the books of reference by me, and I am compelled to trust so far almost entirely to my memory, and my time is so short and so much occupied that I dare not now undertake it. But I will hastily draw a comparison between Buddhism and Christianity and appeal to your decision. Buddhism is undoubtedly the highest conception of the human mind, and approaches nearer according to the judgment of the best scholars to Christianity than any other religion, and if this system fails, surely no religion of > "God's partial, changeful, passionate, unjust, > Whose attributes were rage, revenge, and lust," can ask a comparison.

The "Encyclopedia Brittanica" summarizes Buddha's teachings as follows:

"Misery must always accompany existence.

"All modes of existence (man or animal, in earth or heaven), result from passion or desire.

"No escape from existence except destruction of desire.

"This is to be accomplished only by following the fourfold way to Nirvana."

This system has found an eloquent and popular admirer in Mr. Arnold. But I appeal to your candor if either the poet's eloquence or the enthusiast's devotion can find in this dark creed, beginning with such a hopeless doctrine and ending in the blankest Atheism and annihilation, anything at all comparable with Christianity? The religion of Christ, so human in its sympathies, so exactly satisfying the needs of the sinner and filling the universal craving which until his time neither the wisdom of the philosopher nor the oracle of the gods could in anywise aid; and recognizing that which every man's experience verifies to his own conscience, his fallen condition, and offering a righteous basis on which a holy God can meet and be the sinner's friend, glorifying God and at the same time ransoming its recipient from natural apostacy and hate to allegiance and love to God, redeeming a ruined creation and eternally saving his own elect by the sacrifice of his own body and proving the efficacy of his blood by infallible proofs to every one that rests on it. Can this be likened to an Atheistical system of flesh-mortifying, prayerless, and hated existence, during which no propitious deity ever lends his aid and whose only hope is extinction? I feel sincere pity for the heart that can find nothing lovely or desirable in Christ and is willing to exalt every other creed to overturn his teachings.

The genesis alleged of "the hoof-footed devil with horns and a barbed tail, so continually held up to frighten children of all ages," is probably correct, at least I care not to dispute it. But the conception is so remarkably contrary to the description given in scripture of he "who transforms himself into an angel of light," that it goes for nothing. As to Typhon and Ahriman being the prototype of Satan, it is a mere untenable assertion, and it is certainly little to the purpose to raise a man of straw, and, having battered it down, to charge the scripture with its ruin.

In closing, it is worthy of remark the ever-varying phases Infidelity assumes in its vain assault on the impregnable fortress of the truth of God. It is not seventy-five years since the knowledge of Hindoo mythology began to be known in Western lands, and the translation of the "sacred books of the East" is not yet completed ere their myths are sought to lend a color to the wild vagaries and superstitions of Infidelity and Rationalism. But they can no more move the faith of the true believer than, to use a trite but appropriate simile, the waves can dissolve the rocks against which their spray impotently dashes. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever." Very truly yours. G. M. MAIR.

(From The Boston Sunday Herald)

The Sunday Laws Relics of Barbarism on the Statute Books.

A considerable class of our people, and very excellent people they are too, are grieved that sections 1 and 2 of chapter 84 of the General Statutes are so little enforced. They read thus:

Section 1. Whoever keeps open his shop, warehouse or workhouse, or does any manner of labor, business, or work, except works of necessity or charity, or is present at any dancing or public diversion, show, or entertainment, or takes part in any sport, game, or play on the Lord's day, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10 for every offense.

Sec. 2. Whoever travels on the Lord's day, except from necessity or charity, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10 for every offense.

It cannot be said that the "Lord's day" is not well regarded in Massachusetts. Strangers from other parts of the world are struck with the general suspension of business, the crowds of orderly, well-dressed people flocking to church, the stillness of city and village streets compared with other days. Yet it cannot be said that the statute above quoted is much read, or those two sections of it often enforced. Indeed, there could hardly be a stronger proof of general non-enforcement than chap. 232 of the acts of 1877, which provides that the 2d section of the law above cited shall be, "no defense to an action against a common carrier of passengers for any hurt or injury suffered by a person so traveling." Unless there was a great deal of public Sunday traveling the Legislature would not hav interfered to protect those Sabbath-breakers against the carelessness of common carriers of passengers. Indeed if every instance of work, play, or travel not called for by "necessity or charity" brought $10 into the public purse, there would be little or no need of taxes. And it is just this state of things which is so bitterly deplored by many of our most estimable fellow-citizens. They seem to think that it is because this ancient law is not strictly enforced, because people are allowed to work, play and travel on "the Lord's day," as if all days were not the Lord's, pretty much as they please—or with the slight exception of Mrs. Grundy's interference—that we are afflicted with many moral and physical evils, such as drunkenness, drought, cattle disease, canker worms, etc. But, possibly, these zealous friends of Sabbath-keeping and Sabbath-keeping laws, in their admiration of old times and old laws, do not comprehend the consequences of applying old laws to new times. In 1880, in Boston and its vicinity, we are not nomadic Arabs, nor are we any more Puritan pilgrims, living in sparse settlements, connected by cart paths, and having almost no books but the Bible and the catechism. Nor are we any longer all of one way of thinking. Steam and railroads, and lightning, and division of labor, and mammoth factories full of all sorts of machinery hav made us a conglomeration of very heterogeneous mortals, really needing a Sabbath very different from what Moses gave to the children of Israel, or what the governor and deputy of the New England company, writing to Mr. Endicott, April 17, 1629, gave to the plantation of Massachusetts bay, worded and spelled as follows:

"And to the end the Saboth may bee celebrated in a religious manr we appoint, that all that inhabite the plantacon, both for the genall and pticular imploymts, may surcease their labor every Satterday throughout the year at 3 of the clock in the afternoone, and that they spend the rest of the day in catichising and pparacin for the Saboth, as the ministers shall direct."

Catechisms are now scarce; the Westminister divines no longer teach us "in Adam's fall we sinned all," with cuts; the world is full of religious newspapers adapted to all ages; we hav employments, general and particular, not thought of in 1629—in short, Massachusetts society has grown, since the days of Gov. Craddock and Cotton Mather, to be very different without being much worse. The common people now do a good deal of thinking for themselves without the direction of the ministers. It ought not to escape the attention of the advocates of Sunday-law enforcement that our general statutes refer to the "Lord's day" and not to the Sabbath, and it should be remembered that the Lord himself was a Sabbath-breaker, who not only violated the commandment of Moses by recreating himself and his disciples on the seventh day of the week, but taught that the day was made for man, and not man for the day. Would he then claim for his own day that there should be no recreation in it? The Puritan legislators, in applying to the "Lord's day" the restrictions of the Mosaic Sabbath, appear to hav carried their reverence for Moses far beyond the Lord, the early Christian Fathers, the Catholic church, and all the Protestant reformers, except John Knox. Let us look with perfect candor, if not reverence, at the fourth commandment of the Mosaic decalogue. It is a law with a reason. It does not follow that, if the reason should prove bad, the law is bad; but it does follow that the law cannot be considered divine. The reason given for prohibiting work on the Sabbath is that God made the world in six days and rested on the seventh. If such had been the fact, it was no good reason for the commandment. But it was not the fact. None but the most ignorant now believe that the world was made in six days. Few theists believe that God needs rest or takes it. A Methodist divine has just published a book in which he concedes that the work of creation is continuous, and as ancient as Darwin would hav it. The proof of deity which comes nearest our own consciousness is the beating of our own hearts, which goes on by a force of which we are unconscious, without rest, night or day, so long as it goes at all. So far as God's example goes, everything is in favor of ceaseless work. The very wording of the command shows that Moses, and not God, was the author of it.

The reason for rest, just the same as for work and for play, lies in human nature and its surroundings, in the alternation of day and night, summer and winter—in short, in human capacities and circumstances. This is as much as to say that there is no reason for an arbitrary rigid rule, imposing rest every seventh day on all alike and at the same time. The thing is unnatural, and not in keeping with the necessities of social life, and becomes more and more so as civilization advances. As man progresses in his mastery of outside forces occupations become more and more diverse, and, consequently, the requirements as to rest more and more differ. A vast variety of arts spring up which are out of the question in the savage or nomadic state, or among the pioneers in a wilderness. Because a gypsy patriarch, who wished to instil a more elevated theology into his tribe, forbade them even to pick up sticks or kindle a fire on his holy seventh day, on pain of death, shall a civilized commonwealth shut up its zoological gardens, its libraries, its museums, and forbid travel between city and country every seventh day? Must all rest at the same time or not at all? Doubtless the hard-laboring man needs a day of rest as often as once a week on the average. But must he be obliged to take it in his harvest time, when he would prefer to work? The fields are never idle in the summer season. The crops and the weeds grow on Sunday as well as other days. But the great factories and most of the railroad trains are idle. In the meantime many people seek work and find none, even in the week days. Why can it not be managed to have people work by relays? Some resting while others work. This is to some extent the case already, and must be in spite of Sunday laws. Would it be necessarily or naturally sinful if one relay of work people should have its Sabbath on Sunday and another on Wednesday or Thursday? The law has become flexible enough to let Jews keep shop open Sunday, providing they shut up Saturday. What hinders more flexibility, if thereby the needs of humanity may be better satisfied, and the natural forces may be made to do more and the human muscles less work? Let us know the reason why, in a high state of civilization, the Sabbath, which all need, should come to all on the same identical day—i.e., on the same meridian, for in different longitudes the thing is impossible. Is not good honest labor really as holy as rest? Is it not, in fact, the holiest of worship? Is not a man, while devoting his mind and his muscles to the support, education and happiness of his family, to the upbuilding of society, worshiping God as acceptably as when kneeling in a temple or listening to a sermon, which, possibly, he does not understand? Mind, we make no assertion. But, on the supposition that the motivs and state of the affections determin the quality of the act, may we not ask the question, without implying in the slightest degree that we deny the duty or value of what may be done in the temple? In both sections of the law under consideration the prohibition of work and travel is qualified by the exception of necessity or charity, showing that the legislators were treading on delicate and doubtful ground. What judge or jury can draw the line between the rule and the exception? It will be drawn according to creed. In the case of Flagg against the town of Millbury, in 1848, Judge Wilde held that "necessity" meant "the moral fitness or propriety of the work and labor done, under the circumstances, of any particular case." He did not say who should judge of the "moral fitness." The town of Millbury, being responsible for damage that might ensue from a dangerous defect in its highway of more than 24 hours' standing, was sued by Mr. Flagg for an injury which occurred to him on Monday. It set up as a defense that it could not hav mended the road without working on Sunday, which was contrary to law, and, excluding Sunday, the defect was not of 24 hours' standing. Judge Wilde ruled that mending the highway was a work of necessity, and Sunday could not be excluded. That is, there was a "moral fitness" in making the road safe. This doctrine of "moral fitness" being once admitted, almost everything which is fit to be done on any other day is fit to be done on Sunday. Immoral things are not fit to be done on any day, and the Herald will be the last to complain of those parts of the Sunday laws which discourage them on Sunday. When no injury is done to person or property, by work or play, there seem no parties left to be injured except Time and Space. As to Time, he is armed with a scythe and takes his own revenge. As to Space, what with steamboats, rail cars, Goddard buggies, telegraphs, telephones, bycycles and balloons, he is getting used to it. Travelling, distributing useful knowledge, making the most of the natural resources which promote the comfort of mankind, are not immoral; they are necessities of civilization. Stopping railroad trains, shutting up picture galleries, discouraging the access of people to healthful resorts and musical concerts on Sunday, frowning on innocent recreation because in older and gloomier times the day was exclusively devoted to church-going, is simply to bring religion into disrepute and increase the throng which will seek vicious indulgences.

"No God, No Hope."

ISSUE TAKEN WITH THE YALE COLLEGE BACCALAUREATE.

To The Editor of the Herald: I am delighted to see how often the strongest utterances of the pulpit are reported in your columns. The instance that has most interested me is the baccalaureate sermon of President Porter of Yale, in your issue of the 28th; partly because, for a year or two, I rang the bell in that college to call the students to morning prayers, and partly because it so frankly calls attention to the exact point of difference between the Christian pulpit and a large class of people who are pretty widely denounced by the clergy as "Atheists" or "Agnostics." These are they who do not believe in the personality of God.

President Porter makes the adjectiv "personal" essential to his doctrin. It is every man who does not believe in a personal governor of the universe, who is without hope, and, what is worse—far worse—feels his conscience and life released from present obligation! Now, it is bad enough to be without hope, but that is a personal, individual concern. I am sure I do not believe in a personal God, yet I am equally sure that my hope is as strong and happy as when I supposed I did, and was wasting a good deal of time shivering at their cold college prayers. Of course, this proves nothing. It is of no consequence to anybody but myself whether I hope or not. But it is of consequence to others whether my conscience is released from present obligations.

In behalf of other Atheists and Agnostics, as well as myself, I demand of President Porter proof of this. It does not become a minister of God, much less the president of a college, to bring such a charge against his fellow-mortals without proof. He assumes a personal God, and a priori, reasons that such God will strengthen conscience. Men don't hav to go to college to know that it is too late in the day for this sort of logic. The proof of puddings has at last come to be in the eating. Whether Atheists and Agnostics are less obedient to present obligations than Christian theists, or any other believers in a personal God, has got to be determined by statistics, and not by pulpit assertion.

As reported, the president says: "The theory which denies that God is a power very naturally and logically denies that man is a person." I presume this is a misprint, and that the president used the word person instead of power. I hav never met an Atheist or Agnostic who denied that there was a power in the universe which might be called God. But multitudes who acknowledge the power deny that it is a person. The president would hav us believe that they thus logically deny their own personality! Well, will Dr. Porter vouchsafe to tell us what personality really is? Can a person hav any proof of his own personality save his consciousness? Can he prove personality outside of him except by analogy? Is there any analogy between the finite and the infinit?

President Porter preaches confidently and loftily to his young graduates as if Christian theism offered a solution of the mystery of the universe and of human life. Oh, if this were only so! On the contrary, the solution is infinitly more bewildering than the naked problem. Cut off the profit and worship which comes to a certain class of men by taking charge of this scheme of theological salvation, and where would the solution go? Neither the human intellect nor the human sense of justice supports it. It is a libel on the stars. It daubs the heavens with the mean tyranny and angry passions of savage monarchs. It libels human nature, gets up a universal panic of selfishness—sauve qui peut; let us get up to God and enjoy with him the punishment of the wicked for ever and ever! Theological hope! Perhaps the less of it the better.

As soon as a personal God is out of the way, a noble human soul, full of reverence for the laws of order and harmony that grow out of the uncreated verities, and full of affection for his own like, and all life, inversely as the square of the distance, goes to work according to his strength to realize the best possibilities. He don't wait lazily for God. He doesn't waste his love on a being too busy with the general to care for the particular. If God is nothing but the totality of whatever is, he will make the most and best of his part in God. If God turns out to be a person outside of the universe, who made it and all the persons in it out of nothing, he will in that case be as ready to meet him in another world as if he had spent his time cultivating faith and hope in this.

There is one practical question which I wish President Porter would answer, and it seems to me of far greater importance than whether there is a personal God or not: What is to become of society in this world if the million-dollar churches of the rich are to be untaxed, and the poor are to be left to multiply in cellars beyond the possibility of having sound minds in sound bodies? ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Boston, Mass., June 28, 1880.

W. F. JAMIESON is delivering a course of lectures in Mason, Michigan. He will speak in Hastings, Michigan, Sunday, July 18th, twice; Thursday, July 22d; Sunday, July 25th, two lectures. He has accepted an invitation to attend the Freethinkers' Convention, Hornellsville, N. Y., September 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th. Will accept calls for the Sundays of August. Address 172 and 174 Clark street, Chicago.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1880.

Politics for Liberals.

When two weeks ago we ventured to giv our views upon the duties of Liberals in the coming election campaign, we were not unaware that we evinced not a little temerity in disturbing the preferences and prejudices of a large number of our readers. That we pretty effectually succeeded in stirring up a good-sized hornet's nest the number of letters that hav since poured in upon us on all sides of this political question leave but little room for doubt. A portion of these letters and those representing the different phases of the Liberal political element are given elsewhere in this issue. If some are very zealous, and if some almost seem lacking in courtesy and respect, it can hardly be thought strange of. Some seem to think we are committing hari-kari, and others that we hav gone daft, or lost the little good sense we had originally. It may be so and it may not.

We are not so vain as to think we ought to, or that we can, influence the Liberals of this country as to which party they should attach themselvs to. Neither is it designed that THE TRUTH SEEKER shall become a political paper, in the ordinary sense of the term. We do not even think our readers should take our views as a cue they must seize and follow in any particular line of thought. We simply believe in freely stating our views and telling what we think on questions of religion, theology, Materialism, Spiritualism, philosophy, education, socialism, finance, labor, and the same with politics, and that our readers should only accept such as appears reasonable to them and no further. We do not think our views are any better or sounder than those of hundreds and thousands of others in the Liberal ranks, and we certainly consider others just as much entitled to follow their own convictions as we are to follow ours. We were presumptuous enough to start a Liberal paper, and since that time we hav tried to giv others an opportunity to express their sentiments on almost all subjects, and we hav endeavored to freely express our own. This we shall continue to do so long as we retain charge of this growing sheet.

It is not probable that the Liberals of this country will ever fully agree in any great line of thought, and less perhaps of all others in politics. We are a set of independent thinkers, who believe in enjoying freedom of thought, and we are not very apt to modulate our thoughts and opinions at the dictation of any, even though they assume to be leaders or authorities. This is right. While American Liberals should be reasonable enough to accept the truth on any subject, when pointed out to them, they should always maintain that honesty and independence of thought which must ever characterize the true Liberal. The people of this land constituting the churches in it very generally look upon their clergymen as guides and leaders bearing a commission from the white throne above the clouds, and think they hav the authority to declare not only the will of heaven but also what is best and true in all the duties and aspects of life. It is no so with Liberals. They hav no popes, bishops, or priests. Each man among them is his own priest, each man forms his own ideas of God, devil, heaven, hell, and the multitudinous subjects that are brought before his observation. Let this ever be so. While we are free, candid, and true enough to hear and duly weigh what others hav to present us, let us maintain our freedom, our individuality, and our right to decide for ourselvs in all things.

It may or may not be desirable for American Liberals to all hav the same ideas of God and the origin of the world we liv in; it may or may not be desirable for them to hav a uniform belief as to whether the present state of existence is a rudimental and primary state or condition, or whether it is the ultimate or final. It may or may not be desirable that we should hold uniform opinions on finance, tariffs, civil service reform, temperance, and all other subjects which agitate our country; but it is hardly likely that they will ever think just alike on any subject, and more especially on political questions. It is the nature of Liberalism to be disintegrated and divergent, and perhaps it is right that it is so. There must ever be an honest diversity of opinion, and every individual has, rights which he should not surrender. But on the other hand it may be said that truth is a unity, and the nearer we approach the truth, the nearer we will become alike in our conclusions and views.

It is by no means probable that the Liberals will agree on either of the presidential candidates now in the field. Old party prejudices will sway many, while a particular branch of the political question will attract the interest of some, and another branch will attract another class. That all will come to an agreement as to which is the most important question of all can hardly be hoped for; but let us speak freely and listen patiently, and arrive at the truth as nearly as possible.

There is no doubt the majority of Liberals hav been Republicans and hav served faithfully in that party. This has been our own experience. We hav been an ardent Republican since the nomination of Fremont, voting for every candidate that the party named for general support. We were ardent in party fealty, and felt great interest in seeing it victorious. We sometimes took activ interest in political campaigns, and spent time and money to secure the election of our candidates. This was particularly the case in the election of Lincoln. We believed the salvation of our country depended upon his election, and we worked for it as earnestly as we ever worked for our own daily bread.

There is little question now but what a very considerable portion of the Liberals of the country favor the Greenback-Labor-Reform party. They see the excesses and wrongs that hav grown up in our land by the rule of the money power, and they honestly think the masses of workingmen are oppressed and ground into the dust by the money tyrants of the land. We do not profess to understand the subject of finance, but our sympathies are with this class of Liberals. We earnestly desire the greatest good for the greatest number, and that can never be the case while a small number of men hold all the land, all the money, and all the wealth of the country. The more these forms of wealth are generally diffused among the whole people, according to natural rights and the exertion of individuals, the better it will be for the entire country.

While there are many questions in what is called politics that are of great importance to our welfare and prosperity, it will readily be admitted that they vary in importance and that all are not of the same consequence. Equal taxation, reliable and uniform money, honest officers, judicious expenditure of public funds, civil service reform, tariffs, the salaries of public officers, the disposition of the public lands, governmental aid to public works, the size and employment of the army and navy—these and many other questions are of great importance and demand our attention and co-operation. But however great all these subjects may be, either singly or in the aggregate, there is one subject, one right, of more importance to every American citizen, and especially to Liberals, than all of these other questions put together, and that is, the freedom of thought, the freedom of expression, and freedom of action. Of what worth are judicious tariffs, the conduct of our foreign ministers, the distribution of public lands, the existence or non-existence of national banks, hard or soft money, if we are deprived of free thought, free speech, a free press, and free mails?

These are the fundamental principles upon which our government was founded, and these are the glorious principles which hav made us great as a young nation. Without LIBERTY the American nation is a sham and a fraud. Right here is the great issue which should not fail to attract the earnest attention of every lover of liberty, especially of every Liberal in the country. The party in power, at the behest of the ecclesiastical and sectarian forces of the land, has given a blow to the most sacred principles of liberty. Laws hav been enacted which hav trampled upon the dearest rights and the most sacred privileges possessed by the American people. Eight years ago a Republican Congress enacted a statute which, if carried out, virtually destroys the dearest liberties of the people and sets up in every post-office in the land a censorship over the literature of the country—a system of espionage utterly destructiv to American liberty, and far more suited to autocratic and despotic Russia than to free and enlightened Columbia. There can be no liberty worth having when thought cannot be freely expressed, when the press is not free, and when the mails are subject to the search and the espionage of officious Paul Prys and contemptible busy-bodies. This we hav seen exist in this so-called free country, and right here in the metropolis of the nation. Under this despotic, anti-American, and unconstitutional legislation we hav seen honest, loyal citizens torn from their families and friends, their homes and business, and thrown into loathsome prisons with the vilest felons, and disgraced for life, and virtually for uttering their honest convictions, publishing them, and sending them by mail over the land. We hav seen worthy physicians, simply for transmitting by mail and in sealed envelopes such information as every physician in the land is entitled to giv his patients, seized as though they were robbers and murderers, dragged before the courts of the nation, and convicted, fined, and imprisoned, simply for imparting such information as the people need and are justly entitled to. We hav seen publishers and booksellers, who happened to disagree with the sectarian classes in religious opinions, arrested and imprisoned like the worst of criminals because they exercised the right of American citizens and expressed their honest convictions and made a legitimate use of the public mail.

Yes, this has been the work of the Republican party. As we hav said on former occasions we will repeat again, at the instance of the Young Men's Christian Association—the Jesuits of Protestantism—a Republican sneak and procurer went to a Republican Congress and procured the passage of the statute referred to, under which these enormities hav been perpetrated. A Republican senator introduced it into the Senate and was its champion. It was enacted by Republican votes, and was signed by a Republican president. It has been executed by Republican courts, marshals, attorneys, and judges, and by this Republican course of persecution many worthy people hav been robbed of their dearest rights, their property, their reputation, the happiness of their families, their peace of mind, and they hav been cast into prison, as dogs are taken to the pound for execution.

Is this a small matter? Is it an affair of slight consequence that men are robbed of property and character, and incarcerated within prison walls for being honest with themselvs and to the world? Are not the Liberals of the entire land deeply interested in this thing? Are there no grounds for alarm when this same Republican sneak, pimp, and agent for the sectarian Society for the Suppression of Vice, who procured the passage of the law, together with the president of the society, announced in one of the annual society meetings in this city that the publications of Freethinkers and Freelovers were in a fair way to soon be stamped out? Is it of no consequence that this announcement and threat were published in the annual report of that oppressiv society? Is it a matter of little consequence that the same Republican sneak, tempter, and informer, in another of his society's meetings, in Rochester, declared that Infidel tracts and Infidel publications were soon to be entirely suppressed? Is it a matter that should create no alarm when this same Republican sneak, spy, and persecutor, at another of his society meetings in Boston, made the significant announcement that as soon as Heywood and Bennett were disposed of the Investigator and Banner of Light would be taken in hand? Is it a trivial matter that this same man, who under the power of the statute he caused to be enacted sent many to prison, in the cities of Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis, before his meetings of sympathizers, made statements similar to those already noted? Is it nothing that this man was able to manipulate the first national courts to send editors to prison and impose fines upon them really because they were Infidel editors and publishers and would write and publish plainly just what they believed to be true? Possibly a large proportion of the Liberals of the United States may decide that these are very small matters, and that the party which has virtually done all this has merited their continued support, and that the party whose Executiv had persistently refused to listen to the appeal of two hundred thousand Liberals and others asking for the release of the man who had been unjustly deprived of his liberties and his rights deserves encouragement, but we do not believe it. A principle is here involved of far greater consequence to the Liberals and liberty-loving men of America than greenbacks, taxes, or any other question. If our liberties are gone, all is gone. And that it was the intention of the power that began to bear down upon the Liberals of the country to go through and make clean work of all, stopping one publication after another, throwing into prison one publisher after another and one editor after another, until all were suppressed or ruined, there is no room for doubt. This was too often declared by the man who, by the help of the Republican party, has done all this vile work, for any sane man to disregard it. If justice ever required anything in this world it is that the man and the party which hav attempted this great iniquity, and who hav in fact carried out much of it, should hav the seal of condemnation placed upon them by every voter who truly loves liberty and justice. To hold back in doing this appears to us to be the conduct of a craven, a menial, a slave. A man who thinks more of a rotten, corrupt party of thieves than of the grand principles of liberty is unworthy to be considered a lover of justice, a true, honest, independent Liberal.

We admit there are many important questions now before the people of the United States, but the greatest of al is the preservation of the great principles of free speech, a free press, and free mails. With either of these fettered or destroyed, freedom is gone, the guarantees of the founders of the Constitution are taken away from us, and we are at the mercy of the dominant ecclesiastical power. The Liberals of the country should be able to see this as it exists, and in view of the great wrongs which the ruling party has been guilty of, the Liberals of the United States should resolv to do all in their power to displace the Republican party, which has struck heavier blows against the liberties of the people than were ever struck before in this land.

When in the year 1147 Peter Waldo, a nativ of Lyons, in France, and a worthy citizen, saw fit to exercise the right of openly expressing his disapproval of the unjust and corrupt power of the church, and he had the temerity to assert his disagreement with the salient faults of popery, he simply exercised the natural rights of man, the rights which every lover of liberty and justice in the world should be ready to yield up his life's blood to defend. But because he dared to do this, and to express his opinion that holy oil was not to be mingled in baptism; that prayers said over inanimate things were superstitious; that flesh of animals might with propriety be eaten in Lent; that the clergy might be permitted to marry; that auricular confession was not necessary; that confirmation is not a sacrament; that obedience to a corrupt pope was not required; that it was not right for one set of the clergy to be placed above the rest; that real worth should establish their superiority; that the worship of images is absurd and idolatrous; that the pretense that miracles had been performed by the church was false; that fornication and public brothels should be condemned; that purgatory is without proof; that dead people, called saints, should not be prayed to; that extreme unction is not a sacrament; that masses, indulgences, and prayers are of no service to the dead, and that the Lord's Prayer ought to be the rule of all prayers; the power of the church was brought down upon his defenseless head, and upon all those who dared to adopt his views. He was compelled to seek refuge in the mountains of Dauphiny. The persecution of the ecclesiastical power against this man's followers became most bloody, and was kept up for hundreds of years. Thousands were deprived of their homes, their property, and their lives. They fled to the mountains for safety, hiding in caverns and fastnesses. Great numbers were thrown from precipices and dashed to pieces, and fagots were piled up at the mouths of caverns, and four hundred innocent babes smothered in the arms of their mothers—parents and children sharing the same fate. Four thousand of these people were thus put to death in one foray of the church against them.

The same intolerance exists against unbelievers today. The Republican party has greatly aided this spirit of oppression, by both the enactment and execution of unjust and unconstitutional statutes. Every Liberal in the country will be derelict in his duty who does not do all he can—for this very perfidy to freedom—to remove this Republican party from power. We may be thought to hav personal feeling in the matter, and to be more stirred up than the nature of the case renders necessary; but we beg to differ from those who think so. We think we hav had a better opportunity to feel this power of intolerance and oppression than almost any other person in the land. For a year we had a daily and hourly realization of the great wrong inflicted upon us by the ecclesiastical party, with the co-operation of the Republicans. Yes, we hav thought this question over and over again, and hav come to a fixed determination. Others may cast their vote this way or that, as to them seems most desirable, but as for us and our house, we will cast our vote with the express view of defeating the Republican party, and will go for the party which stands the best chance of beating it. When shut up by Republican laws and courts, month after month, with the most degraded felons, for simply being honest to our convictions, we swore in our soul, if we hav a soul, that we would never again belong to, nor co-operate with, the party to which Anthony Comstock, Judge Benedict, District Attorney Woodford, and Rutherford B. Hayes belong. And we will cast our vote and influence for the man and party most able to defeat it. We would almost support the devil—provided always that there is a devil—if that was the only course we could adopt to defeat the false, time-serving, church-pandering, thieving, centralizing, oppressiv Republican party. Anything for a change! We prefer for a time even a worse party to this ally and handmaid of the church, if we cannot otherwise hav a change.

But we only speak and act for ourselvs. Others will of course act for themselvs. Those who think the Republican party all right, honest, and faithful will naturally continue to vote with it; those who think Comstock and Benedict ought to be sustained will also continue to vote for the party that gave them life and still retains them in office. But we wish it expressly understood that we shall not do it. We hope to see the vile party prostrated in the dust; and when it loses its power and another party succeeds it, we believe a vaster amount of stealings, embezzlings, and arrant dishonesty will be brought to light than has ever before been known in this country. The Republican party in its early days did a good work and maintained the cause of liberty for all; but for the last ten years it has degenerated into a party of rings, back-pay grabbers. thieves, salary-increasers, swindlers, panderers to the church, monopolists, and robbers. The very fact that twenty-eight Republican senators voted in favor of putting the Hebrew God in our Constitution, and sixteen Democratic senators voted against it, and thereby defeated the measure by two votes—it falling short that much of a two-thirds vote—should be enough to show where the two parties stand with reference to religious questions. With God legally placed in the Constitution, with every man tabooed who does not acknowledge faith in the "Father and Son," our liberties are gone. Still there are some Liberals who insist that we ought to continue to vote with the Republican party. Such evidently fail to see the true situation,

As regards the two men, Generals Hancock and Garfield, in personal character the former certainly suffers nothing by comparison. Hancock was a true soldier; his measures were eminently wise and law-abiding, and in all situations he has proved himself a true and honorable man. As regards the two parties, there is perhaps not very much difference in their honesty and trustworthiness. Both will doubtless do all the stealing they can without being detected. Some bear heavily on the Democratic party because a portion of them were Copperheads in the war. That, however, is now a dead issue. The Rebellion was long ago wiped out. Slavery has been abolished, Southerners hav accepted the situation, and there is no use in always waving the bloody shirt and in trying to arouse sympathy for stealing and robbing in that way. The Democrats are obeying the laws as strictly as Republicans, and they are as good citizens. The states where Democrats are in power are as well governed as those where Republicans hav rule. There is no doubt that the Democrats are as competent to run the general government as the Republicans are. The latter party has been in power about a quarter of a century, and it is certainly time to hav a change. The good of the country demands it, even if the Democrats prove no better than the Republicans hav been. If Hancock is our next President—and it now looks very much as though he would be—Anthony Comstock will pretty surely be removed from the office of special agent in the post-office department; but if Garfield is elected he will be retained. This much Garfield will do in deference to the church, of which he is a pious member. Hancock is not much troubled with religion, and will not feel under obligation to retain in office any of the pimps of his predecessors. Every Liberal, then, who votes for Garfield will vote for Comstock and Benedict and God in the Constiiution. Every one who votes for Hancock will giv his vote in favor of religious freedom, in favor of free speech, a free press, and free mails. Those knowing these facts, and still wishing to vote for Garfield, Comstock, Benedict, and Colgate, hav, as we said, a perfect right to do so; but there are thousands who will not. There are thousands who, by the exercise of their suffrages, will stamp their deep indignation upon the sectarian obsequiousness to church dictation manifested by the Republican party. Four months more will show what the people decide upon, and we confidently believe it will he in favor of a new set of public officers.

As we said in a former article, our sympathies are with the Greenbackers, but they can accomplish nothing by running a separate ticket. If we had money to bet we would put it up that Gen. Weaver will not get a single electoral vote. Every vote cast for him will be half a vote for Garfield, Comstock, & Co., and for keeping thieves and persecutors in power four years more. Giv us a change, say we, whatever it may be. Giv us a change. The future, under a new party, can be no worse than it has been under the old. GIV US A CHANGE; by all means, GIV US A CHANGE.

We hav one or two friends holding subordinate positions under the present administration. So far as they are concerned we would, of course, like to see them retain their situations, but that trivial consideration cannot induce us to favor keeping in power another four years the thieves, oppressors, time-servers, and unjust rulers that hav sufficiently cursed and disgraced the country in the years of the past. O, giv us a new deal; LET US HAV A CHANGE. LET US HAV ANOTHER PARTY IN POWER.

American and English Politics.

In England there has uniformly been two great parties dividing the country, and those hav been called Whig and Tory, or Liberals and Conservativs, as the case may be. The reforms that hav been inaugurated and consummated in that country hav been effected in one of these parties. Many valuable reforms hav been so accomplished.

Americans hav made the great mistake of having several parties at the same time, and each party bringing out candidates for President and Vice-president. Thus we hav not only Republican and Democratic parties, but Greenbackers, Labor Reformers, temperance reformers, etc. We hav seen Peter Cooper, George Francis Train, and Victoria Woodhull running for president, and a more ridiculous picture could hardly be presented These third and fourth candidates stand no more show of being elected than they do of being struck by lightning, and not half so much. Generals Weaver and Dow stand no earthly show of being elected, nor even of obtaining an electoral vote. Every vote given them is thrown away, and may really help to elect the wrong man. The English, as observed, manage their affairs differently. Charles Bradlaugh, for instance, is at the head of the Secularists, Republicans, and Freethinkers. But he does not hav a party of his own; he allies himself with the Liberals, at whose head stands Gladstone, and the reforms he hopes to work out will be effected within that party. In this respect we think he is wise. He can accomplish a hundred times more by working in the Gladstone and Bright party than he could by getting up a diminutiv party of his own, which could possibly hav no weight or consideration. Much the same philosophy would work beneficially in this country, The Greenbackers, for instance, instead of having a national party of their own, could doubtless effect much more by becoming a large integer in one of the two great parties than by running separate candidates who hav no chance of being elected. The same remarks will apply with equal force to the temperance party and to the Liberals of the country. None of them by themselvs can hope to accomplish much. Neither of them need to ally themselvs permanently with either party, but choose between them from time to time as issues arise. This system operated well in England, and probably would work well here. At the present time it seems advisable for the Liberals of the United States to shake loose from the corrupt Republican party, and try new alliances. The Democratic platform has an excellent plank in it, which covers nearly all that Liberals contend for. Let us help them to overcome their enemies, and then hold them to a strict observance of the pledges they now make. If they prove recreant to them, let us hold ourselvs free to co-operate with any party which will promise to do what is right, and will fulfil its promises.

In connection may be mentioned the fact that a correspondent of the Graphic of this city recently had an interview with Charles Bradlaugh in London, who expressed confidence that a most important land reform would soon be inaugurated in Parliament which would ultimately destroy the practice of primogeniture and entail in land, and also that a republic would be established in that country at an early day. He intends to agitate these questions until Parliament will be forced to enact them. He expects to produce these momentous results by working in and with the party of progress now in power.

The Great Faster.

Dr. Henry S. Tanner, of Minneapolis, is now well along on his third week without food and with very little water. We called upon him when he had been sixteen days without eating. He had fallen off twenty-four pounds in weight, and looked rather thin and haggard. It is a most remarkable case, involving such self-denial and self-control as hav rarely been exhibited. He still feels confident he will be able to complete the forty days without food. There is probably not one man in 500,000 that would be able to go without food to the extent Dr. Tanner has done, when a plenty of every eatable is almost within reach. He is closely watched day and night, and there are no grounds for suspicion that he is not strictly honest in his representations.

Volume II. of The Gods and Religions

Is now printed and in the hands of the binders. In a very few days it will be ready to be forwarded to those who hav ordered it. No delay will be made in sending it to all parts of the country. It contains over a hundred pages more than Volume I., and is the more interesting book of the two. Volume I. treats specially on the gods, while Volume II. treats the religions. As a frontispiece to Volume II. is a steel-plate engraving of the author in the prison garb in which he wrote it. Those who hav had Vol. I. and hav not ordered Vol. II. will do well to order it at once. Those who hav ordered neither will not do just the right thing till their order is sent in. It is the cheapest work ever published in America, and much of it is matter not heretofore published from the Liberal press. It contains more information about the gods and religions of the world than was ever given in one work before. Every Liberal in the country ought to hav a copy of it, and it is hoped but few will rest easy till they possess it. It will still be sent—the two large volumes—at $5.00 in cloth, $7.00 in leather, red edges, and $8 00 in Morocco and gilt edges.

Donations for the Trip to Brussels.

Since the last report of donations the following hav been received:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| A. Bennett Hough | $1.00 | James Pringle, | $2.00 |
| Joseph Frankowski | .50 | John Clem | 1.00 |
| S. D. Green | .50 | G. Helgen, | .50 |
| Jno. Harvery | .50 | J. C. Sander | .50 |
| Peter Benson | .50 | G. Stoltz | .50 |
| Henry Felber | 2.00 | Chas Shulte | .50 |
| A. Van Deusen | 25.00 | J. Martin | .50 |
| Liberal League No. 190 | 3 00 | A Friend | .50 |
| A Spiritualist | 1.00 | F. Bruliter | .50 |
| C. Garwood | 1.00 | P. Benzer | .50 |
| Portia Gage | 2 00 | John Geggerle | .50 |
| J. Abramson | 1 00 | D. McMillen | .50 |
| A. Semmendinger | 1 00 | W. Butterfield | .50 |
| E. C. Porter | 1 00 | A. Smith | .50 |
| C. W. Porter | 1 00 | W. H. Thorpe | 1.00 |
| N. S. Johnson | 1 00 | M. Thorpe | 1 00 |
| Smith Mills | 1 00 | Sara Van Sickle | .75 |
| J. W. Noyes | 1.00 | Liberal League No. 195 | 3.00 |
| R. P. Harrington | 1 00 | Leroy Dutton | 5 00 |
| E. Livezey | 1 00 | Miss E. M. Sawyer | 1 00 |
| Geo. Thorn | 1 00 | D. E. Pendleton | 1.00 |
| John Cyphert | 2.00 | James Bridger | .60 |
| Wm. Smith | 5 00 | Benj. Sanders | 1.00 |
| C. H. Latham | .50 | Mrs. Maggie E Clark | 1.00 |
| A. Pope | .50 | St. Johns, Ill., League, | 5 00 |
| L R. Webb | 1 00 | John Cosgrove | 2 00 |
| Moses Quinby | 1 00 | Dennis Jacob | 1 00 |
| E. G. Wallace | 1.00 | A. N. Albright | 2.00 |
| Mrs. Louisa Post | 1.75 | | |

Many thanks to the above kind friends who hav thus generously contributed toward the expenses which a trip to Europe will necessitate. We are sorry to say, however, that with the generosity that has thus been shown not more than one-half enough has been contributed to carry one delegate over and back again, which will prove a small allowance for two. In consequence the trip is for the present somewhat held in abeyance. It is likely one will go, and possibly two, but we will not start before the 21st. Mr. Rawson has some work to finish which will occupy him till that time. If there are others who feel like alding will they be kind enough to remit at once? If not used it will be returned, or used as directed.

[From Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.]

Report of the Treasurer of the Bennett Reception Fund.

| | Dr. | Cr. |
|---|---|---|
| Total amount of contributions to fund received, | | $297.27 |
| The disbursements of the fund were as follows: | | |
| Rent of Chickering Hall | $80.00 | |
| Advertising in city papers as per receipts on file | 90 00 | |
| Printing 30,000 circulars | 55.42 | |
| Distributing the same | 28 00 | |
| Printing posters | 3 00 | |
| Music | 19.00 | |
| Traveling expenses of speakers from a distance | 19 75 | |
| Stationery, postage, etc | 2.10 | |
| | 297.27 | |

Respectfully submitted. H. B. BROWN, Treas.

Mrs. Slenker's Efforts Appreciated.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "Sexual Intemperance," by E. D. Slenker, savors of life; it is the "salt of the earth." The premises she takes are primary and fundamental to purity, health, and development of body and soul.

The Christians hav a savior, a mediator, a propitiator, in the person of Jesus, and in their reliance on his atoning blood they hav waxed worse. Instead of being saved from Adam's fall, the church licenses the repetition of it, with one big washing-day to settle the account.

Counting the Shakers as among the "glimmering stars," she puts one very pertinent question—"And of them all, how many liv pure from a real knowledge of the laws of hygiene?"

How many of the assumed Christian priesthood understand what Jesus meant by the "temple" which he forbad them to "defile?" And what do they say and do about it? Do they not teach soul salvation and a remote heaven, locating the defiled temple and "heaven within" on earth?

The bodily and earthly condition should so harmonize as to make a primary heaven instead of a "vain world of sin."

Elmina is one of the voices crying in the wilderness of sin—physical sin. Such voices are more potent to-day than the record or echo of St. John's.

Can any man
By any plan
Save us from just desert?
The laws of God
Hav each a rod—
Who breaks them must get hurt.

Go on, Elmina! the world has need of such saviors. Save the bodies now by a knowledge of physiological law and rational scientific truth. If Christians allow Infidels the vanguard in staying physical abominations, judged by the standard of works, who is to blame? For every body saved there is a soul salvation. ELIJAH MYRICK.

A Few Words for Mrs. Slenker.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mrs. Slenker expressed my sentiments when she said in The Truth Seeker of June 19th, in replying to one of my letters, that she hopes "all Liberals will try to be liberal, broad, and charitable. We are seeking for truth, and it is only by exchanging thoughts and experiences fairly that real truth and fact will be won. I for my part would rather not gain a victory over one who thought differently from myself if by winning it I was leading any inquirer away from truth and into the swamps, bogs, and fens of error. I want truth, even though it conflicts with all I hold dear, precious, and holy." No pen ever wrote a grander sentiment. It is worthy of a Confucius, a Socrates, a Humboldt, or a Franklin. "I am right; you are wrong," has always been the thunder of bigotry and superstition; but "I may be wrong; you may be right; come, let us reason together," has always been the herald of truth and progression. Mrs. Slenker says she cannot understand how I can reconcile all that seems so improbable and wonderful with the known laws of nature. To me the truths of Spiritualism do not seem improbable, nor do they fail to harmonize with the known laws of natnre. To those who believe that death ends all, spirit manifestations and communion must indeed seem improbable and wonderful. To me the fact that invisible organized intelligences are able to manifest and prove their existence is no more wonderful or improbable than that all intelligence, force, and life are invisible and continually manifesting their presence by the laws of nature, in and through the material visible universe about us. If my arm or brain is moved or excited it certainly is done in harmony with natural law; and admitting the law of psychology to be true, that mind can control mind as well as matter, I do not see that it is so very improbable or wonderful that a superior mind can control an infirm one, or that it makes much difference whose it is. We reject miracles and unnatural wonders, after having proved them such, as relentlessly as Materialists of the "death ends all" school. It would be well to remember that one Spiritualist is not the measure of all other Spiritualists any more than one Materialist is the measure of all others. That would be very unjust indeed. Some believe everything, however improbable, while others sift to the bottom for every fact they find. It would be as unjust to charge us all with having the same credulity as it would be to charge the whole race with having large amativness because Aaron Burr had it so developed. But it is not wise to attempt to abridge or correct their excessiv credulity by calling them 'frauds or incompetents. The way to do it is to giv them facts and proofs which are incontestable.

Mrs. Slenker asks how all the millions, billions, and quintillions of human beings that hav lived and died employ and enjoy themselvs on this earth. Now I really do not think it necessary to solve this problem. If I must do so to prove that there are no improbabilities or unnatural wonders in Spiritualism, then it must remain guilty as charged, for I cannot do it. I don't think I could if I were to write five thousand years, with all the resources of the spirit world at my command. If I should be asked to weigh all the invisible and imponderable matter, or to fix the limits or boundaries of the magnetic sphere which surrounds and belongs to this earth I could not do it; nor can I traverse space and fix its boundaries. There are some questions even Spiritualists cannot answer.

Again, she asks: "Why do we not find them more advanced in knowledge of all kinds? If one man could liv here right straight on for five thousand years, in full strength of body and mind, and grow, progress, develop, and learn all the time, just think what a mass of information he would possess. But do any of the supposed spirits ever manifest anything of this superiority to their human living companions?" Now, I hav to smile just a little when I read that question. I hav met it so often; it seems to hav stamped on it the words "Or bearer," for it passes current everywhere among Materialists of the "death ends all" school. If Mrs. Slenker were a little more of a Spiritualist than she is, she would hav found the answer, for to my mind it is as simple as the a, b, c of a child's primer. The object of Spiritualism is not to giv spirits a chance to display their knowledge and accomplishments. It is to prove a future existence, to admonish us to build for ourselves a grand and noble manhood. The great burden of their instructions is, Be true, be honest, do right, cultivate a love for the good and beautiful, be charitable, acquire knowledge and wisdom, and listen to the silent voices which speak from within and without. Spirits tell us we shall receive what we earn, that we must not wait, Micawber-like, for something to turn up. It is a mistaken idea that spirits from the wisdom sphere are going to relieve us of all care and responsibility; that they are going to stuff and gorge us with knowledge "to order." That would be robbing us of our individuality, and of the blessed consciousness that we ourselvs hav honestly earned what we possess. When we hav earned a prize it is ours by every principle of right and justice, and cannot be withheld. How foolish to giv a child five years old mathematics, astronomy, geology, Latin, or Greek. That would be an exhibition of conceit which I at least choose not to be guilty of, but it would be quite as reasonable as for spirits who hav five thousand years of accumulated knowledge to dose us puny infants with what they hav acquired.

Spirits do sometimes strive to giv us through these untutored organisms what they hav learned away up in the wisdom spheres of spirit life, but I always regard such with grave suspicion, for, in my judgment, the proper way is to wait till we get there, and then we can learn for ourselvs what they know. As I see it, many of our very best mediums' organisms and time are monopolized by conceited spirits, who glory in telling what they are, what they hav done, and hav learned in spirit life. Because mistakes are made on the other side is no reason why Spiritualism is not true. People I hope will some time learn that the proper way to try Spiritualism is by its merits and success, and not by its errors and failures. Perhaps the fact that so many of our great mediums are made to discourse on the knowledge of the higher spheres is that this is deemed as good a way as any to cure us of going over into the next world for that which we can get only when we get there, and only by honestly earning it for ourselvs. Let us not eat the meals of to-morrow till to-morrow comes. I believe in the motto, "One world at a time." Let us learn how to make the most of this world, for opportunities are passing which will never be ours again to enjoy. If our lives here hav been misspent, if we hav not accomplished what we ought, we shall find on entering spirit life that "the summer is past, the harvest ended," and our garners are empty. Those men and women liv the noblest and most useful lives who attend most carefully to the little things, the duties and details of every-day life.

A few days ago a prominent Spiritualist wrote me: "You are engaged in the same fight I was twenty years ago. Now I am in harmony with the leaders of Spiritualism. I am engaged in the advanced work." Poor fellow; I pity him! He has learned all he can here. He is more than ripe. His granaries are all full. He livs in two worlds—his feet in this, his hands and brain in the next.

Again I say the object of Spiritualism is not to giv spirits or mortals an opportunity to show how much they know; and those who require spirits to display knowledge which it has taken five thousand years to accumulate I hope may be gratified, but I doubt very much whether a spirit can be found who will do so foolish a thing. If Edward Gibbon, with all the resources of the spirit world at his command, should write and giv to the world a history of the prehistoric ages, and a few trifling errors should creep in, as is not at all improbable under the circumstances, those errors would more than outweigh all its merits, and the book consequently be deemed worthless. "All is not gold that glitters," and the same rule may very aptly apply to wisdom. If I find any bigotry or prejudice mixed with wisdom I at once lay it aside. I want none of it. "With all our getting let us get wisdom," but let us see to it that it is not what should be called by another name.

I fear my friend Mrs. Slenker's experience and investigations in the line of Spiritualism hav not been as extensiv or fortunate as my own, for I hav not only read but listened to sentiments which indicated an intelligence as superior to the mediums' through whom they were given as theirs was to a child's. I hav known mere children to express sentiments worthy the wisest philosophers. I hav heard people who knew comparativly nothing of the sciences or dead languages converse for hours most learnedly with experts and men of science. Scores of well authenticated instances of this kind are on record, proving conclusivly a superior intelligence, yet the information elicited was but of trifling importance compared to the proof it afforded of an organized individual existence, independent of and outside of these organisms of flesh and blood. Yet more is called for even to the extent of wisdom that requires thousands of years to accumulate and comprehend, believing that we who hav just commenced, as Mrs. Slenker says, to learn can comprehend and appreciate it. I hope Mrs. Slenker will not consider me impertinent or unfair, for I count myself in too when I say, in my opinion, it would be "casting pearls before swine." I fear the wise and good in spirit life, who are laboring to elevate humanity, are too often reminded of that apt saying. Much good seed is sown, but it falls on rocky and barren ground. The trouble is, people hav heard and read so much about the errors, frauds, and silly doings of silly people that they hav come to believe it is all bad, and that Spiritualists are all a weak-minded, deluded set. I call this looking at the dark side of the picture, which is very easy to do when everbody else, whose company is desirable, is looking the same way too. I of course do not know how extensivly my friend Mrs. Slenker has investigated Spiritualism, yet I am inclined to believe her experience has been very like my brother Babcock's, who says he "never investigated because he never had an opportunity." To such I will candidly say: Before you farther judge, make opportunities. If they will not come to you, go to them.

Mrs. Slenker says, "I do not shut my eyes to the failures and say that nature always works for the happiness of man or beast, tree or flower." Nor do I; for from the failures are learned our most valuable lessons, but I cannot agree with her that nature does not always work for happiness and good. I believe, on the contrary, that she always does; that she invariably produces the very best results she possibly can; that it is only when conditions are against her that she fails to do so. Giv to nature her best conditions and she will never fail to produce a beautiful flower, a noble tree, or a perfect man. Giv her bad conditions, and the reverse will be true. If we would be healthy, we must be cleanly, use a proper food, and attend to all the laws of our being. If we would enjoy cool breezes, we must not dwell in a desert. I would as soon believe in an orthodox devil as to believe that nature mocks us or is treacherous, or to believe there is a something in nature that seeks to produce failures and disastrous results maliciously. I will not thus impeach her.

But Mrs. Slenker givs us "the most unkindest cut of all" when she says, "Nor do I believe in the philosophy of any ism that rests its issues on dreams, visions, or imaginary effects." This I think is plainly intended as a definition or summing up of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, but I think it is about the worst I ever saw. It "rests its issues on dreams, visions, and imaginary effects." Dreams and visions are good as far as they go, but when the great multitude of manifestations which spirits produce, to prove existence and identity, and to giv us instruction, is summed up in the term "imaginary effects," it is evident the writer is really thankful she "is not as others are." It is hardly "fair play" to pronounce my facts "imaginary effects." Will Mrs. Slenker say if "the raps" are imaginary effects? and the intelligence which invariably accompanies them? Are Mr. Bennett's "proofs" "imaginary effects," to which he alludes when he says, "We hav on several occasions received proofs of the existence of intelligences disconnected with visible and physical organizations?" Were the manifestations witnessed by Crookes, Zollner, and Joe Cook "imaginary effects?" I think not. I believe sooner or later Mrs. Slenker will revise her opinions about those "imaginary effects," for I believe she is a true, good woman, and fully means it when she says she desires the truth at all hazards. She necessarily interprets our experiences from the Materialistic, or "death ends all" standpoint, and will until she gets the proofs we hav had.

Her interpretation of my experience with the spirit who wanted beer is the only one she can consistently giv. It looks reasonable, too, yet I know it is not the true one. She says it would be hard to prove it was a spirit that caused the thirst. If I should hav a pain in my head or stomach, I could not prove it, yet to me it would be a fact nevertheless. But that was the only time in my life when beer was anything to me but a bitter, nauseous drink. The moment I refused the thirst ceased as suddenly as it came. If it was a "wrong condition of health which called for stimulus," why not let some drunkard try the same remedy as a cure for drunkenness, when he is absolutely sure no spirit is using his psychological powers to procure the beer or whisky? But I am told that what my guides—whom I can converse with at any moment—told me concerning the matter, was an "imaginary effect." That incident was given not so much as proof of spirit existence as to show the necessity for us to guard against the influence of spirits who hav not yet learned the better way. I do not believe "whatever is is right," but I do believe there are two universal laws prevailing everywhere, running parallel and diametrically opposed to each other, a wrong and a right, the wrong looking to misery and suffering, the right to wisdom and happiness, and that we can generally take our choice.

E. A. Chapman.

Lowell, Mich.

Spread and Destiny of Freethought.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: As you are a leading and representativ Freethinker of our country, and about to depart to Brussels to take part in the International Congress of Freethinkers which assembles in August, I deem it my duty to present some facts which I trust cannot fail to interest that distinguished and enlightened body. I will, then, briefly set forth my observations made during extended travels from the Missouri river to the Pacific, and from Alaska to South America. Society may be said to be in its rough manhood, young and vigorous, all over this vast domain alluded to.

As in all new countries freedom of action and freedom of speech are the rule, not the exception. I will specify as follows: 1. On the great plains and in the heart of the Rocky Mountains the majority of the pioneers are Freethinkers. As population increases priests and parsons make their appearance, establish churches and Sunday-schools, gain an ascendency over the women, and take complete charge of the mind and destinies of the youth. It is through this action that Christianity gets a foothold, grows, and increases. The Freethinkers, while free themselves, are careless with regard to their wives and families. Indeed, thoughtful Freethinkers say that the women and children must hav churches and schools (religious) of some kind, and since Freethought offers nothing, as a last resort they attend the Christian churches. There is no organization of Freethinkers in all the vast regions mentioned, except a few, very few, auxiliary Leagues of the National Liberal League. With organization and a sweet, hopeful philosophy or morality for the women and children, temples of Freethought would dot the great land named as stars dot the firmament.

2. The Pacific coast, including all the states and territories west of the Rocky Mountains, has hosts and hosts of Freethinkers, but entirely unorganized. It is all body, but no soul or spirit, that is, a warm, living, fruitful, hopeful, enthusiastic unity does not pervade it. Individual self-will does not yield gracefully to the necessity of organization and union. This city contains over 300,000 inhabitants, yet it has only one recently organized and as yet small Freethought society, namely, League No. 190 of the National Liberal League. The city literally swarms with Freethinkers, as does the entire coast, but the great difficulty is to get them together to work in union and as a body. The professional classes, especially physicians, are Freethinkers. The lawyers also, but being more worldly, they conceal their real thought to a great extent. All the literary men, with rare exceptions, are Freethinkers.

3. The intellectual classes who to-day govern Mexico are enthusiastic advocates of Freethought. You might travel the country from one end to the other and never find a leading, activ man in the military, political, literary, and even business circles who enters a church from year to year. All the literateurs of the country are men who not only do not go to church, but are doing all they can to destroy the power of the priesthood. I am personally acquainted with many of them, and they are noble fellows. What I say of Mexico applies to the Central American states, notably so to Guatemala. Columbia, one of the finest republics in South America, is full of Freethinkers or Liberals, and between them and the church party there hav been, and are occationally now, bloody conflicts. The Liberals in all the Spanish American countries named hav had to war for life since the overthrow of Spanish rule. They are now in a majority in all these republics, and under their rule freedom of thought in religious matters is as secure as in the United States; yes, even more so, for the case of D. M. Bennett, cruelly imprisoned by Christian bigots in the United States, and Bradlaugh denied his rights in the British Parliament because he does not swear by an invisible and imaginary God, show that we are not free as in Mexico or the Spanish American countries. I met in my travels along the Pacific many South Americans who told me that Freethought was making rapid progress in their respectiv countries, and especially in Chili.

4. During a tour from here to Russian America some years ago, I met free and liberal souls in Vancouver, British America, and Alaska. There, too, there are hosts of Freethinkers, but as usual no union, the result of no organization.

5. In a voyage to the South Sea Islands, I found all the nativ chiefs and almost all the intelligent nativs were Freethinkers. This is peculiarly applicable to the Sandwich Islands, King Kalakaua being an out-and-out Freethinker. Missionaries of Christianity hav been working in Hawaii for over seventy-five years, but they hav never been able to convert the chiefs. As usual, missionaries attack the weak, the women and the children, and under pretense of guiding them heavenward, liv sumptuously upon the superstition they preach. Under missionary rule the population of the Sandwich Islands hav rapidly died out. The missionaries never taught the nativs any of the practical arts, never showed them how to build houses, how to till the earth, how to make boots and shoes, clothing, or anything of the kind. They hav literally sung and prayed the nativs to death, and the few survivors who believe in Christianity are, true to their teaching, consummate hypocrits.

6. In all the countries named the various Christian sects are warring bitterly for mastership, and are only united when they can crush Freethought. The various Protestant sects are as hostil to each other as they are as a body hostil to the Catholic body of Christians. The Roman Catholic church is making extraordinary headway on the Pacific coast; this city is filled with chapels, nunneries, and monasteries. More than nine-tenths of the converts to Freethought come from the ranks of Protestantism, and in time this latter will be a mere shadow. It is now dissolving; it has no head, no unity. It is kept alive by its prejudice to Catholicism; it has no living, burning faith. I take it, then, that the battles of the future, in what we call the civilized world, will be fought between the soldiers in the army of Freethought—when it is organized and has living and eternal principles incorporated—and the legions of superstition as representing the Roman Catholic church. The organization of the latter is admirable; its aggressivness is at once defiant and soothing; its end and aims, the conquest of the bodies and souls of men, women, and children in life and in death. The priest takes charge of the child at its birth, blessing it, and follows it through life to the grave, blessing it, and a sweet heaven for every blessing it makes a dollar or two. The Roman church has no legal tax gatherers, yet wherever I hav been it was simply astonishing to see how freely the devotees of superstition paid their tithes to the mother church.

7. If the International Congress of Freethinkers, and those great Liberal bodies uniting with them for debate and action, can giv us a vitalizing, warm, hopeful system of morality; can create an organization that will bind and unite us; can giv the human soul a sweet hope or trust that will make family life endearing and life beyond a possibility, at present eternal darkness to the mind of the mother and child, then the future is ours. Men say to me every day, "You crush out all hope, all aspiration, except the confines and limits of mere Materialism. We want no priests or parsons, but we want, at least, hope—the delusion of eternal light rather than the delusion of eternal darkness." If the Congress wastes its time in discussing what the soul is or is not, or any shadowy and intangible subject of the kind, it will not be able to accomplish any good. If it deals with practical questions, such as the best way to banish misery from the earth, to decrease crime, to distribute wealth more evenly, to make life on the farm a delight, to make people contented, to make education practical, all as applied to the coming system that is to replace dying out Christianity, then the Congress can do a great deal of good. I hope that the International bodies assembled will work in the greatest harmony; that as a unit its sayings and deliberations will be marked by good sense, moderation, and dignity. I am sure the noble men representing the National Liberal League—the most extensiv Freethought organization in America—will honor themselves and the great cause they represent. May the Congress do a great and glorious work.

With my heart's best wishes for truth, justice, and properity as the corner-stones on which to found human happiness, I remain, Fraternally yours, BYRON ADONIS.

San Francisco, Cal.

The Belvidere Meeting.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am just home from the West. I am in a chatty mood, and I beg the privilege of inflicting a short, gossipy letter upon your generous readers. I want to tell them something about the grand meeting recently held in the charming town of Belvidere, Ill. I will not take time nor space to go into details. Suffice it to say it was a decided success, and all the more so when we take into consideration that the enterprise was managed by one man, and he inexperienced in such matters, with an attempt to bring together the Liberalists of all classes. Of course there were some professed Liberals, including not a few Spiritualists, who prophesied all sorts of wicked things concerning the meeting. How could it be otherwise? Jamieson was to be there, the terrible "backslider," the once notorious Spiritualist, and now a famous Materialist. His presence boded evil only to the good, harmonious Spiritualists.

Again, the Severances were to be there, and their heterodox views would certainly disturb the tranquility of any would-be peaceable meeting. Then the Hulls were expected. Worse and worse! Of course they would endeavor to force their Greenbackism, Freeloveism, and nobody knows what down the throats of respectable persons who might be there, and the people would not stand it. So for some time before the opening of the meeting mutterings were in the air, and our good brother Follet was besieged by trouble-borrowers on every hand. But the work went on. Four days of delightful weather was given us for the meeting, which was held on the fair grounds, about a mile and a half from the town. It was a delightful place, and I would say right here, I believe one of the grandest platforms ever erected in America was on this spot. It was as broad as thought could possibly be, and so strong that each speaker uttered his or her thoughts without fear or trembling because they knew the foundations could not be shocked by the honest truth. There were Spiritualists and anti-Spiritualists, Christians and anti-Christians, Greenbackers and anti-Greenbackers gathered into this meeting, each with kindly feeling, determined to giv all sides a hearing and then decide for themselves. There were discussions, and no wranglings; dissensions, but no inharmonies, because the speakers from the first impressed the audience with the idea that they had come there to agree to disagree; that every truly great man or woman must become cosmopolitan in their ideas. The social meetings were a happy feature of the camp-meeting. They were chiefly carried on by members of the audience, who seemed earnest in their endeavors to get light on the vital questions of the hour.

No word of mine is needed in praise of the efforts of the speakers. Every discourse was replete with thought, and delivered with an earnestness that comes only from souls impressed with the importance of a great work.

It was my good fortune to form the acquaintance of our worthy brother E. C. Walker, of Iowa. He is in dead earnest, I assure you; he thoroughly understands the work of the Liberal League, and I know the friends of the movement hav no more faithful or competent laborer than he.

F. F. Follet, the man who called the meeting, is enthusiastic in the work. He informed me that he had received a commission from the National Liberal League to work as an organizer in the state of Illinois. I trust he will hav the encouragement and support of the Liberals, for his life is pledged to the work.

Liberals, take courage; progressiv men and women are coming to the front They accept nothing short of universal freedom. That we may all outgrow ists, isms, and ites, recognize the good everywhere, and emulate the example set forth at the Belvidere camp-meeting, is the earnest wish of your humble correspondent. MATTIE E. HULL.

Boston, Mass., July 27, 1880.

Remarks made at a Debate in Philadeiphia on the Subject of Taxation of Church Property.

BY SADA BAILEY.

One of the best arguments in favor of the taxation of church property is that as its non-taxation imposes heavier taxes upon secular property therefore Liberals are compelled to pay for the dissemination of ideas to which they are bitterly opposed, and as one of these ideas is that Christians can sin without suffering for it, we will not be wandering far from the subject to consider this point. I once had a neighbor who was a Catholic woman. One day my little son asked me if he might go with this woman's boy to do something which I knew was against her religion. I answered, "No, my son, for although you and I think it right, I would not obey the Golden Rule did I allow you to encourage the boy in disobeying his mother."

Just then the mother made her appearance, and said, "Yes, Leny, indade you may go with Harry!"

"Why, Mrs. Graves," said I, "is this not against your religion?"

She answered, "Indade it is, madam, but, Leny can you explain to the lady how we can fax that ou! right?"

The lad looked complacently into my face and said, "And sure, mum, I'd confess it to the praist and the praist'll forgiv me."

I replied, "I am glad that the only priest my son has to go to is the high-priest within his own soul, his conscience, which he fears to offend, and which he knows will cause him suffering if he disobeys it."

Just think of it! a mother telling her child that it matters little what he does if it is something the priest will forgiv him for! And the Protestant's idea of responsibility is no better; for they say that the soul-status of a moral and honest individual who does not believe in Jesus is not as good as the immoral person who does believe in Jesus. Christians can do anything; they can grind down the poor, they can liv aristocratically, which is diametrically opposit to the sweet spirit of the humble Nazarene, whose character we should all love and admire; they can look with scorn upon people who honestly earn their living, the only class that should be respectable; Christians can do anything and be all right so long as they believe, or think they believe, or pretend to think they believe, in that impossible fable about God taking on the form of a man and giving himself up to be murdered to appease his own angry wrath! Is not this the most pernicious and demoralizing idea that ever disgraced the human mind?

Here is another reason why churches should be taxed. As long as they are not, unthinking people will look upon them as too sacred to be taxed, and their creeds as too sacred to be attacked; and the brains of thousands are so enveloped with the cobweb of superstition that the sunlight of truth and reason cannot arouse progressiv thought, and thus people liv in false conditions, with the idea that to be born again will save them, thus preventing humanity from going energetically to work and preparing true conditions in which children can be rightly born at first, yea, in which they can be rightly raised, and taught that humanity can only be saved when every child that is born is taught to earn an honest living, and liv an honest life.

I should think that every Liberal woman who is a mother or who hopes to bear that blessed name, every woman who would ascend that highest throne of thrones where the crown of motherhood is set upon her brow, a mother from whose anxious soul by day and by night is ever pouring forth that unceasing prayer that her children may grow up to love and reverence all that is good and beautiful and true, would want all done that can be done to teach the longing, yearning, hungry heart of humanity the grand and beautiful truth that an enlightened conscience, educated by reason and knowledge, is a better guide to a true life than all the priests of Christendom; and that this enlightened conscience will do more to save humanity than either the Catholic or Protestant Jesus.

Ingersoll on Shakspere and the Stage.

Among the "letters from the absent" passed over by accident at the recent Booth breakfast in New York, was the following from Col. Ingersoll, which, by the courtesy of Mr. Barrett, is now for the first time made public:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., June 14, 1880.

"Lawrence Barrett, Esq., My Dear Sir: Had it been possible, your kind invitation would hav been accepted. Nothing could giv me more pleasure than to be where a great actor is honored. We now know that a man able even to understand Shakspere is great, and that only a genius can clothe in living flesh, filled and thrilled with life's hot blood and passion's flame, the mighty offspring of the world's best brain. To us, living in an age approaching civilization, it is amazing that in the one complete and perfect man, the one within whose heart all races lived and in whose brain was stored the fruit of all thought passed, the seeds of all to be, was called a 'sturdy vagrant' in the English law, while socially he fell below the dullest parson and the half-fed footman of the lowest squire. And yet to him all hearts were open as the sky, and nature told her secrets with his lips. His mind was like a sea to which all rivers ran, and from which now the realms of thought receive the dew and rain. In the drama the highest thought in every age has found expression. While throne and altar forged and fastened chains, the poor slaves heard upon the stage the actor curse the injustice of the world, and wept with joy to see, even in a play, the captiv free. In all the other walks of life, rogues, hypocrits, and cowards oft succeed, but on the stage applause greets only those who represent the great, the loving, brave, and true, or giv to public scorn the very heart of vice. And now the actor takes his place among the benefactors of mankind. Heininge and Condel, in their dedication of the folio of 1623, speak of Shakspere's works as 'these trifles.' Yet 'these trifles' will outliv the pyramids and their dust They will be remembered as long as most things will be forgotten. Edwin Booth has elevated and refined the stage. He has recognized the sacredness of art. He has become illustrious as an interpreter of 'these trifles,' and it should satisfy his ambition to know that to and with the speech of Shakspere his name and memory will be linked and mingled forever.

"Thanking you once more, again regretting my inability to be with you, and hoping that the English will honor Mr. Booth as much as he has us, I remain,

"Sincerely yours, ROBERT G. INGERSOLL."

Col. Ingersoll on the Political Situation.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am sure every one of your readers will be pleased to learn the views of our great orator and statesman, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, on the political situation. I therefore hand you the following letter for publication: H. L. G.

BASE ROCK HOUSE,
GLOUCESTER, MASS., July 6, 1880.

Dear Mr. Green: As long as the Democratic party is controlled by the Catholics—as long as that party is afraid to pass a resolution that the public moneys shall not be given to sectarian schools—I shall vote some other ticket. The real way to settle this matter is for the Liberals to appoint a committee to draft questions and propose them to the candidates. I am satisfied that General Garfield is willing to extend to me every right that he claims for himself. If he is not, then I am against him. Let us see how the candidates are upon these great questions. Let us ask them whether they are in favor of depriving Atheists of the right of testifying in courts; whether they are for the total separation of church and state, and whether they think that a man's civil and political rights should be affected by his religious or irreligious belief. I am not afraid of the answers that General Garfield will giv. Let us know what we are doing.

I understand General Garfield is a Christian, and that in spite of his religion he is a broad and liberal man. He is, in my judgment, entitled to the support of Liberal people. I may, however, possibly be mistaken. Let us ask him how he stands. Yours truly,

R. G. INGERSOLL.

New Auxiliary.

196. Kansas State Liberal League. President, Charles Robinson; Secretary, W. H. T. Wakefield, Lawrence, Kan. Instructions, in English and German, and documents for forming Auxiliaries furnished free on application to

A. L. RAWSON, Sec. N. L. L.

19 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Letters from Friends.

SOLDIER'S HOME, WASHINGTON, D. C., July 8, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your venerable and faithful friend Mr. John Cosgrove, having learned you are to go to Europe, begs your acceptance of the inclosed two dollars to help meet expenses

Your obedient servant, JAMES C. LEHMER.

---

ST. JOHNS. ILL., July 5. 1880.

MR. A. L. RAWSON, My Dear Brother: In reporting our League matters I hav to say that after organizing on the 16th of June. 1879, we met regularly through the summer and fall. Our members are connected with the coal mines, or rather with the "Halliday Salt, Iron, and Coal Mining Co," and some trouble having risen as to wages etc., many men left for other places, reducing our League meetings so much that they were suspended for a few weeks, but since April hav been continued weekly, with additions to the membership.

Our officers for this year are William Ellison, President; Mrs. M. V. Hall, Secretary; Andrew Mayor, Treasurer; W. W. Hall, Wm. G. Knight, L. W. Ford, Mrs. Sarah K. Bailie, Committee.

The Liberal cause is prospering here. Two of the school directors are members of our League, as is also the superintendent of the Illinois Central Coal and Iron Mining Company.

Please say to Bro. Bennett that I believe F. E. Abbot knew more about the scurrilous pamphlet that some one sent to my wife, and to thousands besides, than he is willing to confess. Every Liberal here who has given an opinion on the matter thinks the same.

The President and Secretary of our League, at the meeting on the 4th of July, were authorized to indorse the ten delegates mentioned in the inclosed circular. Five dollars were voted as a contribution to the expenses to Brussels. I wish you and Bro. Bennett, and all the other delegates a prosperous voyage and safe return.

Fraternally, WM. A. THOMPSON.

---

CHELSEA, MASS., July 11, 1880,

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: I send my mite at a late hour—$1.00 for your European tour. I hope you will hav a pleasant time. I wish your dear, noble companion could accompany you. I trust you will arrive safe and return the same, and I hope to hav the pleasure of seeing you in Boston after your return home.

Wishing you prosperity through life, I remain

Your friend, C. M. SAWYER.

---

CLEVELAND, O., July 8, 1880.

MY REVERED BROTHER: Then you hav decided to go to Europe. When I read that I said "Glory!" It called to mind the time when you said, "The time has come to enlarge THE TRUTH SEEKER." "Whom the gods love they chasten." Oh, how our enemies goad us to high resolvs—noble acts! Go to Brussels of course; it will tend to equalize the cruel past. Had I not just remitted the "widow's mite" ($10), I would send remittance; but I am not flush in funds.

I rejoice to know that so many ladies and gentlemen are to represent American freethought. It has been my pleasure to hav met many of these distinguished persons; and were my health adequate, I, too, would cross the ocean to gaze upon the worthy champions of Freethought who shall convene at the International Congress at Brussels.

A late number of the Index was handed me. "The subterranean or digger Radicals" and "the mad-dog sheet" seem to disturb the equanimity of the retired editor. Wonder how long before Bundy will retire? How can an editor print venom and pretend it is done in the interest of truth? The falsehood is too apparent. The ass's ears betray the beast. May holy angels guide you across the ocean and bring you safe back! GRACE L. PARKHURST.

---

PRAIRIE CITY, OR., June 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find my mite toward bearing your expenses to the Congress at Brussels ($1). As you hav been incarcerated in a Christian prison for a year, I am glad to hear that it is proposed for you to go out of the reach of your enemies for a short time.

Your well-wisher, E. L. SANDFORD.

---

ASHLAND CENTRE, July 7, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find $1,00, my mite in aid of your attendance at the Brussels Convention. I am decidedly anxious that the Liberals of America engage you in particular as one to represent them there, as it would certainly be the right man in the right place. I am a stranger to you but you are not so to me; if you examine your list you will find me a trial subscriber for a year dating a little subsequent to that accursed sentence of yours which the world now so well knows of and so bitterly scorns. If orthodoxy had wished to annihilate itself why did it not choose some honorable means of doing so. I had for a little time previous to my subscription been enabled to catch an occasional glance at THE TRUTH SEEKER and it pleased me. I found I was not alone in venturing to philosophize upon the Bible. I must say, about two years ago or so, was the first I knew of Liberalism. As I began reading your paper I felt like a colt running away—I felt that I could and would make a break from orthodoxy. I now feel and know that I am a much better man, already, from reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I solicit the encouragement of all good Liberals, that I may still walk more uprightly until I am, what I ought to be, a true Liberal, and a full member of that class. The fact is, a poor backwoods thinking man can overtake in THE TRUTH SEEKER learning that he could not reach without it, and learning that I, for one, hav long since craved. Yea, it is my eating, my drink, and my lodging at night. It is the grand leaven of our vast American literature.

I, friend Bennett, too, have been looking in the last eighteen months, with complacent sorrow upon your misfortunes, and in silent admiration upon your successes. I hav often felt toward A. B. C. and Co., as I ought not to have done, to rotten egg them. But never mind, they are attributes of the past. As I hav seen so many noble-hearted men and women, the world over, clinging so firmly to you as their grand pole star and stanchest hope, I have felt like exclaiming at the top of my voice, Hurrah for Bennett and the liberal cause! Of a truth my heart and hand are in this theme. I am with you all to the letter, and there are many more in this, at present silent, neck of woods that take the same position and may be ere long you will hear more of us. Yes, go to Brussels and promulgate to the world the glad tidings that in America too there are many, very many, whole-souled philanthropists who feel sorely priest-ridden; and feel that even to this late day ancient mythology hangs over the happiness of man like a gloomy pall. By all means let the good men and women of the world confer together until they are enabled to eradicate the last vestige of bigotry, superstition and human suffering from off the face of this beautiful earth. Yours in love, D. E. PENDLETON.

---

ENON VALLEY, PA.,

MY DEAR BENNETT: Like thousands of others of your friends, I was not able to meet and congratulate you in person when you got home from prison. Nevertheless, I was as glad as anybody that you had got your hand out of the lion's mouth; and as indignant at the church, which through the forms of law had trampled your person and your rights into the dust, because of the blows you had given in the great contention for the liberty of the human intellect and conscience. The best wish I hav for you is that you may liv to see the day when you will know, and your enemies too, that the cruel treatment you received has advanced the cause of freedom, and hastened the destruction of that colossal system of cruelty and superstition called the church, whose history is written in blood and tears. I hope, too, that instead of crippling your paper it will become stronger and better than ever.

Sincerely yours, A. B. BRADFORD.

---

BLACK CREEK, WIS., June 28 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I received "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." I like it well. You will find $2 for the last volume, which will make my $5. Yours truly, G. B. COLE.

---

POLITICAL LETTERS.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Yourself and some others of the Eastern brethren seem to be still hankering after the fleshpots of the Democratic Egypt. "Both parties are evidently bidding for the Liberal vote." Exactly; and you propose that we shall accept the bid of one of them, and of that one which has lived through twenty years upon the prejudices of the ignorant and brutal by the open or tacit defense of slavery of the body; and now we are asked to believe that it has become the especial champion of the liberty of the mind and the body as well. Never was indulged a more unfounded hope. Lay not that flattering unction to your souls, for the leopard changes not thus his spots.

You argue that the Greenbackers are weak, that separate nominations upon the part of the Liberals would be futile, and hence we must giv our votes to the party which has a chance to win. Each man must act according to his own judgment, but for myself, I prefer to be the smallest of all independent animals rather than the tail of the most colossal lion. "The Democrats promis us a complete disunion of church and state." The devil they do! Hav you not yet learned the value of political platform promisses made by place hunters? I will venture the assertion that not one in ten of the delegates in that Democratic convention had any more conception of what that plank meant than has the dead cat in the gutter. Does this seem harsh? Then investigate for yourself, and see if it is not true.

I will sadly confess that I am disappointed at the action of the Greenback Convention. It has declared for the taxation of all property, and inserted a woman suffrage plank; this should be sufficient to secure it the support of all true Liberals, of men who know that only through a new party can we hope for the triumph of any reform. But we still open our conventions with the farce of prayer, and we hav placed a religious bigot at the head of our ticket. These are drawbacks, but still it is the party of progress. Mr. Gastineau says organize a Liberal party. I say amen. Under the circumstances I would much prefer to see Liberals exhibit a little more moral character and unite with the only reform party now in existence, and control it, as they could if they would but combine and show that their professions of great love for humanity are genuine and sincere, not mere show. But if they cannot be made to actualize their Liberalism in this way, then let us do the next best thing, and set up political housekeeping for ourselvs.

All arguments so far advanced in favor of union with or absorption by the Democracy are the trifling reasons of expediency, and will not influence the clear-seeing reformer. It is worse than folly for us to attach ourselvs to any old political corpse. We can't stand it. We cannot vote side by side with the still unrepentant thugs who burnt negro orphan asylums and hung colored men to lamp posts in 1863. Let us keep cool. This fever for immediate success has well-nigh ruined many a reform movement. It will only strand us on the rocks of disaster and leave us to bear the odium of Democratic bestiality. We can afford to wait for victory. Yours for a straightforward line of march.

E. C. WALKER.

---

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 9, 1880.

MY DEAR BENNETT: I believe you always like to know the opinion of your friends, even though they may not always agree with you, therefore allow me to say a few words upon the subject of politics.

I think I reflect the opinion of a large majority of the Liberals in this vicinity in saying that I do not agree with you at all as to our present political duties. THE TRUTH SEEKER is an exponent of Liberal thought, virtually the organ of the whole Liberal element in the United States, and should not, in my opinion, curry favor with either of the old parties. We, the Liberals, compose a political party ourselvs. If the time has not arrived for us to nominate candidates, let every Liberal choose his own from the three candidates already in the field.

A great many Liberals, like yourself, feel justly aggrieved at our President for not doing his plain duty to you while you were suffering a cruel, unjust, and illegal imprisonment, yet the great mass of the Republican party are no more to blame for Mr. Hayes' conduct than the Liberal League is responsible for the mistakes of some of its members. Had the Democratic party been in power it would hav been just the same. The Y. M. C. A. ruled Hayes, and they would hav undoubtedly governed Tilden.

A few Democratic papers denounce Hayes, as they denounce all Republicans. Had Mr. Hayes been sensible and courageous enough to do his duty in your case, these same Democratic papers, who now appear friendly, would hav been on the other side—denouncing Hayes for doing an act of justice. The average Democrat opposes alike everything, good or bad, advocated by a Republican. The Democratic party has always been the party of despotism. They were the defenders of American slavery; the mob party; the opposers of a registry law; the bitter opponents of temperance, and nearly all other reform movements. The ignorant foreign vote is nearly all manipulated by that party; and what hav Liberals to expect from democracy? Nothing. Do not think the leopard has changed his skin.

While I respect your political opinion, Bro. Bennett, as an individual—and I hope yourself and Wakeman will both vote for the candidates of your choice—I do think that to virtually commit THE TRUTH SEEKER to either Republican or Democratic party would be the hight of folly.

Fraternally yours, JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

---

FORT LEE, N. J., July 8, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find my dollar toward the Brussels Fund. THE TRUTH SEEKER of to-day was a great surprise to our Liberal men around here We are going to form a League here. The first resolution offered and unanimously adopted was a sacred protest against yours and Wakeman's suggestion to help the old rotten concern called Democracy to power once more (Jesuits). While it is an undisputed fact that the Republican party proved itself a modern Jesuit, it is just as true that the other old concern is and has been the original Jacobs.

We are just hanging out a flag with the following: "Down with stock-swindlers [Garfields], and down with West Point aristocrats!" [Hancocks].

What in all common sense does this degeneration of a Democratic party offer for us reformers? Has she any idea, any principle, any desire of reform for a suffering humanity? And you and Wakeman want us to vote for it. No, never. The money power made both the Republican and the Democratic platforms, and nominated on both sides the candidates.

Ingersoll was with the Republicans in Chicago. Right after them there assembled one thousand reformers, most of them Freethinkers. But no Ingersoll or Wakeman made an appearance with them. These one thousand delegates from the people made a platform for reforms for the people. We are rather astonished that Truesdell (the money-changer) can cover more than a side in THE TRUTH SEEKER and close up the debate. And we are still more astonished that THE TRUTH SEEKER does not even mention or say a word about these one thousand and their doings. You, Bro. Bennett, used to be in favor of the Greenbackers, as we hold the first necessary step to any and all reforms. All our enemies hav plenty to spend and to buy.

Now, what is the use of destroying all the gods and the devil when our leaders preach for a more damnable idol that cursed and enslaved our people—the idol of gold; the idol of specie payments; the idol of national bank frauds?

We consider that three-fourths of your readers are true reformers, and therefore will vote for James B. Weaver and B. I. Chambers, the only candidates for reform in the field. AUG. SEMMENDINGER.

---

SALEM, O., July 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your issue of July 3d contains two articles, which, from their sources, are calculated to do much harm, not only to our especial cause, but to the general welfare of humanity. I allude to the letter of T. B. Wakeman, Esq., to H. L. Green, and the leading editorial, which bears the earmarks of D. M. Bennett.

Mr. Wakeman thinks that we should hav another convention and resolve to support Hancock without asking any pledges of the Democratic party. With regard to the pledges he is right, for all the promises that party could possibly make would be of less value than nothing. Ask pledges of that old party which coquetted with the Free Soil party for twenty years, and pledged itself blindly so frequently that it was never expected to redeem either promis or pledge? Ask pledges of the party which has had no principles that belong to a republic for two-score years? Mr. Wakeman is right about the asking of pledges. It would only prove us to be ignoramuses, and might injure them, if such a party can be injured.

But upon that other point, for the convention to resolve to support Hancock, I cannot agree with Mr. Wakeman, much as I admire the man and highly as I hold in esteem his judgment and good sense generally. There is nothing to hope for from the Democratic party. As a party, it is as much under the control of the church as is the Republican party, if not more so. There is not a particle of go-ahead in that old party; they are the same old fossils that ruled us under Franklin Pierce and James Buchanan, when the slavery question crowded itself upon the nation with such force as to break the bonds that restrained the dogs of civil war, while the party tried to mend them with gloves upon their dainty hands. They hav not a Jefferson among their leaders, and could not hold one in their ranks if they perchance could catch one. No, no; the Democratic party hav been labored with for years, but they hav shown by their last year's doings that they do not mean anything by their protestations. While they had over sixty majority in the House they would do nothing because the Senate would thwart them; now they hav both the House and Senate, and they do no better, in fect they do worse. Trust them not; they hav ever deceived us, and in that respect they will be true to their traditions, but in no other.

Your own remarks in the leading editorial do not speak very favorably for your observations when you say that the Greenback party will not get a vote in the electoral college. Maine, Alabama, Mississipi, Texas, and California will probably hav but two parties, and the Greenback party will be one of the two, with good prospects of success in the two first-named at least. While with the absolute collapse of the trade boom under the "benign" rule of specie payments and the nearly equal standing of both old party candidates, the voters will be in a measure free from that antagonism which has given both parties their strength in late years.

You say that the Republican party has become corrupt. Is it any more so in proportion to its chances than is the Democratic? Is not the one party ruled by the same men who govern the other? Is not August Belmont the most important factor in both old parties? If you do not know it, you ought to.

You say, "Let us make a wise choice as to whom we ally ourselvs." Now, if you know anything, you know that since the Mexican war the Democratic party has been the party of conservatism, the hold-back party; they hav promised much but done nothing. They were the friends of the old Abolitionists when it was thought votes could be won by such friendship. They started the Homestead law, but would not pass it. They dealt with all matters then just the same as they do now—promis, but never perform. They are not in sympathy with the Liberals. If they are, why hav they not shown it, when the petitions hav been so numerous since they came to legislativ power?

You say, "Let us not throw away our strength." Then put it where it will be felt; where it will count and be counted; with the young party; the party where the Liberals belong. Then you will be counted; but with the Democratic party you will not even be known. Besides which, you hav among you very many old Republicans who can no more be brought to vote the Democratic ticket than a horse can be made to drink when not thirsty. Yet they can all be carried to the new party, against which they hav no traditional prejudice. And more, how do you suppose you will stand if you giv the Democratic party, which is now upon its last legs, a new lease of life? Will it not perpetuate the existence of both old parties? And can you point to any instance of fossilized old parties carrying reform measures except they hav been forced to it by the growth of a new and threatening party? If you want any advancement made by parties like the two old ones, you must endanger their rule by the growth of a new party clustered around the idess you advocate. You can never do it by helping them to win victories. Parties are like corporations—there is no emotion except fear that they recognize. Gratitude is beyond their comprehension. Let us not mistake foolishness for wisdom. Yours very truly,

THOMAS SHARP.

---

PORTLANDVILLE, N. Y., July 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: I hav been deeply interested in reviewing the matter treating on the political action of Liberals in the coming presidential campaign.

I would heartily indorse Mr. Wakeman's position in support of the noble men, Hancock and English, if it can be done by holding a solid front of Liberalism, and keeping the Liberal platform independent and uncontaminated with other party issues. The moment that the Liberals lend their political power, without holding a distinct platform and independent issues of their own, to either the Democratic or Republican party, they will hav consigned a power not easily regained.

I again repeat that this is the important hour in which great destinies are suspended, as it were, by the delicate thread of discretion. Acting wisely, the Liberals will become a political power to be felt, feared, and courted. But if they act imprudently by foiling or presenting themselves as an independent political organization, they will pass from the stage of action with a sneer of disgrace, without having consummated the designed work of reform.

The Liberals as a body rest, as it were, on a pivot. Both of the political parties are aware of this fact, and as they are also aware that the political scale is to be turned by this Liberal independent vote they are both anxious to gain the balancing power, hence the bid set forth in their platforms. But if we lend them this balancing force on any other terms than specific and conditional, we will hav thrown our power in the hands of those who will use it against us for our suppression.

Ah, the church and its power! Who can stand before it?

I should be in favor of the Liberals presenting their platform to Hancock and English. If they can stand upon it, and defend and protect it against the invasion of religious bigotry, every Liberal should support them. If Hancock and English refuse to protect us in our Liberal views, I think it is useless to look to Garfield and Arthur. The Republican party is the very party of bigotry!

Hancock and English are certainly good loyal men. They hav been thoroughly tested, and never found deficient. They are the very peers of loyalty and honor.

English was one of the first to raise his hand against the Rebellion, and he put his foot upon the neck of slavery, against the powerful currents of secession. He stood like a rock never to be moved. Both Hancock and English were antislavery men, and showed their will and power to crush it. They are also broad and Liberal in their sentiments, and I know of no men that we could support with greater pleasure. Yes, my little flag bearing the stars and stripes has been floating in the gentle breeze bearing the following inscription: With Hancock and English, and God banished from the Constitution, our liberty is safe. Union, liberty, equality, and female suffrage.

As I hav always voted the Republican ticket, people will be astonished at this bold declaration. But I tell them what I hav written I hav written. I think it would be a good idea for every Liberal to get a little flag and let it bear his motto. Hoping that all Liberals will do their duty and manifest their loyalty and love for their fellow-men in the coming election, I remain, Sincerely, PETER SOULE.

---

NEW YORK, July 10, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The most important question in the ranks of Liberalism just now is, How should Liberals cast their votes in the coming Presidential canvass so as most effectually to promote the ends for which they are contending, and for the attainment of which the Liberal League was instituted?

This is not unattended with difficulties, for it is undeniable that both of the old parties which will ask for their suffrages at the approaching election hav been guilty in the past of unpardonable sins against liberty, and which, notwithstanding the promises they hav made or may make to catch the Liberal vote, are not at heart in sympathy with the "demands" of Liberalism, and will be very likely to "keep the word of promis to the ear, but break it to the hope." If there were no alternativ except the choice between Republicans and Democrats, I for one, on the principle of "between two evils choose the least," would prefer to put my trust in and support the Democratic platform and candidates instead of the Republican; and this, if for no other reason than to punish the Republican party for its dereliction to the principles of liberty and for its notorious alliance with the money power and the conservativ theological class as against the interest of the working-classes and of the cause of social progress and intellectual liberty.

The crimes of the Democratic party, it must be confessed, are also great, but are not so recent, nor were they committed against such light and knowledge as were those of the Republican party, which sins were mainly influenced by prejudice of race, which in some measure palliated the crime.

But, in the opinion of the writer, there is still another and a better way. A new third party is in the field, a party of the people, one born of despair of any good, just, and honest government at the hands of either of the two old and corrupt organizations, and a living protest against the crimes and corruptions of their respectiv administrations.

This new party, called into being by the oppressed and wronged classes, are opposed in heart as well as in declaration, to every species of monopoly, wrong, and injustice, and can be trusted not alone because of its specific affirmation in its platform in favor of the "demands of Liberalism" but because its heart as well as its head is in harmony with progress and reform in every direction; for to that end only was it born.

But it will be said that its chance of success at the ensuing election is very doubtful, and that by supporting the Greenback-Labor party we shall accomplish nothing and throw away our votes. To this we answer, even were it true that no success can be hoped for at the coming election, the maintenence of its principles now, which are vital to the very existence of the republic, would, as in the case of the Republican party, ensure its ultimate triumph; for it is in accordance with the constitution of things that justice and right must eventually prevail.

But there is good reason for believing that success is within the grasp of the new party of the people. If only three states are carried by it the election of President will be thrown into the House, where the new party now hold the balance of power, in which event it will dictate the next President.

And even should this hope not be realized, there will be a sufficient number of congressmen elected in the districts where the party is strong which, with those already in Congress, will succeed in abolishing Comstock and his pernicious legislation, and secure other substantial reforms in the same direction. For these and other reasons I shall support the third party, and shall advise all Liberals so to do. But to those who cannot view the political situation in this light, I would say that the next best course is that advised by Messrs. Wakeman, Greer, and Bennett, namely, to support the Democratic platform and candidates, on the principle of, Anything to punish the Republican party for its sins against liberty, and the rights of the working classes.

HUGH BYRON BROWN.

---

SALEM, O., July 4, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: I notice in your last week's paper that you and Mr. T. B. Wakeman advocate the union of all Liberals upon General Hancock. I beg you both to reconsider this decision. How can Liberals reasonably hope to secure anything by such a course? The Democratic party, as an organization, is not at all in sympathy with our great principles; while the National Greenback-Labor party is, most emphatically. Please read the platforms of the three parties, and then tell me wherein those of the two old parties differ from each other upon any fundamental principles, unless it be on the tariff question. Compare them with the platform of the new party and you will discover that the latter is full of life, soul, and aggresiv reform. It demands everything that Liberals ask or desire, even to a pledge to secure suffrage and equality for woman; this in a separate resolution.

Our standard bearers, Weaver and Chambers, are patriots who love the people; their heart's sympathy goes out to bleeding humanity everywhere, of all sections and all creeds. They embody, too, the great principle of reconciliation and brotherly feeling between the North and South. Our party is the only one that had the honesty, courage, independence, integrity, and sincerity to nominate a Union General and a Confederate General, now both free from their respective old and corrupt party organizations, and who hav joined hands in a holy cause. Surely, from a standpoint of principle, and right you cannot support Hancock, great and good as he may be. And now as to the policy, expediency, or utility of such a course: Are you not aware that in thus going over to the Democratic party, you will offend many Liberals whose prejudices are so strong and deep rooted against that old party that they cannot overcome them, and who will, for the very reason that you have done this thing, smother their reason and vote for Garfield, much as they dislike him and his party? Why, God bless you my brothers, you are scattering and dividing the forces of an army of Liberals instead of combining them, and the result will be full of disappointment to you. Hoist the banner of the true Liberal party, and plead for Weaver and Chambers, and then you will induce thousands of men who think alike upon these great questions, but have heretofore allied themselves, some with the Democratic, and some with the Republican party, to join hands and work in harmony. In conclusion let me declare to you that there is no hope for the triumph of the cause of Liberalism outside the new party.

C. BONSALL.

---

ELMIRA, N. Y., July 5, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: As politics are now in the ascendency, and the contest between the various political factions of the country is growing hotter with each succeeding day, I am at a loss to comprehend, and therefore cannot help asking the question, in what do the recognized principles of politics consist? Is it in seeking the greatest good of the greatest number, or in endeavoring to promote the happiness and welfare of the whole? As the latter theory seems to be evidently true, please tell me which is the party upon whose assurances we can most rely to carry out those principles and, therefore, most worthy of the support of the Liberals in this country. As either party claims to present to the people the only true candidate for the presidency through whose administration alone we can expect salvation, as each of the various religious creeds of the universe claim supremacy over the rest, and unless a person believes as either of them does there is no chance of salvation for him, I am a little embarrassed as to the true motivs of the parties in conflict. Since I enjoyed the privileges and immunities of an American citizen I always voted the Republican ticket, for the reason that they alone effectually resisted the progress of the slave power, and finally abolished the most powerful and deeply rooted system of slavery known since the middle ages. Those facts ought to be engraved in letters of gold upon the hearts of every freeman as the grandest event in the history of mankind; but as they are issues of the past, which, however, we must always bear in mind with the strongest feeling of gratitude, there are other living issues which should attract the attention of the Liberals, such as church and state, that have already been promulgated through the columns of your valuable journal, and upon which alone the progress of civilization and the happiness of the human race depend. I inclose $1 00 as my donation on the European mission. Sincerely yours

J. ABRAMSON.

---

DALLAS, TEX., July 7, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I read with some astonishment an article in your issue of the 3d inst. entitled "The Political Situation.—The Duty of Liberals." My dear sir, the great end desired in behalf of humanity as a brotherhood is the greatest amount of produce with the least capital and labor, and by capital is meant the surplus left over of production after production is accomplished. The prosperity of our brotherhood depends upon bringing the producer and the consumer as close together as possible. This can only be done by a means of exchange amply provided, including transportation, and this is the great work of all true reformers, and Liberal thinkers ought to act and act at once for its accomplishment. This being true, can the man of brains and heart hope for any relief from either of the old parties? Do either of those parties offer anything looking in that direction? I am ready to admit that the Republican party has shown that it was the friend of the rich against the poor; the capitalist against the laborer, but in what do the Democracy offer relief? Is it in their fourth plank, "Home rule, honest money, consisting of gold and silver and paper convertible into coin on demand? The strict maintenance of the public faith, state and national, and a tariff for revenue only?"

This can mean nothing less than to keep the people under a bonded interest-bearing debt for all time to come. Paper convertible into coin on demand means only to put it in the power of the money men to control the value of the money.

Paper money to be converted or redeemed gives the money men the power to corner on coin and make it scarce and consequently dear. This is well-known to all intelligent Freethinkers, and this one feature in the Democratic policy is the most damning to the great brotherhood of honest humanity. Of any power in the government, this policy will keep one class of our people poor, keep them from obtaining an education, leave them fit subjects to be priest-ridden. Oh, why will liberal-minded men be so deceived? Why will not the people rise up and declare for liberty, for equal rights?

Now, Mr. Editor, it looks to me like you had found a mare's nest without eggs. The statement in the third plank of the Democratic platform is simply a clap-trap, and yet it is not unmeaning to the knowing ones. No sumptuary laws, separation of church and state, for the good of each, and common schools fostered and protected. No sumptuary law? Let them spend their money for wine and women. The Republican plank is more meaning and pointed.

The Constitution wisely forbids Congress to make any law respecting an establishment of religion; but it is idle to hope that the nation can be protected against the influence of sectarianism. While each state is exposed to its dominion, we therefore recommend that the Constitution be so amended as to lay the same prohibition upon the Legislature of each state, and to forbid the appropriation of public funds to the support of sectarian schools.

Well, Mr. Editor, if you could only see the practical working of our public school system in Texas you would see in the platform of the Republican party, if carried out, great relief. We hav in our Constitution ample means for an efficient free school to accommodate all. But no known Liberalist need offer to teach school in Texas. Sectarian teachers hav the entire privilege here. I hope you will think again and get a little better acquainted with the history of the South and West, and then advise your patrons,

R. D. G.

---

CLEBURNE, TEXAS, July 1, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: I hope to be able to pay for and read THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as I liv. I know I am a better neighbor, would be a better juror, and am satisfied I am a better citizen than I would hav been had I never seen it. I see you giv the Greenbackers a hearing in your paper, which makes me think nobly of you. Col. B. J. Chambers, the nominee of the Greenback convention is a neighbor of mine. He is a noble man, and a true friend of the laborer. I wish I was able to help you across the water. I fear neither of us will ever liv to see our party in the majority, but it is the only religion now worth living for. We are satisfied the other is a fraud, and three-fourths of those who advocate its doctrines know it. Accept my best wishes. M. M. HAZLER.

---

ODD FELLOWS' TEMPLE, ROCHESTER, June 27, 1880.

Mrs. Colby and Mrs. Smith: Upon me has devolved the pleasing duty of presenting to you the following preamble and resolutions unanimously adopted this evening by those who hav for the past three months been your attentiv listeners.

In presenting to you these proceedings testifying our appreciation of your services allow me also to ask you to accept the assurance of my personal regard and esteem.

Yours truly, A. L. CLACKNER, Ch. Com.

WHEREAS, It is the duty of all to hold in grateful remembrance the source of every spiritual and temporal blessing, and the occasion of the close of the public spiritual meetings in Rochester for the season reminds us forcibly of the agents through whom our knowledge has been increased and our hearts cheered, therefore

Resolved, That our thanks are especially due and are hereby tendered to Mrs. Amelia H. Colby, through whose organism hav been given the most conclusiv arguments of the truth of the Spiritual philosophy, and of the vast consolations it affords.

Resolved, That while clearly presenting the primary doctrines of Spiritualism, the controlling intelligences hav presented their individual views of history, philosophy, and systems of belief, at times at variance with general public thought, yet the frank utterances of advanced ideas hav commanded admiration, and the idea, whether accepted or not, hav given such food for thought as must tend to advance the hearer in knowledge and wisdom.

Resolved, That in addition to the thought-developing facts the spirit control has caused to be uttered the lips of the speaker, our souls hav been cheered and our hearts made glad by the inspiring and sweet music given to us by Mrs. Olive Smith.

Resolved, That both speaker and singer, whose powers are so happily combined, hav our best wishes for their health, happiness, and prosperity, and that their labors in the Spiritual vineyard may be crowned with abundant success, and when they hav preached the "glad tidings of great joy" to other people for a season, may they return to stand again upon the platform of truth in Rochester.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mrs. Colby and Mrs. Smith, and also furnished to the city press, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Banner of Light for publication.

Signed, A. S. CLACKNER,
R. D. JONES,
MRS E BUTTERFIELD,
M. PARKHURST,
S. O. WARREN,
W. W. PARSELLS,
Committee.

Too Much Independence Day.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, AND TO THE AMERICAN PUBLIC GENERALLY: Upon calling for my mail matter on the 5th of July, I found the U. S. post-office closed during business hours. Please inform me if, when the Fourth of July falls on Sunday, it is really a sin, and if the devil has anything to do with our celebrating American independence on that day. If so, the people had better abandon their Independence Day and appoint a day of prayer and humiliation for the ignorance and darkness that prevail in the Land of Freedom. INDEPENDENCE.

Saginaw, Mich., July 6, 1880.

New Auxilary Liberal League

No., 199, Rockford, Ill., Sec., G. W. Brown M. D. Instructions for forming auxiliaries are furnished free, in English or German, on application to

A. L. RAWSON. Sec., N. L. L.
19 Lafayette Place N. Y. City.

The New Era.

BY BERTIE STONE.

The bright sun of science, in his glorious beaming,
Is rolling back the clouds of ignorance's dark night;
The thoroughfares of thought with radiance are gleaming;
The old-time myths are fast fading from our sight.

Powerless, still'd forever, is the hammer of Thor;
Odin's thrilling harp is now forever unstrung;
Lost, too, the bright gleamings of Jove's thunderbolts of war;
The charming songs of Orpheus no more are sung.

Fair reason has dawned. In their graves they are now sleeping;
They're no longer to mortals in terror arrayed.
Freedom, angel-winged, in her onward race is sweeping,
And to-morrow Jehovah will rest in the shade.

The sturdy sons of freedom and freedom's fair daughters
Are fast marshaling their clans for the coming fight,
Slavery will be confined to the hell of waters;
Freedom's auroral dawn will succeed the dark night.

For ages man has been chain'd and cowl'd in deepest gloom,
But now the fair, fair Goddess of Liberty reigns.
Avaunt, ye fiendish priests; for the captiv souls make room!
No longer will man wear your most tyrannous chains!

The old era is dying, and number'd are its hour.
In the skies above truth's eddying lightnings play.
From the garden of Freethought we cull the bright flowers
From the heroes and martyrs that hav pass'd away.

Fast moldering into ruins are time-honored fanes.
Knowledge is sweeping onward in her race sublime
And fast breaking the indissoluble priestly chains
By the iconoclastic hands of Father Time.

Radford Furnace, Va.

Diversity.

Other people hav their faults,
And so hav we as well;
And all ye chance to see and hear
Ye hav no right to tell.

Aye! let us hold our tongue in check,
At all times given to running.
Nor take such pains to ferret out
Our neighbor's luck or cunning.

Some wear their blemishes outside
The real man or woman.
While others hide them, if they can;
Yet all alike are human.

The rose that bears the sharpest thorn
Is oftentimes the sweetest;
So stern, decisiv souls hav prov'd
The truest and completest.

And he who seems to shed no tears
Of sorrow for another,
May be the very one whose hand
First lifts the fallen brother.

Be not deceived by outside show;
Doubt not, too soon, a neighbor
Because he chooses in his way
To liv and love and labor.

Diversity of thought and mind
Shines in each path of duty;
Diversity is God's great plan
To make a world of beauty.

The Ballad of the Coming of the Rain.

When the morning swoons in its highest heat,
And the sunshine dims, and no dark shade
Streaks the dust of the dazzling street,
And the long straw splits in the lemonade;
When the circus lags in a sad parade,
And the drum throbs dull as a pulse of pain,
And the breezeless flags hang limp and frayed—
O, then is the time to look for rain.

When the man on the watering cart bumps by
Trilling the air of an old fife tune,
With a strange, sweet smile, and one shut eye,
Lost in a dream of the afternoon;
When the awning sags like a lank balloon
And a thick sweat stands on the window pane,
And a five-cent fan is a priceless boon—
O, then is the time to look for rain.

When the goldfish tank is a grimy gray,
And the dummy stands at the clothing store
With a cap pulled on in a rakish way,
And a rubber coat with the hind before;
When the man in the barber chair flops o'er,
And the chin he wags has a tell-tale stain,
And the bootblack lurks at the open door,
O, then is the time to look for rain.

MODESTY seldom resides in a breast that is not enriched with the nobler virtues.

LITTLE Nellie, a four year old, was punished by her mother the other evening, for some misdemeanor. The little one sat quiet a few moments, and then began scolding, winding up with: "Well, I s'pod never see the use of mothers! Always spanking little girls, and it don't do any good, anyhow."

A Legend of the Rhine.

Once upon a time there lived beside the Rhine a beautiful young lady. She had a lover who loved her, and whom she loved in return. But after he had wooed her—not one year, but three—he asked her to marry him; and she, anxious to show her power, merely answered,

"Wait."

"I hav waited three years," he said, "but at your bidding I will wait one more, just one more."

Then he went away and became a soldier, and praise of his bravery filled the land; but the lady was piqued by the thought that he had been able to leave her even for a year, and when he returned she determined to punish him, though all the while she loved him well.

He knelt at her feet, and took her hands in his, and said:

"Lady, I hav come back to claim you for my wife."

"Wait longer; a patient waiter is not a loser."

"I will wait two years longer," he said. "If I do not lose, all is well."

Then he left her again. She had hoped that he would plead for her, and that she would be forced to change her mind; but now he was gone—gone for two long years. How she lived through them she could not tell; but they passed, and again her lover was before her.

"I hav waited patiently," was all he said.

The lady yearned to cast herself into his arms, but pride was strong within her.

"Wait longer," she said.

"No," he answered. "This is the last time. If I wait now, I will wait forever."

At this she drew back haughtily.

"Then wait forever," she said coldly.

He left her without a word. And now her heart sunk in her bosom. She wept bitter tears, and repented in dust and ashes. When a year had gone by, she could bear her woe no longer, and sent her little foot-page to her old lover, bidding him bear this message, "Come back to me."

But the message the little foot-page brought was just this: "Wait."

Again she was left to her sorrow, and two years glided by; then once more she bade her page ride over the mountains to her lover's castle.

"Tell him I am waiting," she said.

The page rode away and rode back. He stood before his lady and doffed his cap, and repeated the message that had been given him: "The patient waiter is not a loser."

"He is punishing me," thought the lady, and for two years longer she remained in her castle. Her heart was breaking, her health failed; she knew death was near.

Again she sent her cruel lover a message.

"Tell him," she said, "that I am near my end, and that if I wait longer before I see him I shall wait forever."

The page returned, and stood beside his lady's chair. His eyes were full of tears; his head was bent upon his breast; he sighed and hid his face in his plumed cap.

The lady lifted her wan face.

"Speak!" she said. "The message!"

"Alas!" sighed the page; "I would it were a more tender one."

"Whatever it may be, speak!" gasped the lady.

"The only message that I hav," remarked the page, "is, wait forever."

"I am well paid in my own coin," said the lady. "At last I hav received all my own answers back."

In a little while she died, and they buried her in the old churchyard, with a stone at her head and a stone at her feet.

When spring came there was grass upon the grave, and there was also a new plant, strange to those who looked upon it; a plant with dark glossy leaves, that crept slowly but surely along, clutching fast every rough surface it met.

There had never been a plant like that on earth before. Now we call it the ivy, but this is what those who saw it for the first time said of it:

"It is the lady whom her lover bade to wait forever. In this form she is creeping toward his castle slowly but surely. So she will creep on until she reaches the heart she threw away."

Generations hav passed from earth. The castle is a ruin, covered with ivy, and the peasants will tell you that it has crept there from the lady's grave, point by point, over stone and rock, through the graveyard and over gates and fences. You can trace it if you choose, they say, but you do not try.

A LITTLE fellow, turning over the leaves of a scrapbook, came across the well-known picture of some chickens just out of their shell. He examined the picture carefully, and then, with a grave, sagacious look, slowly remarked, "They came out 'cos they were afraid of being boiled."

Wanted.

To sell a patent right. An improvement on Sewing Machines, A Reacting Electric Sandal, A Health and Life-Preserving Invention, which can be applied to all Sewing Machines without any change in the machines. An entire prevention of the suffering and death caused from operating sewing machines.

Apply to the patentee,
DR. C. A. VON CORT,
THERAPEUTIC HEALTH INSTITUTE,
6 25 • 168 n street, near 3d avenue, N. Y. City.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y.

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13 27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1880. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrines, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

The Gods and Religions

OF

Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructive work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.
tJan81.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK. EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington Ave. New York, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK are at liberty to CONSULT ITS AUTHOR in person or by mail FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY,
129 East 28th Street New York.

DR. KINGET'S NEW BOOK.

"MEDICAL GOOD SENSE"

—AND—

PRIVATE READING FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.

—EMBRACING—

SEXUAL PHILOSOPHY AND PHYSIOLOGICAL MARRIAGE.

Containing over 500 illustrated pages, well bound—price $2. It treats of the nature, causes, treatment of, and prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases. It unfolds some of the deepest mysteries of human nature in the generation and development of life, sexual relationship, marriage, parentage, and offspring, all viewed from a secular standpoint. It fully answers numerous questions, the delicate nature of which prevents thousands of women from asking. Any person sending $1.50 before the day of publication, this fall, will receive a copy, well bound, mailed free. Contents table sent free for stamp.

DR. T. R. KINGET ANNOUNCES

to his Liberal friends and patients throughout the United States and Canadas that he is, as usual, treating

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES,

and positively curing ninety per cent of those pronounced incurable. Having had over thirty years' experience, Dr. K. is meeting with remarkable success in curing obstinate cases of Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Nervous Debility, Impotency in both sexes, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Dysentery, Piles, Diseases of the Skin, Kidneys, Bladder, Genital Organs, and all diseases of women. Consultation Free. Address

T. R. KINGET, M. D.,
317 East 14th St., New York.
Questions for Invalids free.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall, this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person. Price 20 cents.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds.
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth: price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Thelogy, Etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULAIONS,

With an Introduction on the Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

LOVE VENTURES.

A rose tinted record of love in the tropics, with strange and startling adventures thereto belonging. Price, 50 cents.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2 00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.), $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

CANT is useful to provoke common sense.—Emerson.

FOR always the dullness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.—Shakspere.

TRUTH, crushed to earth, will rise again.
The eternal years of God are hers.

ERROR is mortal, and cannot liv forever; truth is immortal, and cannot die.—H. C. Pedder.

NOR love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st,
Live well; how long or short, permit to heaven.
—Milton.

ERROR is only to be effectually confounded by searching deep and tracing it to its source.—Sir John Herschell.

ONE by one the thinkers of the great world are giving up the dogmas and superstitions of the past.—Elmina D. Slenker.

I KEEP the subject before me constantly till the first dawnings open, by little and little, into full light.—Sir Isaac Newton.

THE grand result of human wisdom is only a consciousness that what we know is as nothing to what we know not.—Sir Wm. Hamilton.

NERI said you were good-for-nothing vermin; but what then? An ass may bray a good while before he shake the stars down.—George Eliot.

A LIE should be trampled on and extinguished wherever found. I am for fumigating the atmosphere when I suspect that falsehood, like pestilence, breathes around me.—Carlyle.

NO REAL greatness can long co-exist with deceit. The whole faculties of the man must be exerted in order to noble energies, and he who is not earnestly sincere, livs but in half his being, self-mutilated, self-paralyzed.—Coleridge.

THE great principle and foundation of all virtue and worth is placed in this, that a man is able to deny himself his own desires, cross his own inclinations, and purely follow what reason directs as best, though the appetite lean the other way.—Locke.

THEN let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that;
That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
May bear the gru and a' that.

For a' that and a' that,
It's cunning yet for a' that,
That man to man, the world o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that.—Burns.

IT is not so much a need that we be positiv in believing this or that, concerning matters about which men may differ, but that we shall be positivly true to the truth that is in us, true alike in our assent and our dissent, without disguise or shuffling. In honest doubt we must be positiv in our refusal to affect or pretend.—Christian Register.

IT is as difficult to keep great minds tied down to unprogressiv creeds as it would be to keep grown-up boys and girls in baby-jumpers. Enlightened natures are as capable of making their own religion as their own laws; that is, of making its tenets conform to the natural outgrowth of their religious feelings as they become more expanded and enlightened.—Graves.

FOLLOWING out the idea conveyed by Plato's definition of man as "the hunter of truth," the pursuit is the main consideration, the success comparativly unimportant. The disposition to think for ourselves, even if it fails in the realization of its brightest expectations, is at least a sign of manliness, while it also indicates a commendable appreciation of intellectual freedom.—Pedder.

ALL Christian professors, when they first commenced to read the Bible, doubtless found many things in it which shocked their moral sense, did violence to their reasoning faculties, and mortified their love of decorum. But a perseverance in reading it, through the force of habit and education, has finally reconciled their minds to those immoral lessons, and blinded the judgment, so that they are not now conscious of their real character and deleterious influence on the mind.—Graves.

YOU may sometimes talk with the gravest and best citizen, and the moment the topic of religion is broached he runs into a childish superstition. His face looks infatuated and his conversation is. When I talked with an ardent missionary and pointed out to him that his creed found no support in my experience, he replied, "It is not so in your experience, but it is so in the other world." I answer, "Other world! There is no other world; God is one and omnipresent; here or nowhere is the fact."—Emerson.

FRANCE is far ahead of America in Liberal thought, and if she ever adopts a new religion it will be as far in advance of the present Christian mythology as that is ahead of the early Christian faiths and practices, and of Christ himself, who not only demanded the death of his enemies, but desired that they be brought and slain before him that he might witness their dying agonies and enjoy their dissolution, as was customary in those ancient and barbarous ages of savage cruelty and heartless hate.—Elmina D. Slenker.

WE are laying the foundations of the grand temple of the future; not the temple of all the gods, but of all the people, wherein, with appropriate rites, will be celebrated the religion of humanity. We are doing what little we can to hasten the coming of the day when society shall cease producing millionaires and mendicants, gorged indolence and famished industry, truth in rags and superstition robed and crowned. We are looking for the time when the useful shall be the honorable; when the true shall be the beautiful, and when reason, throned upon the world's brain, shall be the king of kings and God of gods.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

THE earthquake was the original shaker.

THE little peach catches the early market.

A JEALOUS man always finds more than he looks for.

THE man who was stage struck had the driver arrested.

MOST people are like eggs—too full to hold anything else.

UGLINESS, after virtue, is the best guardian of a young woman.

THE smaller the husband the bigger the bundles his wife makes him carry.

ALL the world may forsake an author, but vanity will never forsake him.

YOU can kick a bush in any county of Ohio and out will jump an office-seeker.

OUR ancestors, the monkeys, couldn't hav been so ignorant after all. They were all educated in the higher branches.

"Do eagles giv milk, mother?" asked the boy. "No, my son; what made you think so?" "Because I've heard of the eagle's scream."

THE men who pack the little boxes of figs hav wonderful memories. They never forget to put the wormy fruit at the bottom of the box.

No "corned" man has any business in a crowded horse-car. It makes no difference whether the trouble is in his feet or in his head.

A LEADING elocutionist once said to a young preacher: "I can do nothing more for you. All that you need now to make you a power is some great sorrow."

SCIENTISTS claim that smoking injures the eyesight. But this is not true. The boy with a stump of a cigar in his mouth can see his father ten squares away.

IT is a nice moral question whether the underwriters ought to pay insurance on canal boats which recklessly set sail without nailing a horseshoe to the stern-post.

WHY is a cow's tail like the letter F? Because it's the end of beef. Here is another quite as bad: Why is an egg like a colt? Because it is not fit for use until it is broken.

SOME one observed to M. de L., who was about to wed a girl of seventeen, that he was rather old. "I am old enough to do for both of us," gallantly said the old gentleman.

DON'T despise a woman because she can't drive nails or hang pictures. If you want to discover your own weak points, just try to carry a 6x4 mattress down a narrow, winding stairs.

How doth the busy little fly
Improve each chance to light
Upon the tip end of your nose
And drum with all his might.

To educate young ladies is to let them know all about the ogies, the omenies, the ifics, the tics, and mistics, but nothing about the ings, such as sewing, darning, washing, baking, and making pudding.

A PHILADELPHIA clerk, who was somewhat smarter than his employer, was heard to remark the other day: "Thank fortune, the boss has stopped advertising for the season. Now we will hav a rest."

IT is said that a minister in a country kirk in Scotland stopped in the course of his sermon to ask a member who was deaf, "Are ye hearing, John?" "Oh, aye," was the response, "I am hearing, but to verra little purpose."

THE average person speaks about one hundred and twenty words a minute. This estimate is considerably short of that required when the speaker has a trunk-lid fall on his head while he is hunting for a sleeve-button.

"WHAT are you doing out there, my daughter, in the night dew?" said the kindly old gentleman on the piazza. "Practicing fencing," was the sweet reply as she leaned over the pickets till her face was dreadfully close to William's.

A GERMAN citizen of Hoboken was informed that a lady had called to see him in his absence. "A lady," he mused aloud, "a lady." Upon an accurate description he suddenly brightened up and added, "Oh, dot vas no lady; dot vas my vife."

SOME admiring poet said of his best girl, "Upon her face a thousand dimples smile for me." Which only adds more emphasis to the adage, "Love is blind." How like the mischief a girl would look with a thousand dimples on her face! The poet must hav meant freckles.

A TRAVELER was badly hurt in a railroad accident—two ribs broken and other injuries. He went to the office of the company to complain. "What," cried the office clerk, "you want to raise a row about so small a matter? Not a month ago twelve of our passengers were killed and we didn't even hear a word of complaint from any of them."

A FAIR and buxom widow, who had buried three husbands, recently went with a gentleman who in his younger days had paid her marked attention to inspect the graves of her dear departed. After contemplating them in mournful silence, she murmured to her companion, "Ah, James, you might hav been in that row now if you had only had a little more courage."

A GENTLEMAN and his wife, with two little girls, evidently twins, and about three years of age, are seated at one of the tables in a dining-room waiting for their breakfast to be brought to them. One of the little girls, who had been intently observing what was passing, suddenly turned to her sister and said, "Why don't papa say drace?" The reply was, "They ain't dot any Dod in Washington."

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. " | 2 |
| 32. | The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 0. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 2 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Scieta. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's | |
| 101. | Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117 | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New Age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 3 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 1 |
| 139 | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D., | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off: on five dollars' worth, 40 off: on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, 40

Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, 40

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

The Church and Education, On the Religious Education of Children, 5

Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. 10

Sold at this office.

FOUNDATION STONES.

A Volume of Sermons
BY GEORGE CHAINEY.
Handsomely bound in Cloth. Price, $1.00.

PAMPHLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Heads and Hearts. | 5 cts |
| Iconoclasm. | 5 cts |
| Ecclesiastical Lynch-Law. | 10 cts |
| All four will be sent post-paid for | $1.00 |
| Card Photographs of Mr. Chainey | 20 cts |
| Cabinet " | 40 cts |

Address G. C. SMITH
129 Main St., Evansville, Ind.

Your sermons stir me like trumpets. Iconoclasm is the best sermon ever delivered in an American pulpit.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00: twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00 Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

LECTURES OF
R. G. INGERSOLL.
THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

Imperial, or large size..... 40 cents.
Photo, or card size..... 20 cents.
Life-size lithograph, 21x27..... 50 cents.

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25,

Address D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 30. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, July 24, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A LITTLE girl in church, after the contribution plate had been passed, complacently and audibly said, "I paid for four, mamma! Was that right?"

LIFE is a pack of cards. Childhood's best cards are hearts; youth is captured by diamonds; middle age is conquered with a club, while old age is raked in by the insatiable spade.

THERE are said to be now 170,000 Germans in London. An immense immigration has taken place since the war. The ruthless conscription and tyrannical government of the Fatherland sends thousands of her sons abroad.

THE effect of the expulsion of the Jesuits from France is likely to promote their influence, inasmuch as it will so widely distribute them. Scarcely a day passes but we read that a detachment of them has settled in some new field.

AT a camp-meeting a venerable sister began the hymn, "My soul be on thy guard, ten thousand foes arise." She began too high. "Ten thousand," she screeched, and stopped. "Start her at five thousand!" cried a converted stock broker present.

KING STANLEY, the ruler of all the gypsies in in this country livs in the midst of a settlement of his people near Dayton, Ohio. His daughter, who was to become queen at his death, has lost her heritage by eloping with a man who was not a gypsy.

AT the recent examinations of the University of Bologna, a young lady received her diploma of doctress, surpassing the students of the other sex in anatomy, physiology, and chemistry. At the University of Turin a fair girl graduate obtained a similar degree of success in law.

THE English Parliamentary oath is no older than the days of Queen Elizabeth, and was instituted as a safeguard against Roman Catholic conspirators. The act by which the oath was made obligatory is entitled, "An Acte for the Assurance of the Quene's Majesties Royal power over all States and subjects within her dominions."

THE Roman Catholic Western Watchman remarks that cremation and divorce are the offspring of Protestantism, and that Protestantism itself is the offspring of paganism. Then, according to this Catholic authority, Protestantism and Catholicism hav precisely the same parentage, for the Catholics certainly hav little or nothing but what they borrowed from the pagans.

THE minister stopped at a house on the south side last week, and sought to improve the time by giving an eight-year-old boy an instructiv lesson in morality. "My boy," said the minister, "I hav lived forty-five years and hav never used tobacco in any form, nor told a lie, nor uttered an oath, nor played truant, nor—" "Gimminy crickets!" interrupted the boy, "ye ain't had any fun at all, hav ye?"

"WELL, Father Brown, how did you like the sermon yesterday?" asked a young preacher. "Ye see, parson," was the reply, "I havn't a fair chance at them sermons of yours. There's old Miss Smithie, Widow Taff, 'n Rylan's darters 'n Nabby Birt 'n all the rest sitting in front of me with their mouths wide open a swallerin' down the best of the sermon, 'n what gets down to me is putty poor stuff, parson; putty poor stuff."

THE Louisville Courier-Journal, one of the demmy organs that imagines the North hates the South, says that the Republican ticket is: For President, Hate; for Vice-President, Hate; for platform, everlasting hate. As usual, this isn't true; but nobody can deny that this is the Democratic ticket:

For President, the Offices (with a big O).
For Vice-President, the rest of the Offices.
For Platform, Everlasting Offices.

THE Dunkers are about to establish a clothing store at Ashland, Ohio, where all the brethren of their persuasion will be able to procure garments of the proper pattern prescribed by the authorities of the church. They consider it a solemn duty to wear these clothes, and it is a part of their religion to hold on to the fashion which their ancestors hav handed down. For this they think and claim that they hav spiritual command. They consider that they are not serving God properly if they wear clothes of the cut and style worn by ordinary worldly people.

BY the sudden illness of Bishop Simpson's wife, and his consequent return to Philadelphia, his official visit to China and Japan is indefinitely postponed. He was to have presided at four mission conferences, the first of which is set down for August 12th, at Yokohama, and the last for October 28th, at Foochow. These conferences will hav to do the best they can without the bishop. As soon as Bishop Simpson found he could not go he telegraphed to Bishop Harris, in this city, to send some other bishop. This, however, was impossible, as no other bishop could make arrangements for so long a journey in time for the steamship, which was about to sail. Meantime Methodism in this country will enjoy the service of Bishop Simpson in proportion as the Celestials and the Japs are deprived of them.

AT a recent meeting of the Dulwich (England) College Geological Club, Mr. B. G. Jenkins read a paper "On the Origin of Waves of Cold." The object of the paper was to show the very remarkable effect of the planet Venus upon the earth. Many years ago the Astronomer Royal proved that the disturbing effect of this planet was so great that the earth was materially pulled out of its obit. Mr. Jenkins shows that it is to this disturbing action we must look for an explanation of the cold waves which roll through the atmosphere on an average every eight years—as in 1829, 1837, 1845, 1855, 1860, 1871, 1879—and that for the next forty years the temperature will be below the average, as it has during the past forty years been above the average. With regard to high temperature, he stated that for the last fifty years a heat wave has been observed to pass over the earth every twelve years, nearly and contemporary with the arrival of the planet Jupiter about perihelion, and that we are on the eve of the heat wave.

A CORRESPONDENT from Norwich, Conn., sends us the following concerning a Bible believer in that town:

As a devout biblical student, most gloriously drunk upon one of our public streets, was clinging to a post for support and relieving his stomach of its fiery contents, a philanthropic stranger accosted him:

"My friend, what is the matter? You seem to hav been imbibing firewater rather freely."

"Of course I hav," he replied; "and why should I not? I'm a consistent follower of the Bible, and am carrying out its divine injunctions."

"What do you mean? The Bible don't require you to get drunk and make a beast of yourself in this manner."

"Yes it does, sir. Guess you don't attend Sunday-school and read the Bible, or you'd know better. Go home and read the twenty-seventh verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of Isaiah, where it—hic—says, 'Thus saith the Lord God of hosts, the God of Israel—hic—Drink ye and be drunken and—hic—spew;' so here goes for the Lord God of Israel," said he, as a fresh torrent of benzine spouted from his mouth.

THE following list of the untaxed property in the city of New York is from the Tax Commissioners' books:

| | |
|---|---|
| United States Property | $10,294,500 |

CHURCHES.

| | |
|---|---|
| Protestant Episcopal | 9,032 677 |
| Baptist | 2.059.100 |
| Congregational | 354,450 |
| Hebrew | 1,701,950 |
| Lutheran | 456 450 |
| Methodist | 2,404 225 |
| African Methodist | 84,150 |
| Presbyterian | 5,844,900 |
| Reformed Presbyterian | 52,700 |
| United Presbyterian | 42,500 |
| Reformed Dutch | 2,759,100 |
| Roman Catholic | 6,001 400 |
| Unitarian | 765,0. 0 |
| Universalist | 374,000 |
| City Missions | 498,950 |
| Public schools | 6,634,260 |
| Engine houses | 1,108,875 |
| Station houses | 1,405,050 |

CITY REAL ESTATE.

| | |
|---|---|
| Markets | 2,287,900 |
| Piers | 9,662,863 |
| Hospitals | 2,533 000 |
| Parks | 84,131.300 |
| Private Hospitals | 6,018.147 |
| " Dispensaries | 153,850 |
| Schools (private-charity) | 3,609.650 |
| Libraries | 1,729.750 |
| Academies | 850 000 |
| Colleges | 1 515 300 |
| Asylums and Reformatories | 6,639 225 |
| Prisons and Courthouses | 7,206 555 |
| Cemeteries | 1,278 570 |
| Croton Aqueduct | 2 806 700 |
| Corporation property | 1.056 550 |
| Miscellaneous | 2,477.750 |
| Total | $185.861,337 |

RESUME.

| | |
|---|---|
| United States property | $ 10,294,500 |
| City " | 125 472,268 |
| Private " | 17 663 017 |
| Church " | 31,431 552 |
| Total | $185,861,337 |

THE London correspondent of the New York Times has this to say: "If the friends and foes of Mr. Bradlaugh, the member for Northampton, had entered into an alliance to advance his personal interests and make him the most famous person in Great Britain, they could not hav done more than they hav done. They hav played his game all the time. It is difficult to say who has been his greatest friend—Mr. Gladstone, the Premier, or Sir Stafford Northcote, the leader of her Majesty's Opposition. Mr. Bradlaugh is the proprietor and editor of a newspaper called the National Reformer. "We never at any time previously to the present excitement," he said to a friend of mine, "sold more than 12,000 copies a week; our circulation has now gone up to 200,000." This being the case, Mr. Bradlaugh, from a position of comparativ impecuniosity, rises to one of affluence, and a mere political outsider the other day, he is now one of the foremost men in England. Determined still further to advance his cause, one Henry Lewis Clarke has issued a writ against him for $2,500, the penalty prescribed by act of Parliament for sitting and voting in the House of Commons without having subscribed the oath of allegiance in accordance with 29 and 30 Victoria, chapter 19. Every time Bradlaugh votes, Clarke says he will sue for the penalty. The Times the other day expressed regret that Mr. Gladstone, in his resolution permitting Bradlaugh to affirm, did not make it conclusiv and without appeal, instead of leaving the legal point an open question. It is certainly a pity that the subject should be transferred from Parliament to a court of law. The action will not be tried before the end of the year. Bradlaugh has placed himself in the hands of Mr. George Lewis, the well-known London lawyer. It is said, on sound authority, that supposing the case should go against Bradlaugh, the queen has power to remit the penalties, so that anyhow the government is master of the situation, which makes it all the more regretable that the Premier has not saved the country the expense and waste of time involved in unnecessary litigation. The cause will be tried in the Queen's Bench division of the High Court of Justice. Mr. Labouchere says that the plaintiff, to hav any locus standi, must prove that when Bradlaugh affirmed he was not a Quaker nor a Moravian, the members of which set are permitted to affirm. The onus probandi rests with the plaintiff, and unless Mr. Bradlaugh has specifically stated that he did not belong to either of these denominations when he affirmed, it is difficult to see how it is going to be proved that he did not. Labouchere and Lewis are friends, and it is possible that these suggestions indicate the line of Bradlaugh's defense. "The mere fact," says his colleague and champion, "that Bradlaugh's published opinions are not those of either Moravian or Quaker is no evideace that he is not a member of one or the other." The very first division in which Mr. Bradlaugh registered his name was for a new writ to be issued for Dewsbury, where the seat had become vacant on petition for bribery and corruption. Those who know Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, his publishing colleague and friend, declare that the bare suggestion of impropriety in that partnership is a gross and infamous scandal. The lady is a comely woman and married.

Events of the Week.

THE Egyptian obelisk arrived in this port on the 19th.

PETER COOPER has been dangerously ill of late, but is slowly recovering.

THE lightning struck and killed three men at Louisville, Ky., on Saturday last.

THE Paris editors are at their pistol pranks again. No less than three duels took place among them in one day recently.

THE town marshal of Canfield, O., was murdered by a party of roughs on the 17th.

GOLD has been discovered in several localities in the northern part of this state.

CHASTINE COX, who murdered Mrs. Hull in this city some time ago, was hanged on the 17th.

FREE icewater fountains are to be established at once in the tenement-house districts of this city.

THE mortality among children in this city, owing to the long-continued hot spell, is still alarmingly great.

WESTON has accepted an offer of $5,000 to beat the best six days' record. The walk begins at Providence, R. I., on August 2d.

AT Lincoln, New Mexico, a short time ago, three men were lynched by a mob, one each night for three successiv nights.

A WOMAN in Hoboken, N. J., recently committed suicide in order that she might be with her four children who had recently died.

SEVERAL Cuban patriots, including the revolutionary Minister of War, were recently captured and massacred by the Spanish forces.

SEVERAL large oil tanks near Bradford, Pa., were recently struck by lightning and set on fire. Much damage was done and one life lost.

A PRIEST in France, aged ninety-three, was recently converted to Protestantism; and soon after married a Protestant lady aged thirty-three.

A VIOLENT wind and rain storm passed over Camden county, N. J., on the 16th. At Chester thirty-five houses were unroofed, and one man was killed.

SEVERAL children hav been kidnapped in this city and Brooklyn recently. Child-stealing is becoming too common, and a few kidnappers ought to be made examples of.

IT is announced that Peru and Bolivia are to coalesce as one nation. Chili, which now threatens to bombard Lima, Peru's capital, has proved too strong for both nations.

ROCHEFORT, the amnestied communistic editor, is back in Paris, and has started a new radical journal, of which nearly two hundred thousand copies were sold on the first day of its publication.

AN explosion occurred on the 15th in a coal mine at Risca, England, by which a hundred and twenty miners lost their lives. In 1860 one hundred and forty-five persons were killed in a similar manner in the same mine.

DR. TANNER, the faster, is now well along in his fourth week without food. He appears to be in better condition than during the first week of his great fast, and bids fair to accomplish his self-imposed task and liv to tell of it.

THE East River suspension bridge is slowly approaching completion. The buildings in the way of the approaches hav been torn down, and it is the intention to finish the approaches before winter. The roadway of the bridge will be completed as soon as the steel and iron for it can be manufactured.

THE British Islands were visited last week by one of the most destructiv storms on record. Several persons were killed by lightning and drowned by the floods caused by the heavy rainfall, as were also whole flocks of sheep and herds of cattle. Many houses were swept away, and railway traffic in many places was entirely suspended. At Tavistock a coal mine was flooded by the overflow of a river, and several miners were drowned. Hundreds of acres of land are submerged, and in many places the only means of communication is by boat.

Prof. J. H. W. Toohey on Our New Work.

CONCLUDED.

THE GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES. By D. M. Bennett. In two volumes. Volume I. New York Liberal and Scientific Publishing House. 1880.

Another phase of Hebrew polytheism is brought to mind by Mr. Bennett's reflections on the age and history of "the Holy Ghost." He says, "The third person in the Christian Trinity is a comparativly modern one, . . . . and it was not until the New Testament was written that his name appeared" (p. 581), adding such historic details as hav been reported of the doings of the Ghost. Later reading, however, seems to hav convinced him that the Holy Ghost belonged to the family of the ancient Semitic gods, and he givs the larger part of chapter xiv of 2d Esdras to show the conditions required of the "writing medium" of that day before "the Holy Ghost" could come into rapport and effect "a spiritual control." But the most astonishing part of the narrativ is reached at the 22d verse, where Esdras informs the Lord that "the Holy Ghost" can be sent "into" him, when he (Esdras) "shall write all that hath been done in the world since the beginning." An immense contract for one author, but then he had five aids, and they were to work hard for forty days and eat bread at night. The noticeable feature, however, of this proposed partnership between Esdras and the Lord is that then, as now, "the ghosts," "holy" and less holy, are professionally inclined to get "into" and take possession of the human body without regard to the proprieties of sex or the consent of the owner. In later times, however, and in the gospel of John in particular, "the Holy Ghost" has so far improved in function and character as to be the synonim for the "comforter" of Jesus. His personality may be questionable, but the fact that he comes direct from "the Father," and is "the spirit of truth," shows conclusivly he is still a member of the heavenly family and a factor of that plural unit known in all religions as characterizing the polytheistic.

Conventionally, however, Mr. Bennett is correct in making the "Holy Ghost" modern, as "the Christian Trinity" of "Father, Son, and Holy Spirit," is of the New rather than the Old Testament, while "the Holy Ghost" of Esdras is in the Apocrypha, and "belongs to neither dispensation" where Theodore Parker was wont to place the blank leaves in the Bible. Protestant divines, rather than Vatican authority, is responsible for this isolation of fourteen of the most suggestiv books in the Bible, for a brief but comprehensiv account of which see pages 645–647.

"The Monotheism of the Semitic races" in ancient and modern times, therefore, is a Christian fancy rather than a historic fact. That the number of "the gods" hav diminished in the pantheons of the Semitic races is conceded, but the explanation of the phenomenon is in the interests of experience, not "revelation." Here, as elsewhere, the assumption of a "providential intervention" must pass for nothing, an attempt to reduce the number of the gods and introduce logical economy into the make-up of the celestial family. That it came into life and history with the growth of the logical faculty in the human thinking, is historic commonplace. That it was idiosyncratic and peculiar to the individual, rather than the race or the nation, is equally well known, but the stages of its progress, and the particular circumstances helping to make it the rallying cry for religious reform, are not so well understood. It may hav been seclusiv or exclusiv in its beginnings, assuming the purely personal and esoteric form, or, expanding into warmer controversies, became iconoclastic and revolutionary, but in either case it utilized, unitized, and harmonized its central conviction into all its outlooks and relations. In the genesis of the individual, as of the tribe, there was an exodus to make and a desert to inhabit—silence and solitude following revolt and emigration. Truth, however, will be its own Nemesis, and the new life will grow according to its affinities, to the honor of the truth seeker and "for the healing of the nations." It may be the thought-life of Socrates, Plato, Confucius, Numa, Paul, Jesus, Mohammed, Bruno, Spinoza, or Rousseau, in the form of monotheism, Pantheism, or Atheism; but in any or all of these mental outlooks the reign of "the gods" is at an end; henceforth the question of "one god," all god, or no god is to be settled by the logic of events and the certainties of science. Individual preferences and sectarian predilections pass for little without the sectarist is a scholar; the court of his or her appeal, the uniformities of nature; and the witnesses to her verdicts, the verifications of experience.

Naturally enough the discussion of the monotheistic aspect of religion comes last in the volume. Over three hundred pages are given to a detailed analysis of its gods and the text-books supporting their miraculous doings, bringing to the front the results of the latest scholarship in this department of human effort, the whole making it wisely instructiv. The fundamental assumptions of Christendom are brought under review, and the pretensions of the earlier and later revelators are reconsidered in the light of modern research and discovery. Scholarly thinkers, like Rev. J. W. Chadwick, Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Rev. J. T. Sunderland, Prof. Francis W. Newman, Dr. Thomas Inman, W. R. Greg, and Lydia Maria Child, bear testimony against "the gods" and kindred superstitions. That most of them are Unitarians is only another way of saying they are moderns in their methods of interpretation; the impartiality of their analysis, no less than the liberalism of their conclusions, showing them to be superior to party bias and mere Christianism. They are not antichristian; neither are they Christian in the common acceptation of the term; but they are extra-Christian, and work in the fellowship of the spirit with Darwin, Vogt, Pouchet, Haeckel, Huxley, Wallace, Lyell, Lubbock, and all others who may cherish the belief that truth only is worthy the veneration of mankind. Their theism therefore does not appear in the extracts made by Mr. Bennett from their pages, and their presence in this volume only illustrates the growing truth that "free inquiry" is no longer confined to the "Freethinker," the "Infidel" and the non-religionist, but livs, moves, and has being wherever scholarship takes up its abode. Let the animus of their criticism be appreciated and inspire others to a kindred fraternity of effort; for, if the idea of Zoroaster is correct, the truth seeker par excellence should appear in the fields of inquiry and research "as the bee, collecting honey, and departing without destroying the flower;" let the subject matter be "the gods" or their opposits—the devils!

Three additional items enrich the volume, each to be appreciated by the bias or liking of the reader. The first is a likeness, the second a glossary, and the last an invocation to the universe. The first will be recognized and admired by all who hav known the author before the U. S. authorities took a fancy to his beard; and thousands who hav not as yet enjoyed that pleasure will desire a likeness of the man who dared to test the authority of a law that made the spy, the pimp, and the informer a governmental official; and the freedom of the press and mail traps for the manufacture of criminals and the punishment of independent thinkers. All honor to the man who dared to oppose so infamous a law! May his likeness be multiplied by admiring millions, until the barbarism by which he suffered is known no more in law. The second will be appreciated by the student of the Norse mythology, as it givs full definitions and explanations of the persons and places that appear in its literature. The last may surprise those who hav outgrown "the spirit of prayer" and no longer believe in "amen corners," but a little reflection may giv a new cast to old associations. In any event, the result will be individualistic, it may be idiosyncratic, because the chastened thinker, as well as the saddened sinner, in sinking to the level of the world's common sorrow, will find little, very little, to be thankful for; particularly when they are made to realize by the ever-returning experiences of daily life the presence of that wilful ignorance that must err "in thought, word, and deed," and suffer as surely as they err, without bringing relief or reformation; and yet there must be another and a more hopeful side to the drama to support the thinker and the toiler for better things.

This latter class may be men of "more heart" and less thought, and women of more feeling and less intellect, who continue to find life attractiv and nature sublime, notwithstanding "the ills that flesh is heir to;" but the explanation is as simple as the result is practical, and may be said in the few words that reports the fact that they hav learned the use of, and delight in the ministry of, "little things." This mission keeps them in active service and helps them to transmute the sorrows of the erring into discipline and education without once relying on the abstractions of religion or the control of the gods. The mystery of the "all-in-all" may overshadow them, but they liv, move, and hav a happy being only by acting on the principle, "Life is real, life is earnest!"

In this spirit the reader is expected to understand Mr. Bennett's invocation to the spirit of the universe, and sympathize with him practically if possible, and for the following among other reasons: (1) Because "the fear of God," or the dread of the gods, is no longer "the beginning of wisdom;" (2) Because the forces of nature that made fear at one time natural, and terror even possible, are now known to be ministering spirits in the never-ceasing efforts of nature to beautify the earth and make the family of man "healthy, wealthy, and wise;" (3) Because "the gods" and their "miraculous" disorders hav given place to the uniformities and certainties of organizing and organic laws, the knowledge of which makes science progressiv, humanity redemptiv, and reform the ministrations of the good, who know no devils but ignorance and the fruits thereof, no demons but selfishness and hypocrisy, and no "hell" but the torments of a self-accusing mind.

For these discoveries into the "nature of things," and the hopes they justify for the future of all men, all women, even the unfortunate, Mr. Bennett has his word of thanksgiving and rejoicing; and considering his imprisonment, suffering, and sickness, his long separation from home joys and friendly amenities, he may be excused if, in the hour of his near deliverance from bondage and his nearer approach to the loved and loving of other days, he feels to forget his sorrows, forgiv, if possible, his enemies, and pray, "May we learn to perform the worthiest of all labors, to practice the greatest of all arts, making ourselvs and those around us happy!" For in such acts of kindness, goodness, and reforming sense, he and his friends will find a full compensation for the death of "the gods" and the decline of their religions; and it is more than possible, yes, it is probable, should the reader agree with him and them, that Mr. Bennett will find pleasure in knowing he can honestly and hopefully say, Amen.

The Godly Women of the Bible.—Continued.

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE 19TH CENTURY.

THE VIRGIN MARY.—CONTINUED.

Scene sixth transfers us to Matthew, for Luke omits entirely one of the most important "facts" in the immaculate-conception scheme of salvation, viz., the revelation to Joseph of Gabriel's visit to Mary, and her conception of the Holy Ghost; and we are indebted to Matthew, and Matthew only, for this essential information, and to him we will now turn, since the supposing commentators assert that this event took place immediately after Mary's return from her visit to Elizabeth, her condition having then become apparent to her betrothed. Here is the account (Matt. i, 18–25):

"Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost; then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us. Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife; and knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son: and he called his name Jesus."

There are many points here to be considered: 1. Who found that Mary was with child? and 2. How did the discoverer know that it was of the Holy Ghost or any other ghost? What were the specific tests by which that celestial fact could be proved? 3. When thus found with child before she and Joseph came together, who knew whether they had been together or not except themselves? How could Matthew or any other historian affirm it except upon the testimony of Joseph and Mary, and in such a matter were they to be believed any more than any other two persons who might be caught in a similar dilemma? 4. How could Joseph be minded to put her away privately, that is, give her a writing of divorcement (Deut. xxiv, 1) without bringing her before a magistrate, which latter was his duty according to the Levitical law (Deut. xxii, 23-24), as a betrothed damsel found in her condition was punished with death by stoning. 5. This she must have known when she so readily yielded to Gabriel. Not a likely story if she was a sensible girl. 6. The angel of the Lord, Gabriel it is supposed, appeared unto Joseph in a dream. How could he know it was an angel of the Lord, and that he could depend on that dream? 7. How could he be sure that Mary had not been unfaithful to him and flirting with some other beau? A dream, what a proof of fact! 8. No one but Joseph could testify to that dream, so on his testimony, and his alone, hangs the whole explanation of Mary's condition. What a credulous fool! 9. Should any espoused man in our day and generation dream such a dream and rely upon its veracity, what Christian would commend him for his trust in the Lord? What Christian of to-day would place any confidence in such a story, set going by a man-dreamer? Would not the dreamer subject himself to ridicule and suspicion of the most infamous nature, and risk being called a knave, or non compos mentis? 10. Who would believe the damsel's account, for upon her affidavit, and hers alone, rests the testimony that Gabriel appeared to her as related in Luke, for their seance was a private one, and no other evangelist records it but Luke? Therefore, 11. Upon his knowledge of the facts depends the whole truthfulness of the story of Mary. So, 12. This dream (supposed to have been related by Joe, recorded "according to St. Matthew") and this angel tete-a-tete of Mary's, recorded "according to St. Luke," are the only evidence in God's revelation to man of the virgin's miraculous conception, the birth of a savior, the incarnation of the Son of God, and all the long string of gospel monstrosities imposed upon the world for over 1,800 years by Catholic Jesuits and Protestant know-nothings.

The learned commentators, in whining, pitiful language, comment upon Joseph's feelings during this trying ordeal, as "he brooded over the matter alone in the stillness of the night, his domestic prospects darkened, and his happiness blasted for life, his mind slowly working itself up to the painful step. At the last extremity the Lord himself interposes a dream."

And then again, "when he took unto him his wife," after the matter was all amicably settled between Joe and the angel in a dream—for the sacred record does not intimate that the two lovers exchanged words on the subject, though the commentators declare that "without doubt they communed"—they overflow in ecstasy thusly: "With what deep and reverential joy would this now be done on his part; and what balm would this minister to his betrothed one, who had till now lain under suspicion of all others the most trying to a chaste and holy woman; suspicions, too, arising from what, though to her an honor unparalleled, was to all around her wholly unknown." And all these suspicions were driven away by a dream.

Scenes seventh and eighth in Matthew ii, and Luke ii, to which the reader is referred, open up the birth of Jesus. Matthew gives no particulars, but states when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, wise men came into the house, saw the young child with Mary his mother, fell down and worshiped him, presented their gifts, and departed. That Joseph was warned in a dream to go to Egypt, because Herod would seek the young child's life, that he went (scene ninth), had another dream to return, that he returned (scene tenth) as far as the land of Israel, but when he heard that Archelaus did reign in the room of his father Herod, he disobeyed his fourth dream, and went and dwelt in Nazareth.

Luke relates how Joseph had to go to Bethlehem, because he was of the house and lineage of David, to be taxed, with Mary his espoused wife great with child. Nothing said about her lineage. That when her days were accomplished she should be delivered. She brought forth her first-born son, wrapped him in swaddling-clothes, and laid him in a manger because there was no room for them in the inn. That shepherds who were watching their flocks by night (in that cold country on December 25th. Commentators admit that the date of the birth has been fixed too late, but say the time makes no difference) were apprised by the angel of the Lord that they should find this baby as represented in Bethlehem, that he was the Savior, Christ the Lord, that they came in haste, found all as reported, returned, etc.

If the history of Jesus, instead of Mary, was under consideration, scores of contradictions could be shown in the narratives of these two evangelists, who alone mention the birth of Jesus. Such evidence would be rejected in any court in Christendom. A few of these "apparent discrepancies" will be noticed. Matthew says nothing about the visit of Gabriel to Mary. Luke says nothing about Joe's dream or its sequel. Matthew says nothing about Elizabeth or Zacharias. Luke says nothing about Joseph not knowing Mary till after Jesus's birth. Matthew says nothing about shepherds. Luke says nothing about wise men. Matthew says nothing about an angel heralding the birth. Luke says nothing about a star going before them. Matthew says nothing about being born in a manger. Luke says nothing about being born in a house. Matthew says nothing about being taxed in Bethlehem. Luke says nothing about Herod seeking the child's life. Matthew says nothing about being taken to the temple and circumcised. Luke says nothing about Joe's dream and going into Egypt. Matthew says nothing about their being in Nazareth until after their return from Egypt. Luke declares them to have been in Nazareth before the child was begotten and born. In regard to the latter the learned divines say, "From Luke ii, 39, one would conclude that the parents of Jesus brought him straight back to Nazareth after his presentation in the temple," as if there had been no visit of the Magi, no flight to Egypt, no stay there. One might, from the other evangelist's way of speaking (Matt. ii, 23), equally conclude that the parents of our Lord had never been in Nazareth until now.

"Did we know exactly the sources from which the matter of each of the gospels was drawn up, or the mode in which they were used, this apparent discrepancy would probably disappear at once. In neither case is there any inaccuracy. At the same time it is difficult, with these two facts before us, to conceive that either of these two evangelists wrote his gospel with the other's before him," etc.

Is not this admission from Christians too damaging to need even comment from the pen of the ungodly?

Again, they are in doubt about this taxing business. "When there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed, and this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor," they declare "a very perplexing verse, inasmuch as Cyrenius appears not to have been governor for about ten years after Jesus's birth;" but they console themselves by adding that "candid critics, even of skeptical tendency, are ready to allow that there is not likely to be any real inaccuracy in the statement of our evangelist."

How candid those skeptical critics must have been, and how skeptically critical their candor! Why did not the divines give their names? What guessings, supposings, probabilities, perplexities, doubts, and demurrings over God's infallible word, that is said to be so plain that "wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein!" These divines, God's watchmen, though not "fools," seem to have a wonderful hard time in reconciling discrepancies where no "real" ones exist, and then fail to reconcile them, so there are as many "seeming" inaccuracies to-day as fifteen centuries ago. A wonderful God, to make a book and leave it in such uncertainty! Does no one err therein? Some of the learned inspired divines must be in error, since they disagree, and must lead the people into error. As, for example, in their demurrings in regard to the visit to Egypt and the presentation at the temple, they confess: "Nothing is more difficult than to fix the precise order in which the visit of the Magi, with the flight into and return from Egypt (Matt. ii), is to be taken in relation to the circumcision and presentation of Christ in the temple here recorded (Luke xi, 21–40). It is perhaps best to leave this in the obscurity in which we find it as the result of two independent, though, if we knew all, easily reconcilable narratives."

What business has a revelation on such an important subject and point to be left even in "obscurity?" Its validity should be established beyond a doubt. The eternal salvation of the world depends upon one point being incorrect. "My God, on what a slender thread hangs all eternal things!" In fact, these contradictions are so glaringly palpable that many of them they dare not attempt to reconcile, so crawl out under the plea of "obscurity."

[From the (London) National Reformer of July 4th.]

Parliamentary Jottings.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

Parliamentary jottings this week are, I am afraid, of an erratic character. I spent, during the first two nights after the issue of the last number of this journal, at least fourteen hours wandering more or less uncomfortably in the lobbies of the House. Then my jottings were interrupted by a summary arrest by the firm but exceedingly courteous Serjeant-at-Arms, and my capability for further jottings was restored by an equally sudden and more unexpected release. The order for my liberation found me in the Clock Tower in a gray suit, opening constantly arriving letters and telegrams, and I had to dress with great rapidity and hurry down to the House in order, if need be, to test Mr. Gorst's most ridiculous and monstrous proposition, that the doorkeepers should hav instructions to exclude me. There, however, turned out to be no necessity for my haste. The Speaker gave no encouragement to the outrageous suggestion.

On going down to the House on Friday I was touched beyond measure by the spontaneous outburst of popular feeling, and although then it seemed as though another and still graver conflict were about to take place, the sympathy cheered and strengthened me in my duty. Fortunately the tact and ability of Mr. Labouchere averted the immediate possibility of collision, and as the government agreed to giv an early day for the discussion of his motion to rescind the obnoxious resolution of last Tuesday, I at once gave way and determined that the House should hav fair opportunity for discussion before an irretrievably mischievous step was taken. I was exceedingly glad to avoid another scene on Friday, for my enemies had been so undignified that I feared lest the corruption of evil communications might render me too less considerate. I had not supposed that a brand-new peer of the realm, even if his name as a commoner had been Adderley, could be grossly ungentlemanly. Those who read my correspondence with Lord Norton, given in another column, will see that a nobleman is not necessarily a gentleman.

On Monday, one of the eccentric "barons" with whom the House of Commons is afflicted, a Baron de Ferrieres, a so-called Liberal, actually proposed that the House should assert its dignity by declaring my seat vacant. A little later a question to the Prime Minister, put by Mr. Wyndham, a Conservativ gentleman, who has not forgotten to be just to a foe, showed that the Government had determined to take the matter into its own hands and make some proposition. At the close of the questions Mr. Gladstone arose and gave notice of the resolutions which are printed in the "Summary." By the time this is in the hands of the reader the decision of the House will probably again hav been given, either for liberty or against it. In any event my duty is clear.

On Tuesday evening Sir Stafford Northcote distinctly announced that the Tory party, still unrepentant and unconvinced, intended once more, on Thursday evening, to challenge the right of the constituency of Northampton to choose its own representativ. If Sir Stafford Northcote succeeds, it means that the Tories claim to dictate to every English constituency, for that which is the case of Northampton to-day may be the case of any other constituency to-morrow. Mr. Gorst, the aspiring free lance of the front bench below the gangway, volunteered to aid the late Chancellor of the Exchequer in opposition to the wicked Bradlaugh, and it is said that the Conservativs are canvassing fiercely for votes. Why Sir Stafford Northcote moved my release and yet givs notice of an opposition which, if successful, must end in my re-imprisonment, is a problem too complex for this hot weather.

PERSONAL.

Now that the fierce struggle is over, and that I am really in full enjoyment of the right and privilege which the people of Northampton gave me on the day of the poll, I beg my friends not to mar this grand triumph by any undue words of exultation or ungenerous boast. If bitter bigotry and Tory malice hav been activ against me personally, there has been also honest, earnest piety, in despite of the foulest and most persistent misrepresentation, enlisted in the grand array on behalf of right. If some clergymen hav been cruel and unjust in language and conduct, there hav also been preachers who hav been most generous and kindly. Do not let our freethinking friends remember so much what we as a party hav done toward the result, as what has been done for us by religious men, notwithstanding the cry of heresy. If the heart of the great Nonconformist party had not been brave and just, the fight, instead of being so far over, would yet hav to be fought. The speeches of religious men like William Ewart Gladstone, John Bright, Henry Richard, and Charles Stuart Parnell—each representing a varying shade of Christian belief, and each a most earnestly religious man—must more than outweigh, and cause our friends to pass by, the rabid, raving, fanatical outpourings and deliberate misrepresentations which hav disfigured the parliamentary discussions on this subject. When the reader remembers that the very vilest misstatements and coarsest caricatures of my language and conduct hav been circulated to every member of Parliament, and that even some members of the House of Commons hav been reckless enough to invent for me and to attribute to me opinions which I hav never held and rough words which I hav never used, it makes worthy of the strongest praise the high-minded conduct of those Nonconformists in the House of Commons who hav declared for justice despite all.

The Religion of Science.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In order to make my position clear and plain to the common understanding, it is first necessary to state that science is that wise adaptation of means to ends that never makes any mistakes when its spontaneous action is not interfered with by the interposition of unnatural barriers. A stone let down from any hight would fall directly toward the center of the earth, the attraction of gravitation inevitably drawing it thither, while a feather would be tossed about by every breeze and current. But remove this barrier to its direct descent, and the feather would reach the earth's sur face as readily as the stone.

What should this teach all thinking minds but this: that law, universal law, is the only true object of respect, reverence, and worship? And the only way to do the same is to obey its teachings when recognized and clearly understood in any given direction.

Science knows no favorits. Any man, woman, or child may profess or believe this, that, or the other thing, but what would it profit them if they should thrust their hands into the fire? Would any amount of profession or belief save them from being burned or shield them from the smart, the penalty attached to violating the law pertaining to excessiv heat when it comes in contact with the human organism? Surely not.

Then is it not plain that the religion of science is the kind for us all to hav to save us from present suffering, to say least? And now is all the time we hav to deal with, for the past cannot be recalled, the future is uncertain, but the present will bring us true enjoyment and present peace if we bow down before the sacred shrine of truth as revealed in science or immutable law as fast as we come to recognize her demands—work and wait.

"But," says one, "to be happy to-day is not enough; we want to be happy to-morrow and in the future life."

Be it so. Is there any law pertaining to life that you do not already understand? If so, continue to search for its natural or normal action, and, when understood, reverently obey its injunctions, and to-morrow and all future time is yours to enjoy.

"But," says one, "I cannot always liv to enjoy these things."

Well, be this so. If you are made happy through obedience to the law of life while you do liv, is not that better than to only "stay" on the earth because you constantly violate the laws that govern the well-being of all sentient things? Surely you can giv but one answer.

But if at the close of life in the material you find that there is still a mental and spiritual consciousness, to say the least, would you not be more likely to enjoy that consciousness than though your life in the material had been a constant violation of the laws that govern and control universal being? Surely you can giv but one answer, and that an affirmativ one.

Accustomed as men and women are to look to the future only for happiness, instead of to the present, this view of things may perhaps look strange to some of you, but, on reflection, you'll be convinced that obedience to law to-day will bring true enjoyment. And if to-day, why not to-morrow and all coming time if we continue true to the light that immutable law carries with it to illuminate our pathway onward and upward? JULIA C. FRANKLIN.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1880.

What Objections to Christianity?

REPLY TO MR. MAIR'S THIRD LETTER.

MR. G. M. MAIR, Dear Sir: I will briefly review some of the points and positions in your third letter. You say, "Admitting the facts adduced to uphold your [my] thesis, what weight would they have against the truth of Christianity?" I should say, a great deal of weight. Christianity is held up to the world as being a supernatural system of religion, though gotten up less than nineteen hundred years ago, and that upon the divinity of its character the whole world depends for present and future happiness. The claim is stoutly made that it is a new discovery, a divine invention of the greatest importance to the whole world, the like of which was never known before. Now this claim is true, or it is untrue. If it turns out that it is not new, that the same ideas were entertained in the world not less than a thousand years earlier, and that they were devised by human beings, the claim of originality, newness, and divinity falls helplessly to the ground. Should you announce to the world that you were the inventor of a new churn, washing machine, or corn-sheller, and that you had produced something that the world had never known before, and that consequently you were the greatest inventor the ages had produced, and if afterwards it was found that your machine had been used in many places not less than a score of years before you announced your great discovery, and that thousands had seen it and availed themselves of it, your claim would not be worth a cent, and you would be classed among pretenders and false claimants. It is precisely the same with religious inventions. No matter how strong the claims set up that they are original and divine, if it is found they are old and traceable to human brains, the claim is of no more value than yours for your patent churn or washing machine. If it should even now be discovered that Robert Fulton was not the first man who propelled a boat in the water by steam, the honor of being the inventor of the steamboat must be taken from him. If it is proved beyond a question that Samuel F. B. Morse was not really the originator of the electric telegraph, his claim as inventor of it is not of any value. If other mythical gods had long before fallen in love with the daughters of men and got them with child, it is hardly worth while for Jehovah, or rather Jahveh, to claim he was the inventor of that process. If he had only followed in the footsteps of his predecessors we cannot accord him the honor of originality in that line. He must do something or invent something that they have not done or invented before we can consider him an original character.

In view of the proof I adduced that the belief that gods had sons, begotten of goddesses and human virgins, long before Christianity was thought of, it is not a little singular how you can still say, "I do not believe, and therefore cannot grant, nor can it possibly be proved from any premises, that Christianity was borrowed from preceding religions." The old adage, "There are none so blind as those who will not see," seems very applicable to your case. If I show you that the foundation doctrine of Christianity—an incarnation of deity begotten upon the person of an earthly female—pre-existed in other systems of religion, that its dogmas, rites, and ceremonies were not new, but had been held and taught by the advocates of older religions, and especially if you cannot show any dogma, rite or ceremony claimed by Christianity that was not believed in and enjoined by older religions, that is proof enough that Christianity is a borrowed system and that its claim for originality is wholly valueless. If you will uphold that claim it devolves upon you to show what the system possesses that really is original.

Your remark about coins, genuine and counterfeit, has just this much bearing on the case at issue: the later production, gotten up in semblance of something that was produced at an earlier period, must necessarily be the counterfeit. It is the hight of absurdity to claim that religious dogmas, gotten up three thousand years before our era, were counterfeits of those of a system not yet two thousand years old. It would be very untruthful to claim that the English system of government is a counterfeit of our American system, or that our Senate and House of Representatives are original conceptions of which the English House of Lords and House of Commons are copies. As our government is a copy or imitation of the best forms of government that previously existed in the world, so Christianity was a copy or imitation, in many respects, of pre-existing religions. It would be just as truthful to claim that our American system of government is divine and was handed down from heaven as that Christianity is divine and was devised above the clouds. It is equally untrue to say that any system of religion is all false, or that any is all true. There is no system so bad that it has no points good and true, and no system so true that it has not some error, superstition, and falsehood; and all are of human production. If some are better than others, it is because the men who devised them were superior in some respects and the attendant circumstances were favorable to a good result. There is no system of religion in the world that has not borrowed more or less from older systems, for there are none now in existence so old as those which existed before them.

While you admit that religious systems have borrowed from other systems, you seem at a loss whether Judaism borrowed from other nations or other nations from Judaism. This problem should not greatly trouble you, for it may he definitely settled that the Jews are far from being the oldest nation in the world. Admitting that the mythical story of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is truthful, it does not prove that the Hebrews were the original nation. Chaldea, the country in which Abraham was born, was certainly older than Abraham, and was, as is well known, a thickly populated and comparatively civilized country before he came into existence. Persia was doubtless a still older country, China is believed to be older still, while India, the home of the ancient Aryan race, is believed to be older than either. After Abraham moved into the land of Canaan, and came near starving out for the want of food, and went down into Egypt to get something to eat, he found it an old, populous, and civilized country, with a well-organized government. The stately pyramids, the marvel of the world, had then long been built, and the people there had at that time attained a far higher degree of art, literature, and civilization than the people of Palestine ever attained to or dreamed of. It is far more reasonable to conclude that the descendants of Abraham borrowed religious and political notions from the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Persians, and Hindoos than that those nationalities borrowed from the small, recent, obscure, and upstart nation of the Jews. As truthfully might we claim that the ancient Grecians and Romans borrowed their notions of religion, art, and literature from the people of the United States of America. It is admitted by the best authorities that Abraham of Chaldea and Zoroaster of Persia were contemporaneous, and that there was not much difference in the date of their time of existence, while others again hold that Zoroaster lived a thousand years before the time of Abraham. It is well known, however, that when Zoroaster lived Persia was comparatively an old country, powerful in military force, having a settled, well-organized government, with fixed notions of religion, law, literature, etc. The same remark will justly apply to Chaldea, Hindotan, China, and Egypt.

While you "must admit that a great many of the facts" I "adduce cannot be gainsaid," I cannot see the point in your saying in connection, "I insist that they are just such a spectacle as a student of the Bible might expect to see on lifting his eyes from its pages to survey a lost, rebellious, and yet conscience-terrified world." I do not see what grounds you have for insisting upon anything of the kind. Your remarks smack strongly of cant. Your seeing such grounds for insisting in that way after older existing facts were shown you, causes me to think you may possibly be a distant relative of the old lady who was always ready to insist that she had foreseen and foretold everything that had transpired. One morning her husband announced to her the startling information that the cow had eaten up the grindstone, but her answer was ready, as usual, "I told you so." So with you. When I show you how many gods begot sons in olden times, you insist that it is just what you expected—the spectacle is exactly what you were looking for.

We may not be able to settle which was the older, Buddha or the Jews, as a nation, but the probabilities are in favor of Buddha. The early history of the Jews is extremely mythical, and the stories of the Bible and of Josephus are very slightly sustained by contemporaneous history, while the early existence of the Buddhists is a fixed fact. The rock-cut temples of the Buddhists are very ancient. James Freeman Clarke, in his "Ten Great Religions," introduces the testimony of Fergusson (p. 10, Cunningham, Bhilsa Topes of India), who made a special and personal study of those monuments, and believed that more than nine hundred still remain, mostly within the Bombay presidency. Of these, he says many date back two centuries before our era. In India proper there are nearly a thousand more, some of them having an antiquity of five hundred years before our era. The Jews have no such proofs of antiquity as these. In fact, in all the small country they once inhabited, there is not a monument, temple, stone, ruins of architecture, or indication of any kind to give proof that such a people as the Jews ever occupied that country. Remains of Phœnician, Egyptian, Grecian, and Roman architecture are found there, but nothing Jewish. Josephus is hardly reliable authority as to whether Moses wrote the Pentateuch. He lived and wrote since the beginning of the Christian era, and he knew no more when and by whom the Pentateuch was written than we do now, and probably not as much. What he wrote of the early history of the Jews was from unreliable legends, and there are those who believe he drew largely upon his own imagination. The best Bible scholars, as Kuenen, Ewald, De Wette, Davidson, Greg, Chadwick, and others, find conclusive proofs that neither of the first five books of the Bible were written till five or six centuries before the Christian era, and consequently could not have been written by Moses, who is believed to have lived fifteen hundred years B.C. But more on this subject when the authenticity and divinity of the Bible are more directly before us. Allow me to say, however, that the consolation you derive from the mythical, allegorical story of the creation, the temptation, the fall, and the exploits of the big snake rests upon a very uncertain foundation indeed. It is highly probable that the Jews learned all their ideas of cosmogony from the Chaldeans while held by them as captives, and that that wonderful story about the Garden of Eden, where four rivers had their sources; where knowledge grew on trees in the form of fruit; where the fruit of another tree imparted eternal life; where snakes stood upright and spoke human language, was not written before that captivity. Allow me to say, also, that the serpent, as a symbol of cunning and wisdom, had a place in nearly all the ancient religions of the world, and this part of the Jewish allegory was doubtless borrowed from those older systems. To pretend that the pagan myths in any way grew out of the Eden story is highly absurd. It is like calling the son the parent of the father.

When you say "none of the religions or facts or myths" I adduced "can be traced with a shadow of proof to a time prior to this book of Genesis," you err greatly. The religions, literature, history, and art of Egypt, Chaldea, India, Persia, and China can with certainty be traced far back into antiquity, not less than three thousand years before our era, while the book of Genesis is only claimed to have been written fifteen hundred years before our era, and really was not written till nearly one thousand years after that time. If you hav given your assent and belief that Genesis is the oldest human history and human record, you are indeed laboring under a very great error. But more of this in its proper place as we progress with our discussion.

Let me say that the reasons which you assign why the story of Jesus should be believed to be true and divine—because the belief in him spread so rapidly and was so implicitly held—are not specially cogent nor convincing when compared with the rise and spread of other religions. Believers in Jesus were no more steadfast or positive than were the believers in Brahma, Ormuzd, Vishnu, Zoroaster, Osiris, Isis, Christna, Buddha, Confucius, Ishtar, Jupiter, Apollo, Mars, Mohammed, the Bab in Persia, or even Joseph Smith in our own country and time. Several of the religions connected with these real and imaginary characters rose quite as marvelously, spread as rapidly, and boasted as large or a larger number of adherents than can Christianity. There hav been far more believers in Brahma than both Jews and Christian. The believers in Zoroaster, Buddha, Confucius, Osiris, Baal, Astarte, Jove, Juno, Odin, and Thor have been far more than double the entire number of the believers in Jesus, and they have fully as strong proofs of divine wisdom, light, power, and protection as Christians can truthfully claim. Of course those who believed in Jesus, the same as with Christna, Buddha, and others, whether in the first, second, third, or subsequent centuries, assented to the claim that such a person had lived, but they knew nothing whatever as to the truth of the claim. They simply believed what interested people told them, as ignorant and credulous people hav done in all ages of the world. As you hint at contemporaneous historians corroborating the story of Jesus, and of governmental archives which solemnly preseve his alleged crucifixion, may I ask you to be more definite and quote your authorities. I am not aware of any historians contemporary with Jesus who corroborate his story, or of any governmental archives that have any record of his life or crucifixion. There was a passage interpolated into Josephus, believed to have been done by Eusebius, the father of Christian ecclesiastical history—so-called—in the fourth century, but the ablest and best writers who have given an opinion upon the subject pronounce the passage a forgery. If any archives can be produced relative to the crucifixion of Jesus I am certain they are also spurious forgeries. The only archives or allusions to the crucifixion of demigods refer to mythical characters like Prometheus, Christna, Iao, and others, who were believed in long before the name of Jesus was heard of in the world.

You affect not to know what I mean when I allude to the celebrated interview between the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary, but I can hardly think you sincere, especially as you almost immediately after quote the passage which says, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Now in the name of all that is reasonable and that pertains to common sense, does not all that necessitate an interview? And has it not become celebrated? In all candor and soberness I cannot see why you should object to the implication that the Holy Ghost, Jahveh, The Highest, or whatever the name of the father of Jesus may be supposed to be, cohabited with his mother. If the idea and language does not imply that very same, then language has lost its meaning. The only two imperfect hints which the New Testament gives of the interesting operation are found in Matthew and Luke. The first is said to be a dream which Joseph had after the event had occurred, in which an angel is said to have said to him, while dreaming, "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost." That from Luke, as quoted from you as above, was a vision on the part of Mary in which Gabriel told her about the interview to take place, though it is very sure that Luke was not there to report what was said. These are indeed two very slim passages on which to base such an improbable and impossible assumption as the begetting of a real living divine being. But if we have to accept the story, and believe that Jahveh or the Holy Ghost was the father of Jesus, we are left to conclude that the result was produced precisely as all similar results have been produced in trillions of instances before and since. No other process has ever been known, and probably none other is possible, by which a new being can be begotten; then what is the use of being squeamish about the matter, or in being shocked at the inevitable conclusion which must be arrived at? If the words "the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee" has any meaning it is precisely the one and only process by which generation takes place. If you ask us to believe the story at all, you must not deny us the privilege of believing the event to have occurred in the only natural and possible manner. If you say it did not so occur, will you please tell us just how it did take place? Your fling at the "Age of Reason" may not be very good argument, but it certainly is eminently very Christian. It has for years been among the most reliable of Christian weapons to throw slurs and odious epithets at the "Age of Reason" and its author. It is the only way in which they have been able to answer them. I am glad I have been able to read the "Age of Reason" without prejudice or bigotry. And let me say here, for the life of me, I cannot see anything more pure, sacred, or solemn in Jahveh begetting an offspring than in Vishnu, Osiris, Jove, Odin, and many others of the old gods, doing precisely the same thing. Will you please describe the difference?

I am well aware I was under no necessity of naming all the myths of gods who have begotten sons, but I threw in several for good measure, wishing you to have no grounds for complaint. You can discard a score or more of them if you are not pleased with them, and then a plenty will remain to establish the proof of our first thesis so far as gods begetting sons are concerned.

You seem to spurn the idea that Jesus was a demigod—half divine, half human; but how can you escape it, unless you insist that he was all human? You cannnot deny that his mother was human and that during the nine months of gestation and a few months afterward he drew his life and support from her. How then can you deny that all he obtained from his mother was human. Besides, did he not himself take the title of the "son of man?" Has he not been called the same for centuries? Have not theologians always said of him that he partook both of the divine and human nature. It seems to me you are more nice than logical in denying that he was a demigod, part divine and part human. Had he no human part? Was he exclusively divine and all from heaven?

You do not seem to like the religion of Buddhism. It is perhaps not my place to defend it; I regard it as one of the erroneous and superstitious systems of religion which men have devised and supported; but I cannot see that Christianity can justly asperse it. If Buddhists do believe that misery is an accompaniment of existence, they cannot be far wrong. I never knew of any existence but what had a good deal of misery blended with it. Did you? If they do hold that all men and animals brought into existence are the result of passion or desire, they are undoubtedly quite correct, and Christianity teaches nothing truer. I never knew of a man or animal that came into existence by any other means or incentive. Did you? If they do believe in an ultimate state of eternal rest and quiet, I insist that it is infinitely better and more happifying than the belief in endless and continuous torture in the flames of hell for the main bulk of the human race, which Christianity teaches. If the doctrines of Buddhism are repulsive to you I insist that those of Christianity are immensely more so.

In justice to this system of religion which you disapprove let me quote of its qualities from the Rev. James Freeman Clarke: "Buddhism has abolished human sacrifices, and indeed all bloody offerings, and its innocent altars are only crowned with flowers and leaves. It also inculcates a positive humanity, consisting of good actions. All its priests are supported by daily alms. It is the duty of the Buddhist to be hospitable to strangers, to establish hospitals for the sick and poor, and even for sick animals, to plant shade trees, and erect houses for travelers. Mr. Malcom, the Baptist missionary, says he was resting one day in a zayat in a small village in Burmah, and was scarcely seated when a woman brought a nice mat for him to lie on. Another brought cool water, and a man went and picked for him half a dozen good oranges. None sought or expected, he says, the least reward, but disappeared and left him to his repose. He adds: 'None can ascend the river without being struck with the hardihood, skill, energy, and good humor of the Burmese boatmen. In point of temper and morality they are infinitely superior to the boatmen on our Western waters. In my various trips, I have seen no quarrel, nor heard a hard word.'"

Mr. Malcom goes on thus: "Many of these people have never seen a white man before, but I am constantly struck with their politeness. They desist from anything on the slightest intimation; never crowd around to be troublesome, and if on my showing them my watch or pencil-case or anything which particularly attracts them, there are more than can get a sight, the outer ones stand aloof and wait till their turn comes. . . . I saw no intemperance in Burmah, though an intoxicating liquor is made easily of the juice of a palm. . . . A man may travel from one end of the kingdom to the other without money, feeding and lodging as well as the people. I have seen thousands together for hours on public occasions rejoicing in all ardor, and no act of violence or case of intoxication. . . . During my whole residence in the country I never saw an indecent act or immodest gesture in man or woman. . . . I have seen hundreds of men and women bathing, and no immodest or careless act. . . Children are treated with great kindness, not only by the mother but the father, who, when unemployed, takes the young child in his arms and seems pleased to attend to it, while the mother cleans the rice or sits unemployed by his side. I have as often seen fathers caressing female infants as male. A widow with male and female children is more likely to be sought in marriage than if she has none. . . . Children are almost as reverent to parents as among the Chinese. The aged are treated with great care and tenderness, and occupy the best places in all assemblies" (Ten Great Religions).

Now, my friend, though you may think it a dark, cold, and cheerless creed, please tell me where in all Christendom is found any better proofs of a good, happifying, sensible religion?

You reject the idea that the Christian devil was borrowed from the Ahriman of Persia and the Typhon of Egypt; but how can you escape it? The two latter were certainly believed in centuries before a Christian or Jewish devil was ever dreamed of. There is no other reasonable conclusion than that the younger system borrowed this devilish idea from the older. But more of this some other time.

I taken up so much room in replying to you that I must now only name the dogmas, rites, ceremonies, and sacraments which Christianity adopted from older systems of religion, leaving the proof of such as you demand for another occasion; or ask you to point out such as are devoid of proof. . I will say that the larger share of those statements are made upon the authority of Higgins' "Anacalypsis," Jones' "Asiatic Researches," Mrs. Lydia Maria Child's "Progress of Religious Ideas," and other standard works on oriental religions. In giving the points of belief of the ancients, I will adopt the language used on another occasion, though I repeat, in some instances what I have already said.

1. The birth of many of the saviors of the ancients were claimed to hav been pointed out by the stars.

2. Several of them were said to have been born in a stable and in a manger.

3. The births of a number of them were announced by angels to shepherds.

4. Wise men or magi were claimed to have visited them in their early infancy, and to have worshiped and made them presents.

5. The 25th of December was the birthday designated for several of them, and has been a special day for feasts and ceremonies in commemoration and in honor of the sons of gods for thousands of years.

6. The titles of the heathen saviors were much like those claimed for the Judean Savior. "The Most High," "the Lord of Life," "Holy Living God," "Son of God," "Mediator," "Savior," "Redeemer," "Redeemer of the World," "The Lamb of God," "the Ram of God," "the Holy Lamb," "the True Light," "the Sun of Righteousness," "True Light of the World," "Light of Men," "Guide to the Erring," "Advocate with the Father," are some among the great number of titles given to the pagan saviors.

7. The legend of the Savior being saved from destruction when all the other infants were killed—as in the time of Herod—was handed down from centuries before that date.

8. The retirement and forty days' fasting of the Savior is an ancient heathen legend.

9. The performance of miracles was attributed to nearly all the saviors, and greatly dwelt upon. Several raised the dead.

10. The older saviors had disciples, whom they led about over the country, whom they taught, and whose feet they washed.

11. They taught multitudes in the villages, on the highway, in the fields, and in the wilderness.

12. At the crucifixion of some of them, the sun was said to have been darkened and earthquakes to have taken place.

13. Several of the demigods were said to have descended into hell after their crucifixion.

14. The claim that they arose from the dead, from the grave, and from the sepulchre was accorded to a number of them.

15. The miraculous ascension into heaven was claimed for a part, at least, of the oriental saviors.

16. The doctrine of the Trinity is a thousand years older than Christianity.

17. The Holy Ghost idea came from India.

18. The belief in a devil originated in heathen lands.

19. The cross, as a religious symbol, was used hundreds of years before Christ, in India, Thibet, Egypt and other countries.

20. Immortality of the soul was first taught by pagans.

21. The personalized idea of the "word," or "logos," the creator, as used by St. John, was of oriental and Grecian origin.

22. Baptism by water was early practiced in India and Persia.

23. The Holy Ghost descending in the form of a dove is an ancient Eastern legend.

24. The sacrament of the Eucharist came from the pagans.

25. Anointing with oil was practiced from time immemorial.

26. The worship of demigods—as we have seen—was of heathen origin.

27. Belief in saints and the reverence of them date back many centuries before Christianity.

28. The doctrine of future rewards and punishments was first taught by pagans.

29. The belief in a great and final day of judgment originated in heathen countries.

30. The belief in the resurrection of the dead is much older than Christianity.

31. The belief in angels and spirits was held by many pagan nations thousands of years ago.

32. Fasting and prayer was of Eastern origin.

33. The power to forgive sin was taught by heathens.

34. A belief in bibles being the word of God existed in many pagan countries, and they have several bibles older than the Jewish book.

35. The "second birth" was first taught in heathendom.

36. Confession and absolution of sin were of pagan origin.

37. Monasteries and monks existed hundreds of years in central Asia before the era of Christianity.

38. The order of the priesthood long existed in all pagan countries.

39. Repentance and humility were enjoined by the ancients.

40. The efficacy of prayer directed to the gods was early taught in all heathen lands.

In view of the fact that the religions much older than Christianity—whose adherents were simply human beings—held to the existence of a god or gods, that they frequently begat offspring, sometimes with heavenly females and sometimes with earthly virgins, if Christianity is a divine system devised in heaven and by the God who rules there, three convictions impress themselves strongly upon the mind:

The first is that God must lack exceedingly in originality and invention to be obliged to make use of the same old and crude notions which ignorant pagans had gotten up hundreds of years earlier.

The second conviction is that his most favored children were equally sterile in invention and ingenuity that they were compelled to gather up and array themselves in the cast-off garments of the despised heathen.

(Concluded on page 472.)

[From the Winsted Press.]

A Rational View of Jesus.

Editor Winsted Press: Pardon me for again troubling you and your readers with my penumbral cogitations, but as the Press is a religious paper I suppose a little Sunday reading will not be objectionable. My views of Jesus, his teaching and mission, as given herein, may not be exactly orthodox, but I can't help that. I am not an orthodox man, according to Ingersoll's definition of the word. He says: "Whoever has quit growing, he is orthodox, whether in art, politics, religion, or philosophy. Whoever thinks he has found it all out, he is orthodox." I never expect to find it all out, so I never expect to be orthodox. It seems to me, by the way, that it is extremely doubtful if in any direction man has arrived, or ever will arrive, at absolute truth. We see that what one generation considers worth fighting and dying for as positivly the truth, is rejected and laughed at as obvious error by the next, but if we look closer we shall find that the error of yesterday was necessary to lead up to the supposed truth of to-day, and that the truth of to-day may be but another error necessary to the foundation of the truth of to-morrow, and so on. Probably each new version of truth is a little freer from error than its predecessor, but I don't suppose man will ever progress to the knowledge of that truth entirely unmixed with error which we may call absolute truth. Only the parsons know all about God, and only the orthodox hav got hold of unchangeable truth—in their own minds. It is well for us to continue to search and investigate, as far as in us lies, in order that we may improve and enlighten the pathway of those who come after us, even though in so doing we hug to our bosoms as truth much that these aftercomers will reject as false and ridiculous. But I wander from my subject.

I hav no desire to underrate or misjudge the character or mental capacity of the famous Nazarene—I can hav no object in so doing. I only wish to take a common-sense view of his sayings and doings, and judge of him as I would of any other man. Now in doing this let us bear in mind that all the record given of him is from men of whom we know nothing—men who were not eye-witnesses, and who were strongly prejudiced in his favor, and this record was not written until a hundred or two hundred years after the occurrences therein related are said to hav taken place. We are doing the record ample justice if we take it as it stands.

Jesus, judged by this record, was not a great man intellectually, and his morals were not of the practical kind. He led a sort of vagabond life, and enjoined it upon his followers to do the same. "Take no thought for the morrow, what ye shall eat"—a pretty precept for one to inculcate who tramped about the country and sponged his living, and who with his disciples plucked ears of corn and ate as they went through the fields. Who planted that corn? Not they, but somebody who disregarded this precious precept and took thought for the morrow.

More of the same kind of practical wisdom may be found in Matthew sixth chapter, from 25th verse to the end of the chapter, and Luke xii. God clothes the lilies and feeds the sparrows, and he'll do the same by you. Drop all business, turn tramp, and follow and worship me. If you hav lately married a wife don't stop to provide for her, or if your father lies dead in the house don't stop to bury him—"Let the dead bury the dead" (luminous passage!)—but come right along. If you are a filthy beggar you are sure to go right to Abraham's bosom, but if you hav been frugal and industrious and can liv comfortably and a little at your ease on your savings, your case is more than doubtful unless you giv it all to the poor, turn tramp, and follow me. And yet he who gave such counsel and example bewailed his sad fate that he, more destitute than foxes and birds, had nowhere to lay his head. Well might it hav been said to him in reply: "Foxes dig holes, and birds of the air build nests, but you neither dig nor build to provide for yourself a place to lay your head. You enjoin the same life of unproductivness upon others, and you don't deserve a place."

He spoke in parables, that the people might see and not perceive, and hear and not understand, lest they should be converted and their sins should be forgiven them. How is that for goodness—how does it square with the Golden Rule? He said, "Love your enemies," but did he love his enemies? No. He denounced them in the vilest terms, called them fools, blind guides, hypocrits, vipers, serpents, and the like, and just because they didn't accept and sanction all that he said of himself. He manifested the same spirit of intolerance, as far as he had a chance, that has characterized his followers from that time to this. "And those mine enemies that would not I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me" Rather a "striking" way of loving one's enemies. He made a scourge of small cords and went into the temple evidently in a towering rage, and drove out those who were doing a legitimate business, and had as good a right there as himself. He even dealt out eternal damnation for mere unbelief in his divinity.

Is this the meek and lowly Jesus we hear so much about? Yes, the same that cursed the fig tree for not bearing figs out of season. And what a kind and forgiving spirit he manifested in his parable of the man without a wedding garment—one who had probably taken "no thought for the morrow." "Bind him hand and foot and cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Also the same gentle spirit appears in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, sending the rich man to hell merely because he was rich and had good things. No other reason is given, and beggars hung around his door, an evidence that he was benevolent. Would one with a heart o'erflowing with the milk of human kindness hav chosen such horrible illustrations?

Some parts of the much admired Sermon on the Mount are very good; others are pernicious, especially those that recommend slothfulness and vagabondism. It is not up to the morals of the ancients whom Christians call heathens. Throughout, the actuating or propelling motiv to goodness is some reward or escape from some penalty, never goodness for goodness' sake. This wholly selfish motiv is the only one held up by Jesus in all his teachings.

He said, "Blessed are the merciful." Compare that with Matthew vii, 22, 23, in this same much lauded Sermon on the Mount—not much mercy manifested there. He said, "Blessed are the peace-makers." Was he a peace-maker? He said he wasn't. He came not to send peace on the earth, but a sword; to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. A man's foes shall be those of his own household. Lovely and beautiful was the mission of this Jesus according to his own showing.

The lack of respect in Jesus' treatment of his mother should excite a feeling of repugnance in every one who has ever loved a mother. After losing him in Jerusalem she told him, when she found him, that she had sought him sorrowing. He manifested no regret at having been the cause of her sorrow, no thanks for her solicitude, but answered her testily, "How is it that ye sought me?" He never called her mother or acknowledged her as such. Once he called her "woman." It was when she told him at the wedding that the wine was out, and he answered, "Woman what hav I to do with thee!" Let us be charitable, however, and presume that he had been drinking. When he was told that she was without and wished to speak with him he paid no attention to her, nor did he go near her, but only said, with heartless sang froid, "Who is my mother?" On his way to execution he met her and called her "Woman," as usual, giving her no recognition as mother.

Much stress has been laid upon the promis made to Abraham that through him and his seed the Messiah should come, and to make it doubly plain that the promis was fulfilled, and that he came through the lineage of David, two genealogies of Jesus are given, one in Matthew and one in Luke, each differing essentially from the other. You pay your money, and you take your choice. Now if Jesus was begotten of the Holy Ghost he held no earthly relationship to Abraham or David. Evidently the "plan" has a "hitch" in it here. Much stress is placed upon the great sacrifice of Jesus. There was no especial sacrifice on his part, if he believed what he claimed for himself. In dying for the world he was only going back to heaven where he came from and where he had been from all eternity, for he said, "Before Abraham was, I am." As for the mere physical pain of crucifixion it was not to be compared to what martyrs hav suffered for humanity on green wood piles, roasting pans, in dungeons, etc., without being sure of reaching heaven after all, and without the supernatural strength inherent in a god. Humanity has suffered more for Jesus than Jesus ever suffered for humanity.

What would we think now of a man who should make it his sole business, as this Christ did, to roam over the country to-day followed by a few illiterate fellows "without visible means of support," and claiming to be God; the whole burden of his conversation being of himself, his great power and consequence, and with "I" and "me" constantly on his tongue; pronouncing dire anathemas on all who did not believe all he claimed for himself—in short, if a man exactly like Jesus were to come among us now, what would be thought of him? Why, we would all think him a monomaniac if not actually crazy! Probably Jesus was honest in his intentions, but hallucinated, claiming in rather ambiguous terms to be God, when he was but man—a remarkable man it may be in some respects, if not a myth, though most of the Christian denominations believe that he claimed to be and was the very God.

As I said at the outset, I hav no desire to underrate or misjudge him, or claim that he had no good qualities in his character. I only wish to show that even according to that strongly biased record he was not such a model of perfection as he was and is thought to be by his adherents. He would now be called, if among us, by the Spiritualists, a healing medium, and according to the record he had some rare gifts. And I find it written that in a certain place Jesus could not do many mighty works, because of their unbelief—a common excuse with the modern medium of Spiritualism. Now if his so-called miracles were performed as he claimed, by the direct agency and power of God outside of natural law, could belief or unbelief in any way effect their performance? Can unbelief thwart the purposes of deity?

Jesus died as other men die, because he could't help it; but Christians take a different view of his death, claiming that it justly inaugurated a remarkable epoch in the world's history. Now the world is considerably larger than some people imagin. Jesus inaugurated a new religious epoch in one corner of it, as Mohammed did in another, Confucius in another, Buddha in another. The emperor Constantine, ruler of all Europe, actuated by the basest motivs, spread Christianity with fire and sword among races that hav since progressed, not because of Christianity, but rather in spite of it, for Christianity neither encouraged thought, stimulated invention—unless of instruments of torture for those who tried to think—aided science, nor tolerated liberty so long as his followers had the power of repression and suppression in their hands. Christianity to-day is not the power it once was. It has been humbled by exposure and the growth of Infidel thought, and is now somewhat tolerant of scientific progress, not from choice but from dire necessity.

Christ demonstrated immortality—did he? Not if he was God, even though he rose from the dead, for the immortality of the gods had never been questioned and needed no demonstration, and the immortality of man is not proved by the rising of a dead God. If he was a man his resurrection only proves the physical resurrection of the bodies of the dead—which seems to me too silly an hypothesis to merit discussion—with all their old bodily imperfections, nail prints in their hands, if they had them before death, and spear thrusts in their sides; with wooden legs and hump backs and bald heads, if with such they died. Ah, no, Christ did not demonstrate immortality for anybody but himself! He was a somewhat remarkable man, if not a myth, but he owes his fame to Constantine and the Roman armies more than to any special merit he himself possessed. If he inaugurated a new epoch it was as other men hav inaugurated new epochs—as Watts inaugurated the epoch of steam, as Franklin inaugurated the epoch of electricity, and as we are all helping to inaugurate a new epoch when we help men to be wiser and freer and happier.

Jesus' prayer, called the Lord's Prayer, has been considered throughout all Christendom as a most marvelous production. It has been "legal tender," so to speak, among all denominations in their public and private devotions. Allow me to giv it a brief examination, and I would say in passing that I do not wish to treat irreverently, or trifle with, the things which to other men are sacred; I only wish to view them as they are. "Our father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name." This is likely to bring to mind what Shakspere says about giving "to airy nothing a local habitation and a name." It implies that God dwells apart from the universe in a locality called heaven. It is a very contracted view of deity. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Always a "kingdom" where somebody's arbitrary will is to be done. Never a glorious democracy of liberty and love, where each is a law unto himself, and justice, perfect justice, covers all. Christ had no conception of individual freedom—the kingdom was his ideal government. "Giv us this day our daily bread." Giv it to us. Don't make us earn it. This from a man who never raised so much as a grain of corn in all his life is consistent, but it contains too much of the spirit of indolence and beggary to be divine. God does not giv holes to foxes, nor nests to birds, nor glorious raiment to lilies. They all work for what they hav, and so must man. Nobody expects to get bread by merely praying for it; that is, nobody except the priests and parsons to whom praying is a trade; and I hope they will yet be put to some useful employment. "And forgiv us our trespasses, as we forgiv those who trespass against us." This implies that we can trespass against infinit God—we, poor little specks on the shores of infinitude! and that God could possibly feel occasion for our asking his forgivness. Trespassing against nature's laws is never forgiven; the penalty is always exacted; but we can't trespass against omnipotence. "Lead us not into temptation." This has always been a "sticker" for the theologians, and I leave it with them. Perhaps they can make it right by "splitting the difference" between this insinuation that God does lead men into temptation and the passage which says "neither tempteth he any man." "But deliver us from evil." Nobody in this world ever was delivered from evil. In time mankind may in a measure outgrow evil, not through prayer but by hard work. The rest of the prayer, like the kink in a pig's tail, is more for ornament than use. Now, I ask the candid, thoughtful reader, where is the wonderful merit in this prayer of Jesus?

For over sixty years I hav heard the changes rung on Jesus' mission, his wisdom, his goodness, and his sacrifices for man, and during most of that time I did not stop to critically reflect whether all this high-sounding, honest-seeming cant about Jesus and his work meant anything or not. I took it for granted, like a great many others, that it did. When in my leisure now I reflect upon it with no feeling of passion and apart from the noise and confusion of business, the bustle of life, and the psycologic influence of pious associations, I cannot see that Jesus was endowed above all other men with either goodness or greatness; or that his mission was above that of all other men; or that he sacrificed or suffered more for the world than hav thousands of others who are by most men forgotten; or that he "saved" the world; or that he demonstrated immortality. I can simply see that he may hav lived, and if he did liv that he was embued with the spirit of the reformers in all ages, and that he suffered as hav the reformer in all ages, and died as all men die, because he could not help it, and on the cross because he was ahead of his time and the cross was the savage instrument of death of the savage men of his savage day for such as were ahead of their time. That he was God, or especially the son of God, seems to me to be a theory utterly preposterous; that he was as a man the best specimen that the world has ever produced is not proved by the record of his works, and to my mind is not at all probable. That he was a reformer and thought he had hold of absolute truth, but was mistaken as all reformers are when they think thus; that he performed his mission well and deserves well of posterity, is to me the proper and rationalistic view of Jesus.

HARVEY W. PINNEY.

Mill Brook, Conn.

The 4th of July on the 4th of July

Has in Philadelphia been celebrated in a most worthy manner. According to an eye-witness, Mr. Julius Reichhelm, a citizen's committee, composed of Free Religionists, Socialists, and National Liberals, went on Sunday the 4th of July in the 12th hour, at noon, to "Independence Hall," and there, before Sabbathly-closed doors, they had by their Secretary, at the moment when the bell struck the 12th hour, signed the subjoined cable-telegram directed to the Committee having charge of the Brussels Congress, viz:

"To Dr. Cæsar De Paepe, 81 Curens, Brussels, Belgium: Devoted to the spirit of the Declaration of Independence—universal brotherhood on the ground of common humanity—do American citizens send their fraternal greeting to the men of Freethought and genuin morality from Independence Hall Philadelphia, on this 4th of July, 1880, at 12 o'clock, M. An address to the Congress itself shall follow. By order of the Citizens' Committee,

"A. METZLER, Sec."

An immediate transmission of the telegram met with some difficulty, but was promptly executed the next day, the "official" 4th of July.

Equal Eternity of Mind and Matter, and Their Characteristics.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The coherent actions of matter, clearly evincing a purpose in evolutional progress, and so of forethought and design, prove their intelligent origin. As blind, purposeless, inherent actions of matter cannot effect co-operation, as such harmonious unity for perfect mechanical effects, we observe in material phenomena, requires. Therefore mental guidance is the only rational conception for such coherent actions of matter. In further elucidation of such phenomena, then, universal matter is a positiv necessity of a co-related infinit mind, as its metaphorical body (or telegraphic medium in association), for without such co-relation such mind could receive no impressions from anything, nor giv expressions to anything, therefore such infinit mind must be a subtil-material existence, as the most important functional part of universal matter, coexistent and co-related, as a spirit, or non-material mind, could not act as a mechanical force upon matter, or receive any similar impression from the same; like our finite minds, which are necessarily material, also, to account for their co-relations with the same.

Subtil-material minds are probably elastic to infinity, and therefore there is no varying arrangement of their supposed atoms necessary to varied thoughts (as some unphilosophic atomists fancy), but their non-atomic infinit elasticity makes them peculiarly susceptible, as in the case of the finite mind as a separate entity from brain (only temporarily connected), to oscillate in accord, and so to feel and respond to all impressions from the delicate motions of objects (as light, sound, etc.), conveyed by the sense-nerves and brain to such subtilly elastic mind, for its feeling, cognition and so of their import. Thus to weave its judgment and reflex emotional tremors back to the responsiv brain and muscles, causing their necessary expansion and contraction, by which we perform all our desired work. All sensitiv life being the effects of communicated motion, as the cause of feeling and responsiv actions, from objects to subject, and, emotionally, from subject to objects.

Thus is all matter, as an eternal necessity of minds, being co-eval with, and so is proved to hav never been created. Creation consisting in such associate subtil-material infinit mind, acting mechanically upon non-intelligent matter, in bequeathing its laws of action, givs all the varied forms and moods (or functions) to such universal matter, as the associate metaphorical body to such controling mind. Analogously with our finite material minds actions, as without our co-existent material bodies, we could receive no impressions from anything, nor giv expressions to anything, and thus, reflexly, our mind's expressions upon our bodies and other matter, also constitutes our creativ functional forces in giving forms and moods to our co-related material bodies and much other matter, as our designed works. Thus are minds and matter eternally co-related and co-existent.

All minds are, therefore, creativ in their disposition of matter (the infinit being universal and the finite limited, in their actions), and so without such subtil-material mental association and actions, all matter, dissociated from minds, would be formless and purposeless, as unintelligent matter can not of itself act coherently in assuming varied useful and esthetic forms, mechanisms, adaptations, and purposeful activity, without mental guidance. So we must rationally conclude that minds are a subtil material, and therefore that some matter is exclusivly intelligent, possessing all the functions of mind, and so controls all other non-intelligent matter. Material minds are then as indestructible and so as immortal as must be all matter. The existence of our finite minds cannot be the product of, nor evolved from, non-intelligent matter, being infinitly superior, therefore all minds must be an indispensable, inherent associate part of universal matter, and its most important functional energy, by which the whole is moved into coherent actions. Our organizations being sensitivly fitted to attract and develop mind-matter (as a sponge is for water, or our bodies to attract solar elements, or in breathing to absorb oxygen) into all their individual characteristics, thus we hav the clue to the association of mind with body. Mental heredity being simply organic influences.

With this basis of reasoning, we obtain the only consistent and comprehensiv view or insight into the characteristics of all minds, as subtil forces (infinit and finite) and their relations to and mode of operations upon all the grosser and unintelligent portions of matter, as co-related necessities of activ intelligences, for the coherent control and disposition of that something we call matter.

This inside view of the intelligent and non-intelligent materials of the universe, acting in co-relation, through the fiat of such infinit will-force, as the highest function of matter, the eternal methods thus pursued, and the great works always in progress in nature's laboratory, givs us the only adequate and comprehensiv explanation of the characteristics of all minds, as material forces or functions. The infinit mind in its universal co-relation with all matter as its highest functional energy, acting thus mechanically upon all other unintelligent matter, by so infusing into such matter all its laws of undeviating actions in universal causes and effects. Being simply the effects of subtil mind-matter, acting by will force, mechanically upon all grosser and non-intelligent matter, as the connected metaphorical body, which constitutes the intelligent origin, and, therefore, only purposeful disposition of all unthinking matter, and its unconscious phenomenal characteristics, throughout cosmos, just as finite minds act, limitedly, upon their bodies and some other matter.

All other theories of the causes of the inexorably blind, and yet coherent actions of matter, we observ, are wholly inadequate, and, to us, incomprehensible for their known effects, and so of their explanation, as a supposed spirit-mind, being non-material, cannot act mechanically upon matter, having neither power of attraction, repulsion, contraction, or expansion, and the theory of a personal God being limited in form and so in actisn can not be ubiquitous or universal in action. So those two theories being inoperativ, are wholly inadequate, and thus inadmissable as causes of existing phenomena.

Therefore we are rationally driven to the conclusion, inferentially and analogously from finite mind-characteristics, that all minds (infinit and finite) are a subtil material, and that minds cannot, themselvs, be personal—i. e., having form—though individually each separate mind (as with the finite) is connected with a personal organization or body for its cognition of other matter and its own manifestations; while an infinit mind-power, as the most important part of universal matter and its highest functional energy, needs only such co-related association with all matter as the metaphorical body, for infinit, direct expressions upon and impressions from all other unintelligent matter. Such universally co-related and intelligent portion of all matter is, self-evidently, its highest functional energy, and so, necessarily, controls the dispositions of all other unthinking and unintelligent matter—subtil or imponderable forces always using and controling more ponderable matter, like electricity in using ponderable telegraph wires as the vehicle for its subtil forces, annihilating space in its rapid flights.

These unbiased conclusions of years of devoted thought to this special subject, led by trains of analogy and necessary inference, with a pretty general appreciation of such scientific studies of natural phenomena, in association with intelligent actions, as makes this theory (to me) of life and matter to be the only rational perception of the universe, as comprised of associate, intelligent, and unintelligent materials, the former thus mechanically controling the latter into all its forms of coherent phenomena by actual mechanical processes of subtil mind-matter acting upon grosser unthinking matter as the causa efficiens.

As there is no known limit to the potency or functions of matter, so it is most rational to assume that some matter has the entire attributes of mind, which, as a subtil, material force, coherently controling all other matter, enables us to comprehend all the co-related actions of mind upon other non-intelligent matter, and, conversely, of unintelligent material actions upon subtil minds through reciprocal, vibratory, accordant motions—motion being the primal cause of all feeling and actions of mind.

No spiritual theory of minds or other theistic hypothesis can compare with this presentment of a subtil-material mind-force as the only understandable Intelligent, Primal, First Cause of all phenomena, being the only mechanical presentment, or causa efficiens, for all the coherent acts of matter, and so comports with all the requirements of science, being the adequate, potential cause of all the seemingly intelligent actions of matter so evidently the effects of intelligent design for a purpose in all stages of progression of matter throughout Cosmos. Such evident useful and esthetic results of the actions of the laws of matter must convince all candid educated minds of their intelligent origin and direction, and with the necessary admission that no other theory than that of the subtil materiality of mind, as the highest function and intelligent part of matter, is adequate for the mechanical governance of all matter into intelligent ways, which it could not otherwise assume.

Here we hav portrayed a wondrous universal intelligence, as "The Great First Cause," and understandable mode of actions of a material mind upon other matter, as the mechanical causa efficiens (like our minds act upon other matter) in the creations of this world and cosmos. This is a far more consistent and a far higher conception of an infinit mind-power than are the confused irrelevant thoughts and belittling presentations of a God contained in any ancient or modern theisms or Bibles.

Thus, too, we hav here presented to our minds the rational necessity for the admission of such infinit intelligence as the controling power in the universe, and so as most worthy of our adoration and worship, as the needed substitute—suited to this age—for all the old, confused, ignorant, ignoble, and superstitious conceptions and unintellectual forms of worship of a very child-like and inadequately portrayed God, now the too generally and thoughtlessly accepted dicta of superstitious and bigoted creeds; while morally our highest duty is to promote the welfare of our race and humanity in our treatment of other sentient beings. As free agents, we direct the ways of our consciences, while the laws of matter conserve and transport our minds or souls into new scopes of immortal existence.

These pages should serve to convince the candid and most skeptical Atheist that through such trains of analogy and necessary inductions we are now scientifically conscious that there is an intelligence infinitly above man's, whose unbounded function is the most important part of and so is the controling factor and force in matter and cosmos, giving all the laws to matter engaged in thus directly creating all phenomena; such intelligence being the Great First Cause, thus indirectly, of all the varied forms and dispositions of matter and of all lesser minds. and so is the most infinit, and adorable existence for our humble worship, and so to be intellectually freed from all the benighted and inadequate presentments of such Great Intelligence, and their varied and antagonistic creeds, forms, and dogmas of former days of ignorance; thus intellectually and without parade of foolish ritualisms, forms, and ceremonies to effectually dissociate such Great Intelligence from all connection with trinitarian and other rule of lesser gods—so superstitiously afflicting our race—and to consider that such Infinite Intelligence is alone adequate as the ruler of all that exists, and so no aids are needed or possible to add to Almighty power. Man, as a free agent, knowing right from wrong, is left to work out his own destiny, morally, into conscious happiness or the reverse.

I earnestly desire that the above theory of mind and matter may appear to others, as it does to me, to be the long-sought rational cause of all effects of matter, by which we can trace, in a natural mechanical way, the evident intelligent acts and direction of all material phenomena for a purpose; without any further resort to unphilosophical supernatural mysticisms; thus to bind all liberal and rational minds to the clear perception of one unity of relation between all necessary effects of matter and their intelligent primal cause, hitherto hidden and mystified by irrational spiritual and ghostly religions.

On this basis we can trace every phenomena of matter, through its requisit mechanical relations, to a governing intelligent primal will-force, without any discrepancy in scientific induction for an understandable adequate cause. Happily, too, by this theory we can alone retain our cherished hold or clear perception of a presiding Intelligence, giving all laws for the direction of matter, through its co-relation with all material phenomena (directing the same into undeviating laws of action); and with our minds, as important functional subtil parts of the same, insure our evolutional immortality and intelligent connection with such beneficent Great First Cause as the highest subtil function of universal matter.

Herewith all liberal and enlightened minds may take a new departure—suited to this investigating age—and join in one intelligent accord, and so more easily to overthrow all existing superstitions and prevalent degrading religious dogmas, than by any unsatisfying denial of an intelligent Creator and of our immortality, because old theisms and cosmogonies are repugnant to common sense. Here, then, let us join our efforts for this true advancement of our race in this life, with a rational reliance that our minds—as material forces and entities—are destined to natural evolutional progress for all time, as herein portrayed, that shall cheer the ways of this life, even in its darkest moods.

Such rational substitute—traced through analogy and inductive necessary inference—for all old effete theisms and inadequate modes of creation, and that unsatisfying and inadequate opposit extreme of attributing all effects in the universe to the blind and unfeeling inherent acts of matter, without any assignable philosophic cause, is here presented for the acceptance of mankind as best suited to modern thought and investigation of the laws of matter. The mental vision must now clearly perceive such infinit intelligent direction of the laws of matter, and our consequently induced adoration of such Almighty Power, which is thus scientifically presented for our rational adoption; and viewing ourselvs as future participants in continued life beyond this, amid all the inviting realms of the universe of infinit variety, lends a rational charm to the philosophic doctrin of associate intelligent and non-intelligent matter; which, while it comports with scientific inductiv requirements (explanatory of all phenomena), givs us adequate assurance for the realization of our aspirations for immortality and greatest inducements for well-doing, which no other theism or theory rationally embraces.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Locust Valley, Queen's Co., N. Y.

By What Shall We Swear?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav a suggestion to make. A few years ago you issued a collection of songs, hymns, etc., which was much needed. Now can you not get up a collection of oaths, by-words, etc., for the use of swearing Infidels and other Freethinkers. Most Infidels of my acquaintance—and I presume it is general—are on occasion given to the use of strong language, often quite expletiv and emphatic; and they almost invariably use Christian oaths and sayings. This should not be. It is not strictly consistent with Infidel claims and views.

Because we are, through the force of circumstances, compelled to adopt in some measure some of the Christians' manners and customs and ways and means, it does not follow that we should use their—to them—profanity to giv emphasis to our language of levity, earnestness, or passion. It is a compliment to them and their God that we should withhold.

In the use of Christian oaths we tacitly acknowledge a certain power and force in the very name of their God, their Jesus, etc. Yet I believe Ingersoll has said that Infidels are right in swearing, if for no other purpose than to show a "contempt for their damned nonsense." But I think if we hav to swear by a God at all, that it should be by a God of our own, if we hav one, and if we hav not, why then do without a God and swear by something else.

But surely we do not want to borrow a God for swearing purposes that the Christians hav stolen for damning purposes. We do not believe in such a God; why then should we appeal or refer to him in this manner? It is really too bad that we are compelled to use the Christian vernacular when we wish to do a little swearing on our own account.

Can you not do something to help us—giv us a collection of oaths, choice tit-bits, in which there shall be no hell-fire, no damnation, no devil, no Christian God, no Jesus? Let us hav something not so incongruous with the Infidels' clear sense of truth.

Of course this habit has been forced upon us by our Christian environments, but we must grow out of it, rise higher, and swear by George Francis Train, or somebody or something else that is in no sense Christian.

Why not, then, brethren, let us all arise and join in swearing by D. M. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER? Amen.

J. J. H.

(Continued from page 469.)

The third is that it seems a great pity that God should be under the necessity of leaving his splendid throne and somewhat extensive business in heaven to come down into this troublesome world and take upon himself the pains and inconveniences of humanity, to endure nine months of close confinement, to pass through the years of puling infancy, frivolous childhood, passionate youth and adolesence, to manhood, and then to die in the most inglerious and ignominious manner, simply to establish what the ignorant pagans had easily inaugurated centuries before without any particular trouble or difficulty.

But I must stop right here.

Believe me, truly yours, D. M. Bennett.

Ho for Brussels!

CONTINUED DONATIONS FOR THE TRIP.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| James Brown | $2 00 | Mrs. E. M. Sickmon | 1.00 |
| John H. Haslam | 1.00 | James M. Winn | 1.00 |
| F. J. Emary | 1 00 | John Hallenderer | 2.00 |
| Anna Everest | .75 | A Spiritualist | 1 00 |
| George Plumb | 1.00 | League No. 151, Centerville, Cal. | 5 00 |
| Mrs. J. Weeks | .25 | | |
| M. Babcock | 1 00 | J. Schuh | 1 00 |
| D. R Burt | 5 00 | William N. Redinger | .50 |
| W. Archibald | 1 00 | D. Tausig | 1 00 |
| R. C. Trowbridge | 3 00 | John Brown | 1 00 |
| E. B. Rounds | 1.00 | M. F. Dean | 1.00 |

Thanks to our kind friends who hav thus manifested their generosity. While the aggregate of donations does not amount to as large a sum as we expected and need, we are nevertheless duly grateful. It is probable enough has been sent in to take Prof. Rawson and ourselves to about the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, when we will hav the privilege of depending upon a merciful providence to take us the rest of the way. We now expect to sail on Saturday the 31st.

Brother W. S. Bell

Called upon us a few days ago as he returned from his three-months' trip in the West. He was as far as Iowa, and spoke to many interested audiences. He reported an increasing interest in Liberalism and a growing disposition to hear what can be said in defense of natural religion. As his acquaintance increases in the various localities he visits he finds a greater demand for Liberal lectures and a greater appreciation of the truths as they are found in science and reason. As an indication of the good work he has performed during the three months he has passed in the field it may be stated that he organized five Liberal Leagues and saw them in good working order. This is doing right well, and shows he has the disposition to labor faithfully and to some purpose. When he again visits those Leagues it is to be hoped he will find them enjoying a healthy growth, and filled with a zeal to let good works abound and to let their light shine abroad. Those in New England who wish to avail themselvs of a good Liberal lecturer, at moderate prices, during the remaining summer months will do well to employ brother Bell. His address is 73 Fourth street, New Bedford, Mass.

The Health Journal is the title of a new monthly edited and published by Dr. T. R. Kinget, of this city, at 50 cents per year. The first number is issued, and the Doctor is now anxious for subscribers. Those who send him their names with the small price he asks for it will be conferring a favor upon him and do themselvs a good turn at the same time. Address T. R. Kinget, M.D., 317 East Fourteenth street, New York city.

A Serious Difficulty Amicably Adjusted.

The undersigned having submitted all matters of difference between us to T. C. Leland and T. B. Wakeman, of New York, and being informed that after hearing and investigation they hav substantially agreed in regard to the same, we hereby mutually agree to abide by their decision and recommendations as a final disposition of the matters in question.

D. M. Bennett,
B. F. Underwood.

(Dated)
July 17, 1880.

Underwood vs. Bennett.

On the 3d of July, inst., Mr. B. F. Underwood and Mr. D. M. Bennett agreed to submit to us, as friendly arbitrators, certain differences between them, in order to hav them investigated and the truth ascertained without litigation. We were to select an umpire in case we could not agree; but we find that there is no substantial difference between us after a hearing and investigation as full and complete as we could make it.

1. Mr. Bennett complained that Mr. Underwood had taken part in or aided and abetted the publication of parts of an old private correspondence which had been illegally and corruptly obtained and published in the R-P Journal, of Chicago, and the Index, of Boston, with malicious motivs, and in order to destroy him while he was in prison to vindicate the freedom of the press and the mails and unable to defend himself.

2. That after this publication Mr. Underwood had interfered in the matter illegally, and had published an opinion in regard to it in a way to aid and comfort those who had been guilty of this outrage; and that he followed up his opinion by publishing letters and an interview with a reporter in such a way as to identify himself with the wrong-doers and their motivs and practically so as to justify them.

Mr. Underwood complained that Mr. Bennett had published in his paper, The Truth Seeker, parts of a letter, followed by insinuations to the effect that Mr. Underwood's relations to and conduct with women would not bear examination according to his own standard of morals, and that in one case he had certainly made what was called "an infamous proposition" to a lady.

Mr. Bennett claimed that Mr. Underwood's wrongful conduct toward him, as charged above, justified these publications, which he believed to be true, and asked that Mr. Underwood's conduct as to him be first considered. As to that, therefore, we find:

1. That Mr. Underwood had no part in the obtaining and publication of that private correspondence; that he in no way aided or abetted the wrong-doers or conspirators in that matter, and that he never saw the letters referred to until after their publication. We regret, however, that the charge of his conference and complicity with the wrongful bolders of that correspondence was never denied by Mr. Underwood in a public or a decisiv manner previous to his hearing before us; but we are satisfied from his statements and denials, and the facts shown, that Mr. Savage is entirely erroneous in his intimations to Mr. Verity to the effect that Mr. Underwood was at his (Savage's) house, near Boston, and conferred as to the publication of those letters, or about them in any way. That he was at that house is admitted, but he is shown to hav been there for another purpose, which had no connection with those letters, which were not brought to Mr. Underwood's consideration or notice. It seems that Mr. Savage was in wrongful possession of and wrongfully used those letters, and he is thereby discredited to such an extent that his statements are of little weight as against Mr. Verity or Mr. Underwood, especially when he might wish to make the latter appear to share, and so lighten, his own guilt.

2. But as to the charge respecting Mr. Underwood's conduct after the publication of those letters, we cannot find that he is free from fault.

Those letters were originally the sole property of Mr. Bennett, the writer, together with the party to whom they were written. Neither party could dispose of those letters, nor permit them to be published without the consent of the other; much less could either part with them, or permit them to be published or used to the injury of the other.

The law and the usage of all decent persons on this subject is well settled. We need only to refer all interested to the case of Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duers Reports (N. Y. Superior Court 1855, pp. 379–408).

We cannot quote at length, but in the words of Mr. Justice Story, cited with approval in that case, "the publication of private letters" is "one of the most odious breaches of private confidence, of social duty, and of honorable feeling which can well be imagined." It is claimed that these letters were in substance stolen, and sold for money, and were published by rival newspaper editors with a view to gratify malice, and to crush Mr. Bennett and his paper. Mr. Underwood must certainly hav known that they were published to injure Mr. Bennett, and without his consent—a consent that was absolutely necessary to relieve the publication from being other than a theft, and, in Judge Story's words, a "most odious breach of private confidence, of social duty, and of honorable feeling." Mr. Underwood failed to put down his foot upon this outrage, and while Mr. Bennett was in prison and comparativly defenseless, he accepted a proposition from one of the wrong-doers to inspect the originals of these letters, and to publish his opinion as to whether they were spurious or not, which he did.

In this respect he took a wrong step. No one could giv him a right to examine and publish an opinion about those letters but the writer, Mr. Bennett, himself. He had no right to the sight or use of those letters, obtained by theft and fraud. He cannot be justified by the request of the holder of stolen letters, or of others however numerous or importunate—either to hav the letters proclaimed to be spurious to aid Mr. Bennett, or to hav them shown to be genuine in order to ruin him. The law and good morals required him to let those stolen private letters entirely alone.

As to the subsequent acts or expressions of Mr. Underwood complained of in that matter, we find them to be the results of this first wrong step of meddling with those letters and their wrongful holders at all. He was not and could not be then acquainted with the true facts about those letters, but he was plainly influenced by them and their holders to apparently take sides with the wrong-doers. It was not then known that these old letters had been written by an exceptionable man under peculiar and irresponsible circumstances and feelings, that they had been forgiven if not forgotten by the party most nearly concerned, that no injury did or could hav resulted from them to the party to whom they were written, that they had been dug up illegally and maliciously to ruin an imprisoned editor.

When the enormity of this breach of law, social duty, and "honorable feeling" became known, it was justly felt that even the writer of those letters must be an angel of purity in contrast with those who could resort at such a time to such means to destroy him. The excuse of a desire to further public morals by this violation of "social duty" was further shown to us to hav been a sheer pretense, for the holders of those letters by further extracts published afterwards in pamphlet form, and circulated through the mails, openly violated the very postal laws they were pretending to vindicate. But when the first extracts were published Mr. Underwood did not know nor consider the nature and effects of his interference in a matter which did not belong to him; much less is he chargeable with the malice and subsequent acts of the wrong-doers.

Among Liberal editors, and Liberals generally, it is also shown that they hav been too much inclined in regard to private letters to "hav all things in common." It is urged that Mr. Bennett has not been free from blame in this regard himself.

That Mr. Underwood therefore allowed his mind to be influenced hastily, improperly, and that he wrote under that influence letters based upon the representation of the wrongful publishers, and that in the interview with the reporter of the Inter-Ocean newspaper of Chicago (Dec. 10, 1879) he used expressions which cannot be justified, we understand him to now admit—if not, we so find. He denies the correctness of the Inter-Ocean's report in some important particulars, and it is to be regretted that he did not correct or explain it immediately after its publication and through the same medium.

We hav gone over the charges against Mr. Underwood carefully because of their importance, and because they are made by Mr. Bennett the excuse for the publications against Mr. Underwood's private character. "To carry the war into Africa" is claimed to hav been a legitimate means of defense or retaliation under such provocation. This alleged right of retaliation we need not determine if it is found that the facts alleged in regard to Mr. Underwood's character are without foundation, for certainly no one can hav the right to retaliate by the use of that which is not true. What then is the evidence as to these imputations against Mr. Underwood? To sustain them certain statements are made and certain letters are produced which hav been written to Mr. Bennett by several parties, from one of which letters an extract was printed by him in his paper. Relying upon these letters and the statements of those who reported to him that the writers were reliable, Mr. Bennett says that he made the publications and statements as to Mr. Underwood's character in the full belief of their truth. We cannot question his good faith nor the honesty of his belief. The letters were genuine, and contain what Mr. Bennett published and stated in regard to them. But yet we think that Mr. Bennett is in fault in publishing them or making any statements in regard to them, for they do not in themselvs contain any evidence. The writers do not profess to know the facts of their own knowledge. They refer to others, and the statements of others, as their authority. Though they do this in a very positiv manner, yet no editor should ever regard such statements as evidence, no matter under what provocation he may be smarting.

Both parties, of course, proceeded to call upon the persons alleged to know the facts to affirm or deny them. The result is that the alleged facts hav wholly vanished. It seems that two rumors furnished the only justification for those letters. One of those rumors arose from a fact that has been perfectly explained, and was shown to be entirely innocent. The other rumor we hav traced to a man who had a grievance against Mr. Underwood, and who, after repeated requests, has no evidence or authority whatever for the story. In one letter this witness says that he does not believe the story, and in the last he says that he believes Mr. Underwood to be an honorable man, and entirely exculpates him. We find no one back of the letters Mr. Bennett relied upon who knows of any "insulted lady," or improper acts on the part of Mr. Underwood.

Whether Mr. Bennett was justified in trying to "carry the war into Africa" or not, it is certain, therefore, that he had, and has, no ground to stand upon there, and the best proof that he has erred innocently is his prompt retraction of those publications and statements as to Mr. Underwood's private character which we are authorized by him to make as a part of this report.

In conclusion, we find (1) that both parties hav acted without sufficient care and consideration in regard to the matters complained of against each other; but that each believed at the time that he had good grounds and reasons for his conduct; (2) that it is proper to conclude these personal differences now, and that the way to do it is by a resolute silence by both parties hereafter in regard to them and all matters growing out of them. To this conclusion we understand the parties to solemnly agree—for themselvs and their papers, and, as far as they can, for their correspondents and friends.

T. B. Wakeman,
T. C. Leland,
Arbitrators.

(Dated)
New York, July 17, 1880

They Believe It to be False.

Waverly, Iowa, July 12, 1880.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker: We, the undersigned, believe the story or accusation published in The (N. Y.) Truth Seeker of June 12, 1880, in regard to Mr. B. F. Underwood's insulting a lady in Waverly, Bremer Co., Iowa, by making an infamous proposition to her, to be false.

Alma N. Wood.
Henry Tallett.
M. E. Billings.
A. J. Stevens.
W. R. Knight.

An Expression of Opinion.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav just read your reply to the malignant article in Scribner's. You are entirely too gentle with the editor. He it was who undertook to defend Beecher on the ground that a man of sixty-six could not commit adultery. Credat Judæas apella! The New York Sun takes the right gauge of his caliber by always dubbing him "Tupper" Holland. Perhaps it would be well now to add D.D., "Doctor of Dirt."

The bare fact that Underwood cleaves to Abbot is almost enough for me to put him without the pale of the rational of radical church. Abbot, in my humble judgment, lacks the reasoning faculty. Long ago I remarked his scholastic conceit, which I feared would ruin him as a professed radical. I took his Index two years, and then had to stop it, not only on account of his meanness toward myself and other correspondents, but because the paper did not interest me. And now one of my most esteemed correspondents writes: "Abbot is a literary coxcomb. His Index is the history of Balaam's ass—what the ass saw and said, and how he saw and said it." Yours truly W. H. B.

The Political Parties.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: My response to your "Politics for Liberals" is a hearty Amen. I hav been a voter almost as long as you, and was as ardent a Republican from 1856 till 1872 I would hav voted for Greeley if I had had a vote. In 1876 I was not decided in favor of Tilden until I found the Republican leaders ignoring their platform and fighting the battle on two false issues, to wit, Tilden's income tax and the bloody shirt. The charges of frandulent income returns against Mr. Tilden were so completely answered on his behalf that the New York daily Times, which made the charges, straightway backed down from the main ones, but meanly alleged others that were never proved; and I venture to say that if the facts are ever shown, it will appear that Samuel J. Tilden made as honest returns as at least the majority of Republicans whose income was equal to or greater than his. For I happen to hav known Mr. Tilden personally quite well in the early years of the Republican party, and I hav always esteemed him as one of the purest men in the Democratic party.

That the bloody shirt issue was a false one I showed in the following letter to the New York World in 1876:

To the Editor of the World, Sir: In the early part of 1871 a committee of the United States Senate investigated Ku-Klux outrages. The evidence made a book of 425 closely printed pages, more than half of which I reported as assistant stenographer to the committee. That there was abundant evidence of outrages by the Ku-Klux Klans, and by parties in disguise and not in disguise, it would be folly to deny. But the fact appeared on record that those outrages had culminated in 1868, and had nearly ceased by 1871. Senator Scott, the chairman of the committee, being pressed for time in preparing his report, dictated it from rough notes to the stenographers. When he came to the question of recent outrages, the evidence was very meager, and he asked me to help him find more proofs. As I had just completed an index, I was able to glean at once every instance that could be found. But I was then struck with the absence of such proofs, making that part of the case, to my mind, the weakest.

A joint committee of the two Houses was immediately appointed to continue the investigation during the long interval preceding the re-assembling of Congress in December. They divided themselves into several sub-committees, and went into the Southern states to take evidence. I could hav been employed as one of the stenographers, but declined to go. The result of their investigations was thirteen printed volumes, containing 7 306 pages of testimony, besides miscellaneous documents, making a total of 8 273 pages. The cost of reporting alone, at the regular rate of $3.15 per page, was $23 000, besides, say, $1 500 for three hundred pages of index. Add to this the traveling and other expenses of the half dozen stenographers, and the total cost for the single item of reporting was not less than $28,000. The expense of stereotyping I will not attempt to estimate, nor hav I any idea what the expenses of the several traveling sub-committees were. If I were to guess, however, at the total expenditure, I should say the whole job cost not less than $100,000

It has been charged that the present Democratic House of Representativs [1876], which has been so prolific in investigations, has spent $100,000 in that work altogether. The Republican Congress in 1871 spent probably as much in one investigation.

It is alleged that the Democratic investigations hav discovered little or nothing. This is not true. But what did the Ku-Klux Committee of 1871 discover? Let any one gainsay, if he can, the following statements in the report of the minority of that committee:

"It follows, therefore, that five, at least, of the eleven Southern states, to wit, Virginia, Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas, are free from even the suspicion of lawlessness on the part of the people" (vol. i, p. 297). "We will show by testimony incontrovertible that in no one of the six states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida hav there at any time existed combinations of lawless men in one-tenth part of said states" (ib. p. 292)

Aside from the fact that few of the outrages were recent, if the result is not a poor show for an expenditure of $100,000, then the Republicans may talk about the late Democratic investigations disclosing nothing.

I never voted a Democratic ticket, nor do I expect ever to affiliate with that party; but I think the election of Mr. Tilden would prove a wholesome purgative to the Republican party. W. H. B.

Washington, D. C, Oct. 21, 1876,

Now, Bro. Bennett, if I find myself now affiliating with the Democrats, it is because of the outrages done by the Republican party since 1876, among which are some that you hav enumerated. But the greatest of all in my estimation is the theft of the Presidency, now admitted by many Republicans. My oldest and one of my most esteemed correspondents wrote this to me two years ago, "I think Tilden was choused out of the Presidency, and I thank God he was." The same Republican friend recently wrote saying that he was "for Grant for a third term, or even a thirty-third." If that is Republicanism, I am a Democrat.

It seems to me a just retribution to the Republicans for their aspersion of Mr. Tilden in 1876 that they are now saddled with a candidate who stands convicted by his party of bribe-taking and perjury. More than a dozen years ago, when reporting in the House of Representativs, I lost confidence in Garfield's integrity. I remember a private remark made at that time in my hearing by the late Henry J. Raymond, then a member of the House. Alluding to some trick of the ex-reverend from Ohio, he said, "If you want a particularly mean act done, get a clergyman to do it."

There may be ground for the fear of Catholic ascendancy in this country by and by, or rather, I would say, fear of a United Catholic and Protestant ascendancy; but for the past ten years the administration has been greatly controlled by the Methodist church North, backed up by almost unanimous Protestant support. If Mr. Garfield is elected, that ascendancy will continue. I therefore want a change; and if I should liv long enough to see the political power of the Catholic church equal that of the Methodist church now, I shall go for another change.

Personally, I beg leave to say that as a resident of the District of Columbia I hav lost the right to vote; that I never sought or held federal office, and know of none that I would be willing to accept. Wm. Henry Burr.

Washington, D. C., July 16th.

Good for Greens.

The last Truth Seeker burst out suddenly and intensely political. If it is a free clash of opinions count me in.

And, first, let me say we want no more third parties—that is my publicly-expressed, private opinion. The Liberals made a third party last year at Cincinnati. That party went on its victorious way till the members of it packed their carpet-bags and got out of town. Not the first peep has been heard of it since. I understand that the rousing address its resolutions called for flitted back and forth between Boston, New York, and Washington till finally it got lost in a pigeon-hole of scare and disagreement. The great ally who was to lead all Liberal hosts dove down deep in the Liberal pool at Cincinnati and came up dry in the same old Republican pond at Chicago. There the convention corked him up, and not a word from him out loud was permitted. The New York Times expressly says that Fry and Hale, of Maine, held their thumb on his spout in mortal terror lest he should say something for Blaine and blast his prospects forever. He stands all the buffs and rebuffs, put upon him because he is an Infidel, by the Republicans, who want his private but not his public influence any more; and to the persistent end he toots for Garfield. He says: "As long as the Democratic party is controlled by the Catholics, he will vote some other ticket"—which seems to mean Garfield, who is controlled by Protestants, who are a thousand times meaner than the Catholics, in these modern days and in the United States, at any rate. He says: "As long as the Democratic party is afraid to pass a resolution that the public moneys shall not be given to sectarian schools, he will vote some other ticket"—meaning the Republicans, who make Comstock laws, Sunday laws, imprison editors, keep the Bible in the public schools, vote, every man of them, in their Senate, to put God into the Constitution, and grab as eagerly for sectarian appropriations as the Democratic Catholics do every time they get a chance. He says this, too, in the face of the fact that the Democratic platform expressly affirms "separation of church and state for the good of each." That affirmation extends and covers, to all intents and purposes, the whole of the first plank of the National Liberal League. The lesser denial of moneys to sectarian schools is included in the greater Democratic plank. This is the whole of which his sectarian school demand is only a part. In addition, the principles affirmed by Gen. Hancock, in his Louisiana military orders, are to the same purport. They contain the whole of a great principle, while the Republicans come tardily off with small segments and branches of it.

Also, the ink of his letter was hardly dry, indeed, very likely the two illustrious men were writing at the same time, when the illustrious Garfield was saying, in his letter of acceptance, "The separation of the church and state in everything relating to taxation should be absolute."

Now, it is a maxim of law that in a statement of that kind, where a special thing is included, all other things are excluded. That Garfield affirmation, then, means "separation of church and state in everything relating to taxation" but union of church and state, as of old, in everything relating to the transportation of Infidel newspapers and books in the mails, imprisonment of Infidel editors, Bible in the public schools, Sunday laws, and God in the Constitution. I shall admire to see anybody asking such a man as Garfield questions; neither are Liberals anywhere "afraid of the answers" he will giv. We are cock sure that they will be such as to sink him beneath Presidential resurrection. So much for the letter of Col. Ingersoll; and so much to indicate that we don't want the intermediate machinery of a Liberty party any more. The League itself is party enough, and whatever it does it will be better to do direct, or by its own political committee.

Now a little consideration should be given to other letters in the last Truth Seeker. Mr. Walker "sadly confesses his disappointment at the action of the Greenback Convention," with its "farce of prayer and a religious bigot at the head of its ticket." How then does he expect Liberals who are not Greenbackers to shout themselvs hoarse and shy up their hats in a crowd so meager as that is likely to be? Besides, what is there in the Greenback platform worth a moment's consideration by Liberals in comparison to the wide, sweeping, unconditional "Separation of Church and State for the good of each" in the Democratic platform? The Greenback "taxation of all property" is Liberal only by implication, blindly stated if it means taxation of church property, has not the courage to say the thing right out, and, like the Republican denial of appropriations to sectarian schools, is only a small part of which the Democratic plank is the whole. If the Greenbackers had had the wisdom, and after that the courage, to put in that short, curt, expressiv, happy statement—"Separation of Church and State for the good of each"—then they, instead of the Democrats, would hav stolen the Liberal thunder that will lighten all around the political sky. Why should we go for a poor, weak party that treats the Liberals with "spurn" and that isn't going to win a single elector unless it may be by "fusion" with the Democrats in a state like Maine.

It is the fashion to say that platform promises do not amount to anything. Well, they don't, if constituents drop into their holes after voting and fail to follow the platform promises up. But suppose Hancock elected and a Democratic Congress with him; and then four or five hundred Liberal Leagues go for them with petition and demand, with a rain of correspondence, newspaper articles, and the lobby! Just giv them the chance of one Congress to do something. If they don't do it, then in 1882 comes the election of a new Congress. By that time with only ordinary Liberal effort there may be five hundred Liberal Leagues with a constituency of an average of one thousand votes each—their own and what they can influence. Then giv the Congress of '82 to the Republicans—first exacting pledges, platforms, and promises. Both parties then will begin to smell a rat and conclude it is better to perform where they promis. In this way we will get "a good ready" for 1884 and be recognized as a power to be treated with.

Can't you, Bro. Walker, not as a partisan, Greenback or other, but as a Liberal, plot, swear, and conspire with me to take a long look ahead and vote shoulder to shoulder, as, after talking it all over and developing the best policy, we conclude for any given year it is best to vote? Cannot Wright, Bennett, Wakeman, Rawson, and Green join us? Cannot a hundred, a thousand, a million, do the same? In such a canvass we hav to lie low for the choicest ducks, wait and work with patience, bide our time till the flock comes sailing right into our toils. The first thing to do is to free our hearts and minds of political cant. Cease being partisan, and be, first and above all, Liberal. Adjourn tariff, hard or soft money, internal improvements, till we clean out this nest of priests and robbers. Then tariff, money, internal, and other reforms will come all the sooner and come to stay, because we will hav more honest agents to carry them out.

Mr. Truesdell implies that Liberals deem Hayes a great deal worse than the Republican party. Just the contrary is the view of all observing, clear-sighted Liberals. The Republican party made the priestly-inspired laws which Hayes executes. The Republican party in the Senate, not the President, voted God into the Constitution. And now in this campaign Garfield alone is a small consideration. It is the Republican party that Liberals want to put out of power. It is also the fashion to say that parties cannot change and do not progress. With more space I could giv instances showing that they do. Even the favorit leopard that both Walker and Truesdell twit with being so awfully spotted before the world, both can and has very greatly changed his spots. Just go back to the primeval leopard and see the almost unrecognizable difference. Pour a strain of Liberal League blood into the Democratic leopard and we will knock spots out of him—"you bet!"

The letter of Peter Soule has the right ring in it. He says, "The moment the Liberals lend their political power without holding a distinct platform and independent issues of their own to either the Democratic or Republican party they will hav consigned a power not easily regained." That is wisdom, and that, as I understand it, is what the Liberal League proposes always absolutely to hold.

H. B. Brown is amiable, and not so Demo-phobic as some. To please him, Walker, and other Greenbackers, I will remind them that after all our discussion and fusillade of sharp hits, we propose, as H. L. Green has intimated, to leave the determination of the Liberal policy to the next Liberal League Congress. If they resolve in favor of Greenbacks, green it shall be with all that that implies. Liberals believe in organization, co-operation, and agreement. Whatever we say in debate, when it comes to final action we must agree. Now let the chatter go on.

These are the views of a Henry Clay Whig, Free Soiler, Abolitionist, Fremont and Lincoln Republican, plus one vote for Grant, which is the only act in a long life he feels the need of a God to forgiv.

T. C. Leland.

The Freethinkers' Convention.

A SPECIAL NOTICE.

I hav made arrangements with one of the best show-bill printers of the United States to print some large posters for advertising the Freethinkers' Convention. The posters will be 33x48 inches in size, printed in red and blue ink, with a fine border.

On these posters will be printed, first, a picture of an American eagle with a scroll in his beak on which will be inscribed "Universal Mental Liberty," under which will be a full notice of the Convention, including names of speakers, railroad rates, etc,. etc. These bills will be forwarded by me to any address on application. The charges for the same will be for 25 or less 7 cents each, for any number over 25, 6 cents each. If sent by mail an additional sum sufficient to cover postage must be added. I earnestly request every friend of Freethought to order a few of these bills and aid in getting them posted throughout the whole country. H. L. Green,

Salamanca, N. Y. Sec. Freethinkers' Association.

Elmina's Suggestion.

Dear Truth Seekers: Would it not be well to write to J. G. Holland concerning the wrong he has done to D. M. Bennett and to every pure and true man and woman who dares to support this brave, bold, strong, and fearless Freethinker? I hav written to-day, and trust you will all write and show him what manner of people he has ignorantly and unwisely slandered and misrepresented. Continual agitation and self-defense and defense of our opinions, sentiments, and convictions will keep us fresh, vigorous, strong, and constant to truth.

Yours combativly to error,

Snowville, Va. Elmina D Slenker.

John N. Abbott, general passenger agent of the Erie Railway, writes me that he will return home, on the Erie road and all its branches, all persons who attend the Hornellsville Convention at one-third the ordinary fare. But I hope some of our Liberal friends in New York who are railroad men will see Mr. Abbott and obtain still better rates. H. L. Green.

The Spiritual Trinity.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A few days ago I sent an article for this paper entitled "A Plea for Free Debate," not that I think our Spiritual friends hav produced any evidence which can be called much more satisfactory if any than the Christians' hope, but on principle I am in favor of all sides having a fair field. This week The Truth Seeker comes heavily freighted with three articles by three Spiritualists. Only one accepts the invitation to debate. I supposed they were anxious to annihilate the Materialists. They hav been quite free in assertions that the latter-named were not ready, or were unwilling, to meet their champions, who go armed with bristling facts. I supposed I was doing them a favor by offering myself as a living sacrifice to their overwhelming proofs of spirit existence and communication. They hav always given the world to understand that they court investigation and discussion. Why, then, do they hang back?

Mr. J. H. W. Toohey givs four subdivided reasons why he will not debate. They are about as satisfactory as most of those given by the clergy. He professes to be a Spiritualist, but says Maudsley says Spiritualism is not a scientific term! I wonder if Spiritualism has many such defenders left! Maudsley, an author whom I greatly admire, does not consider "Materialism," as interpreted by Huxley, Youmans, and others, as unscientific. Maudsley does not favor merely metaphysical disquisitions. Nor do I. Mr. Toohey traps himself when he says that Maudsley is in favor of men applying themselvs diligently to "discover by direct interrogation of nature how much can be done" scientifically. That is just what modern Materialists hold to. Mr. Toohey says (quoting Liebig), "The only questions nature hears are experiments; the only answer she givs, phenomena." That is just what we say. My challenge distinctly includes experiments. What hav Spiritualists been talking about for thirty years if not experiment, investigation, phenomena? I perceive that when leading Spiritualists are invited to demonstrate, to subject their so-called Spiritual phenomena to the test of experiment, they shrink from the ordeal on the plea that the term Spiritualism is not scientific, and straightway the gentleman devours his own objection by saying that the people who hav studied "phenomena classified as Spiritual" are "satisfied with the logic of facts." He first repudiates even the name as entitled to scientific recognition, kicks the thing out of the court of science, and then calls it back to tell it how satisfactory it is!

One reason that Mr. Toohey will not debate is because of a growing desire to concentrate the Liberal sentiment of the country against the foes of progress, and the "upbuilding of the Liberal League movement." He did not tell us in what way earnest debates upon the problems of life and death would interfere with that good work. I think I hav organized three Liberal Leagues to the gentleman's one. My many debates with the clergy hav facilitated my work for Liberalism and the League. All public meetings whose aim is the agitation of thought hav an influence in favor of mental freedom.

I hav thus examined the gentleman's reasons for not debating, and find them as puerile as the clergy's. Never did I expect to liv long enough to see Spiritualists decline to enter the arena of debate, and if this refusal becomes general all along the line, I can fairly apply to Spiritualism what it has for thirty years flung into the teeth of the church, and for precisely the same reason—"Any system which shuns investigation openly manifests its own error."

T. B. Taylor, M.D., an ex-minister of the Christian religion, is the second person of my triple foe, and says, "I hold myself ready to meet you." That looks like work; and just as soon as arrangements can be made, at any point where such a debate is desired, we will join issue. If Spiritualists really want debate, they will do as much to bring it about as the church does, or as they do when they challenge the church. It is hardly reasonable to ask an opponent to travel half way across the continent to hold a debate, with the liberal assurance that he will be welcome to bear one-half the expenses. I hav no desire to force a debate upon any person or community. There are several places where the Materialists will pay one-half the expenses of a joint oral debate, but the Spiritualists fail to come to time.

Our friend Taylor informs me that there are many of my friends who honestly question my entire sincerity. Queer friends they must be! It seems to be a characteristic of Spiritualists to doubt the sincerity of everybody who differs from them, and feel rather shaky about their own. I need only go to Mr. Taylor's letter to prove it. He says he has been "doubted by such Spiritualists as J. M. Peebles and Giles B. Stebbins." Impugning the motivs of others is a wide-spread chronic disease among Spiritualists. There are a few honorable exceptions. Mr. Taylor's "ilk" hav not a bright record in this respect, as he is obliged to confess.

In reference to Dr. Taylor's allusion to Mr. Underwood, I do not think the latter is afraid of the face of man or spirit in debate. He doubtless perceived that Spiritualists do not encourage debate with Materialists, and that they were indisposed to make controversy impersonal and friendly.

Mr. E. A Chapman is the third person in this strange trinity. I met this fidgety friend in Michigan. He listened to two of my lectures in Saranac, and worked like a hero for my course in Lowell. I had many pleasant conversations with him. Since I left I fear some peevish spirit has obsessed him. He charges me with "injustice" toward my "friends and allies;" that I accept the "services and money of Spiritualists" and then insult them by advocating what I think is true. He says my statements are "speculativ science," "hide-bound and speculativ science," Then he flatly contradicts himself by saying, "I find everything Mr. Jamieson said on the subject of evolution in works on astronomy, physical geography, and geology." In one breath he declares it is my own speculation; in the next, based upon standard works. A man who so easily befogs himself in his own communication cannot be relied upon to accurately report conversations. The money and service of Spiritualists were accepted only on the broad basis of Liberalism, and they were extended on that ground. I hav never asked their aid on any other terms than freedom to utter my own convictions of truth. He agreed with me. But now he repudiates his own agreement. He charges me with turning "somersaults;" that I forgot in Lowell what I had said in Saranac. It is the first time I hav been taxed with a poor memory. I will now convict him. He puts these words into my mouth, "Spirits claim," etc. My language was, "Spiritualists claim." He asserts I declared that to see materialized spirits would satisfy me, while those who were present will remember that I said: "I would not only want to see but to handle spirits; and to make assurance doubly sure I would want to chemically analyze the spirit. You may think I am unreasonable. If I am I cannot help it." So the "somersault" is in his own imagination.

Mr. Chapman asserts that I declared in my Lowell lecture on evolution that "man by comparison shrank into such utter insignificance that he was not worth being carried forward into a future existence any more than the merest worm." I never said anything like that. My audiences know that instead of belittling man I speak of him as the crown of life on this globe; that his genius girdles the earth with lightning intelligence, and that his thought sweeps the abyss of space in quest of knowledge. In reference to a future state I said, "I do not know."

He says I shall not get them before an audience while I tell them "in behalf of speculativ science" that they are "idiotic, deluded, and deceived." Let me say to this gentleman that there is no such thing as "speculativ" science. I do not call people idiotic. I think it would be unkind to twit an idiot with the fact. Mr. Chapman's fear of the epithets I would call them is groundless.

What I say upon the subject of evidence to a mind at twenty and at forty years of age is a fact that almost any mind can verify for itself. He himself admitted that what was evidence to his mind five years ago is not evidence now.

He wants me to say what I consider as absolute proof. I answer, A demonstration; certain knowledge; a fact or truth about which there is no doubt. And that is just what the Spiritualists claim to hav. This has been their proud boast. But they shrink from the trial.

W. F. Jamieson.

172 and 174 Clark st., Chicago, Ill.

---

[From the New York Sun.]

If the Women Desert the Church?

Is the church losing its hold on the women? If so, it is in greater danger than it ever was in before.

An observant Englishwoman is satisfied that there is no room for doubt as to the fact; that the peril is real and imminent. She asserts that among the most intelligent women in England unbelief is spreading year by year, and at a rapid rate. The educated countrywomen of Harriet Martineau and Francis Power Cobbe are not poring over the Bible and prayer book as their mothers and grandmothers did. They are reading Darwin and Spencer, Huxley and Tyndall.

Is this true to any appreciable extent of the educated women of the United States? We know it was not true even so recently as Margaret Fuller's time. Unbelieving or doubting women were as rare here then as white blackbirds. But since then there has been a notable increase in the number and improvement in the quality of girls' schools; well equipped colleges for young women hav sprung up; colleges heretofore sacred to the education of the young male of the human species hav opened their doors to his sisters. Even conservativ Harvard has somewhat tardily and grudgingly shown a disposition to adjust itself to the changed conditions. An American girl of twenty-three who has had "advantages," to borrow a New Englandism, is a very different young person from that other American girl whom her father courted, loving her all the better perhaps for her simplicity, sweet ignorance, and undoubting piety. This modern girl has studied, more or less thoroughly, the higher mathematics and the natural sciences; she has read or skimmed the books of the day; she has heard some of the lecturers; she keeps the run of the magazines; she has her reading club, possibly a social-literary club as well; very likely she is writing a novel, or getting ready to do so by assiduous magazine practice; she has her head full and her hands full. Certainly the church does not fill the same place in her thoughts or her life that it did in her mother's at her age. Still it remains to be proved that she is ceasing to be a Christian and becoming an unbeliever.

If she is, the outlook for the church is disquieting. Ever since it was written, the preachers hav been fond of quoting a verse setting forth that woman was

"Last at his cross and earliest at his grave."

From time immemorial the clergy and the women hav been close allies. The day that saw this alliance broken would be a cloudy day for the former. What would they do for hearers? In very many of the churches of this city anywhere from two-thirds to nine-tenths of the weekly congregation are women. Moreover, of the comparativly small number of men who are habitual or casual church-goers, how many would be in the pews if they had not been attracted, coaxed, or gently coerced thither by women?

Yet it is not in looking down upon a dwindling congregation that the preacher would feel most acutely the withdrawal of that potent womanly influence which Goethe has sung in the last lines of "Faust." If the mothers turn unbelievers, what chance will there be for the children?

If the preachers are at a loss for a topic at their meetings next Monday, let them take this one, "Is the higher education sapping the faith and chilling the piety of women?"

REMARKS BY MR. SICKELS.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: After reading the above I am impelled to say that it has always been with feelings of regret akin to despair that I hav heard women denounce the opinions of Infidels. Indeed, from having been an earnest advocate of the justice of granting the franchise to woman as her absolute right, I hav become somewhat less enthusiastic of late. I hav feared that women, as in the past, would be our worst enemies, and that, did they possess the power, we would see the Christian God in the Constitution and ecclesiastical tyranny supreme. But it seems as though light is breaking through the gloom at last, and we are to hav woman's all-powerful aid. And how efficient she would be! Once emancipated from the thraldom of priesthood, we know enough of woman's influence, as evidenced in all that she heartily undertakes to do, to be assured that she would be satisfied with no half-way measures; priestcraft would be swept from off the face of the civilized portion of the earth.

W. B. Sickels.

---

The Presidential Question.

TO THE AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES AND THE FRIENDS OF THE LIBERAL LEAGUE MOVEMENT GENERALLY.

Friends of State Secularization: It is an old saying that "opposition is the life of business," and a little friendly strife may prove advantageous to the Liberal League movement. The National Liberal League is in fact a political organization, inaugurated for the purpose of accomplishing the entire separation of church and state in this country; and it can only do that by entering the political field as a political party, and that is what it purposes to do at the coming Presidential election.

As the League is not a very large party, to make itself felt the members should first resolve that they will all vote togther. United we are strong, divided we amount to nothing.

It is evident at the present time that there is an honest difference of opinion as to the candidates we should support at the Presidential election this fall. Some favor Gen. Garfield, some Gen. Hancock, some Gen. Weaver, and others are in favor of a separate nomination.

The National Liberal League Congress will probably be called before long in one of our Western cities, at which the question, Who shall be the candidates of the National Liberal League? should and probably will be settled; and when there decided every friend of the Liberal League movement should acquiesce in the decision and we should all vote the same ticket. By so doing we can make our influence felt. And previous to the meeting of the Congress there should be a friendly and free discussion of the subject in the various auxiliary Leagues and through the Liberal papers as to the best course to pursue. The platforms of the late political conventions and the views and public characters of the respectiv candidates should be thoroughly canvassed, with the sole object in view of ascertaining the course to pursue that will most advance the principles of the National Liberal League.

And here I desire to suggest a very important work to be done. There are thousands of Liberals in this country who hav not as yet organized themselves into Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, but who feel the same interest in the success of the movement as do the organized Liberals. And this class of course will find themselves divided in opinion upon the candidates above named, favoring the one or the other or being in favor of a new ticket. Now these unorganized Liberals should meet at once in their respectiv towns and neighborhoods and form themselves into Leagues and elect their delegates to the Congress soon to assemble. There should be at least one hundred of these new Leagues formed before the Congress meets, with their delegates chosen. This would giv us three hundred Auxiliary Leagues and entitle the Congress to fifteen hundred delegates, and, if half of the Auxiliary Leagues were fully represented, make our "National Presidential Convention" as large as any one yet held. Such a Convention would attract the attention of the whole country and command the recognition of the various political parties.

Friends of state secularization, shall we hav such a Convention, composed of the best men and women of this country?

H. L. Green,
Ch. Ex. Com. N. L. L.

Salamanca, N. Y., July 4 1880.

---

"Christianity Run Wild."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In The Truth Seeker of July 3d, Mr. Wm. N. Ridinger expresses the fear that I am offended because he in a former article said, "Spiritualism is Christianity run wild." I am not offended, and am glad brother Ridinger "judges from my letters" I would not be at any difference of opinion. Should I get offended at all who use offensiv epithets concerning our beautiful philosophy, I would soon be a fit subject for a lunatic asylum. If he believes "Spiritualism is Christianity run wild," it is his misfortune, not mine. He could not find a more offensiv term, yet I forgave him because I concluded he was one of those who shone by reflected or borrowed light. I judged so from one of his arguments, which was that our destiny must be the same as lice, bedbugs, fleas, etc.

When people investigate thoroughly all questions before forming and venturing to express opinions, when they realize that truth has been crushed to earth during all the ages of the past, by the mighty weight of error that fills the world, and that truth has always been unpopular, they will cease to malign and persecute the few who dare to do right, and truth will hav more friends. The truth never needed friends more than to-day. Spiritualism does not in any sense resemble Christianity. Like Christ, it never had a father, or mother even. It does not owe its birth or existence to an immaculate conception, or any other miracle, but to actual facts—manifestations of intelligence and power—witnessed by millions of the most intelligent people of earth. Spiritualism rejects all superstitions, bibles, saviors, atonements, faiths, gods, devils, heavens, and hells, therefore it is as unlike Christianity as the glorious light of the noonday sun is to the intense darknesss of a rayless night. We do not say we believe. We hav the absolute proofs. We know, and if actual communion between the world of spirits in the flesh and the world of spirits out of the flesh is "Christianity run wild" I am not aware of it. If Mr. Ridinger thinks so it is his privilege. He finds an argument against Spiritualism in the fact that we are liable to die and hav our places filled by bad stepfathers who would abuse the wife and children, squander the property we hav left, a knowledge of which would render us miserable, and calls this "the dark side of Spiritualism." He says this is hell, therefore, Christianity and Spiritualism differ only in the fact that the one allows all good people to go to heaven, the other, some good people to go to hell. In view of this Mr. Ridinger sighs for the rest of annihilation. He thinks the risk we run of being made unhappy by the knowledge that our wives and children are unhappy ought to make us prefer the blissful ignorance of annihilation. But I do not see how this helps the matter. If I could see that the blissful rest of annihilation would relieve the distress of our friends yet in the flesh, I might perhaps be convinced, but I cannot. According to this argument, whenever our families and friends are suffering and we cannot relieve them, drunkenness, or anything that would induce a state of blissful ignorance, would be a blessing. Whisky would be a good substitute for annihilation until death steps in and completes the work. But what an argument, to prefer annihilation, because, perchance, our wives and children may hav the misfortune to hav a bad husband and stepfather. I call this most emphatically the "baby act." Should they be more fortunate we must presume the blissful rest and ignorance of annihilation would not be so desirable, and Spiritualism in this instance fail to hav a "dark side." I always had a sovereign contempt for lazy, whinning shirks who prefer starvation and annihilation to honest labor and an honorable existence. Let us be men and women, "heroes in the strife," "with a heart for any fate." "Don't giv up the ship." If storms arise and misfortunes come we should meet them like heroes, determined if we cannot avert or subdue them, to do something to modify and break their force. Let us all while here do something to make this world better, and hasten the time when all men will make good stepfathers and husbands, honorable and just in all relations and under all circumstances.

Dead dogs can float down stream. Live dogs may swim up stream. E. A. CHAPMAN.

Lowell, Mich.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 4.

You who plead for "moderate indulgence," "a happy medium," or a "natural desire," must remember that every indulgence diverts vital power from the brain and vital principle from the blood, and continued excesses weaken the whole system, mental and bodily. Sexual intemperance is the one prolific cause of female diseases and weaknesses, including cancers, tumors, abcesses, etc., etc. And look at our newpapers with whole columns devoted to advertisements offering to restore "Lost manhood" for 25 cents, and no questions asked! Read the names of hundreds of noxious drugs for general debility, seminal weakness, sexual abuses, indiscretions of youth, etc., etc., and ask yourselves if a little "pleasure" will counterbalance all this.

I remember when a child there was nothing I loved to drink so well as milk punch, sweetened rum and water, etc., and no temperance argument ever struck me as forcibly as the one that plainly demonstrated to my understanding that every drop of alchohol taken into the system was an injury to it. That it was a disease generator and a means of slow suicide, was what decided me to let it severely alone and became a practical teetotaler.

It was precisely the same line of argument that caused me to become a convert to sexual teetotalism. The fact that every indulgence was so much taken from vital strength decided the day and won the victory.

A pure and happy love that yields to sexual indulgence for the sake of procreation can afford to lose a little for the greater good to be obtained. But a direct waste for momentary gratification that only, increases desire and injures health at the same time, is reprehensible indeed in the wise, and sadly sorrowful to contemplate in the ignorant.

A man gives of his own life to beget his child; he has a pure and holy joy in thus surrendering a portion of his own vital force, and in conjunction with his beloved wife consummates the act that shall make them parents. This is a pure and legitimate enjoyment, where the two are strong and vigorous mentally and physically. But all indulgence after conception is as unnatural and unhealthy as to eat after the appetite is satiated. To eat simply because food tastes good is a sin against nature, and it is the same in the case of which I hav spoken. The setting hen and the impregnated female animal always repulse the male, as would be the case with all women did they liv pure, natural, and wholesome lives. Stimulated desires and fostered passions are no rule to go by, but the results of violated functions are sure criterions of great wrongs and greater ignorance. The indigestion, sick headache, vomiting, etc., that occur in the first months of pregnancy are greatly due to the sexual intemperance indulged in, which is unnatural and unhealthful to both participants as well as to the embryotic life that is being generated. Every act of indulgence that is not mutually desired is pernicious to both, and hence when the wife is pregnant the husband is compelled to be continent as a matter of self-preservation. The wife having no natural desire makes the act one of injury to him as well as herself. Pregnant women whose husbands are away from home are generally far healthier during gestation than those whose husbands are always with them. Widows are proverbially healthier and more sweet tempered than wives. And the reverse would be the case were temperance and chastity the rule in married life. The wife whose husband feels for her a true, loving friendship, who cares more for her health and comfort than his own sensual gratification, and values her for her society, her sympathy, her companionship, and real affection for himself, has a source of pure, sweet contentment the widow and unmarried cannot hav. She has one friend who is ever fond and ever true and is her very own to love and be loved, not in lust and passion, but with a higher and holier oneness of heart, mind, and soul. If children come to them they will not be misbegotten and undesired accidents, but the fruit of a wise, careful physiological generation growing out of pure, true love, and a high and holy purpose.

They will be born with their rightful inheritance of "sound minds in sound bodies," and with desires and tendencies toward all that is great, good, and ennobling evolving from the happy, healthful conditions that surrounded them in embryo.

When continence brings all this and a million times more, is it not worth our while to teach it, practice it, liv it, and lawfully legislate for it?

"Ignorance is the evil and knowledge the remedy." And this knowledge of alphaism, of temperance, is the most desirable and most blessed of all knowledge now needed by the world.

"The time has come to preach the soul.
No meagre-spread, the manly whole;
Let agitation come. Who fears?
We need a flood, the filth of years
Has gathered round us. Roll, then, on;
What cannot stand had best be gone."

Snowville, Va. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

[From the Minneapolis Evening Journal.]

The Case of Our Dr. Tanner in New York.

WHAT DR. STOLZ HAS TO SAY ON THE SUBJECT.

It is by this time generally known that Dr. Tanner, of Minneapolis, has again undertaken the difficult task of living without food forty days, this time under the immediate watchfulness of a committee of physicians of New York city. I would state here, for the benefit of Dr. Tanner, that I am personally aquainted with him and believe him to be honest in his convictions. He is a man of more than ordinary natural abilities, and has a good education. He is also a successful physician, when he devotes his time to the practice. He is of the vital mental temperament; the vital slightly predominating over the mental, and this naturally makes him incline to take his ease. Yet when thoroughly aroused he is capable of much mental force, and is a fair success as a public speaker. There is, however, one trait of character that the doctor possesses largely in excess over other people, which is, that he is capable of concentrating his whole mind on one thing at a time or on one subject of thought. He also has great will power over self. All of his passions are subordinate to and under control of his will. This last attribute he tells me, was mainly acquired by a constant effort of the will and years of practice. This, then, enables him to liv a sort of an alternate life of the dual forces of both the body as well as the mind. It will be admitted in this connection that we possess, strictly speaking, and in the philosophic and scientific sense, simply a dual sense. viz., the external, voluntary, or corporeal sense, and the internal or non-corporeal sense. When the external sense is in full working order, the material of the body is rapidly consumed, but when this sense is at rest the involuntary sense alone consumes, comparativly, but little of the body. By the simple exercise of the will Dr. Tanner is enabled to order the corporeal or voluntary sense to rest, or to come on duty as the surrounding conditions may require it. At any time the doctor is enabled to go to sleep in a moment.

Now it is a physiological fact that while we are asleep very little, if any, nourishment is required by the system. Whatever then suspends the voluntary activities of mind or body will prevent a consumption of the body, whether by natural sleep, mental control, or by other means. Cases may be cited of frequent occurrences in our inebriate asylums, effected by a peculiar insanity, who liv days, weeks, and even months, on very little food. Conditions of deep sorrow may suspend the voluntary powers, and persons hav lived many days in a sort of semi-consciousness of life without eating or drinking. A case in point: A lady some years since came under my care, who while splitting kindling-wood, by accident cut wide open her great toe. The sight of blood and the pain together threw her into a mental condition that for more than three weeks she never partook of food. Narcotics and anæsthetics are also means by which the voluntary nerves are quieted and thus the waste of the body suspended and life may be prolonged for an incredible long time without food. Trance, cataleptic, somnambulic, mesmeric, as the normal sleep, are states during which no food is required. The hibernating animals simply suspend the voluntary life and without food come out of their dens in the spring strong and plump. Spirituous liquors hav a similar effect, and this explains in part why an old drinker keeps plump and round, though vitality in his case may be consuming.

Whatever then may bring about the above conditions are the means by which great feats may be accomplished in the way of fasting. Dr. Tanner has the power by his own will to suspend the voluntary function, and to a large extent he is able to do this even while he is conversing. He also can stop thinking, so while he walks he need not think, and vice versa, holding in subjection those of the sub-senses which otherwise might be unnecessarily activ, conserving thus much of his vitality as well as the tissues of the body. When Dr. Tanner acquires the power to suspend the voluntary life for forty days he can come out with a loss of but two or three pounds of flesh, and all this time without food. As it is now it will require great care to carry him through, and I hav above given the law. I believe if Dr. Tanner fails in his present experiment it will be mainly due to the fact of being watched, physicians examining his pulse, temperature of his body, etc., and the many visitors, altogether, creating an undue excitement of the voluntary sense, using material of the body which under other and more favorable circumstances might be preserved. There is no doubt but that he went through his forty days' fast a few years ago all right and honestly. To this effect we hav also the statement of Dr. Moyer, who was Dr. Tanner's physician at the time, and Dr. Moyer is a scientific physician, and his veracity has never been questioned.

J. STOLZ, M.D.

Book Notices.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "Love Ventures," like "Cupid's Yokes," has a very deceiving title. I supposed it only a series of love tales, whereas the perusal of it shows it to be a clever and amusing satire on the manners and customs, as well as the religion and politics, of our country. It is hygienic, Infidel, and humorous, reminds one greatly of "Gulliver's Travels," though on a smaller and simpler scale. It is readable, laughable, interesting, and able. The writer closes with this appeal:

May a kind providence turn the hearts of enough of you to buy this book so that I may get away from you, and sail the seas again, to seek the fair land of Aliunde, so far away beyond the blue evening skies. Coova and my little boy wait for me.

---

I hav just read "An Outline of the French Revolution," by our busy and activ worker W. S. Bell, and contrary to my expectations found it a readable little work. I hav dipped into several histories of this revolution, but never had patience and perseverence to read one of them all through before. But Mr. Bell has, with his usual tact and simple directness, written the subject up in such straightforward way as to lead the reader right on to the consummation before he has time to think the subject dull or uninteresting.

That the people had great cause to fight for their rights I will show by one little item from the book before me:

So onerous were the burdens of the peasant that had he been asked, "What is the chief end of man?" his answer would undoubtedly hav been, "To pay taxes and tithes." Even the peasant's salt is taxed, and not only that but he is bound to take a certain quantity every year, which he may not use except under prescribed conditions. One example will suffice. Should he buy some salt for his soup and economize part of it to pickle a piece of pork, the tax collectors are down on him. His pork is confiscated, and the fine is three hundred francs. The salt must be used for the purpose for which it was bought. Should he take a pail of sea water to boil down its brine, he incurs a fine of forty francs.

---

I hav received "The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate," and think it is a valuable addition to a library of Liberal literature. Jamieson proves to the satisfaction of all unbiased thinkers that "the Bible is merely a human production and abounds in contradictions, and conflicts with science," and that the Christian religion and the Bible tend to immorality and the injury of society; while the Rev. Mr. Ditzler probably proves the contrary to the satisfaction of those who hav "imbibed theology with their mothers' milk" and are "to the manor born."

Both Christian and Infidel will find food for thought in this interesting little volume, which is published and sold for the small sum of fifty cents in paper and seventy-five cents in cloth, by our indefatigable and ever-earnest editor, Mr. D. M. Bennett, who has given to the world the largest amount of Liberal volumes ever offered by any individual in the same number of years. Liberals will please purchase, and thus secure a good book and encourage a wise worker for worth and "worldliness," whose glorious motto is, One world at a time, and that well lived.

July 11, 1880. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Freethinkers' Convention.

It was intended to hav the Freethinkers' Convention held four days, ending on Sunday, but by mistake it was called for Sept. 1st. To correct the error the Convention will commence Sept. 1st and end on Sunday evening Sept 5th; it will therefore hold five days, the same as last year. There will be speakers enough to occupy the whole time.

H. L. GREEN.

"Immensity of the Stars."

Compared with stellar immensity, how infinitesimal we seem!

Infinitesimal as we seem, we are part and parcel of this stupendous universe.

To find the Sublime Architect of this stupendous universe, we'v no need to ransack the immensity of space, nor worlds innumerable. We find the eternal DUAD in our own wee selvs, either of which, taken separately, is but half a God—or half a man.

The unity of the two moieties, on the ever-ascending grade, reaching to the sublime center of all vitality, is the aspiration, the desideratum, of all purity-loving souls, especially in this age of mental expansion. PRENTISS.

Letters from Friends.

FLORIDA, O., July 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed $3 for which send me the "works of Thomas Paine" as advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I hav a great amount of admiration for the noble woman, Elmina D. Slenker, and hope to read many of her useful and beautiful thoughts.

I am anxious to see the discussions upon Spiritualism. We hav witnessed some of the manifestations and hav thus far been unable to account for them in any other way than through intelligences that once were activ in living physical bodies. Respectfully, G. W. PARRY.

EAST DUBUQUE, ILL., July 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav again returned to this place for a short time. Health not good. I hav read some three or four numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER with much interest, and consider that you hav thus far completely vanquished your enemies. And the late one in the form of Dr. J. Holland, and beneath what I would wish to call a man has by his wicked, uncalled-for attack, destitute of facts and abounding in falsehood, placed himself as low on the scale of depravity as a murdering Modoc or a midnight assassin and brought execration upon his name by thousands and tens of thousands of men far better than it is possible such a wretch as he ever was or can be. A man that will needlessly injure a good, moral, truthful, industrious, and prudent man, shutting his eyes to all truth, misrepresenting and refusing to be corrected, and refusing his injured and innocent victim to be heard, deserves universal execration. I was highly pleased with friend York's letter and can indorse it. Your reply to Inquirer and Mr. Mair was splendid, as good and correctly given as it is possible. I can respond to it all except a belief in a Spiritual existence; not having received evidence sufficient to establish a belief and having witnessed phenomena that I could not account for, belief remains in abeyance; though I can say with you that I love the Spiritual philosophy and hope it is true, also that I love rational Spiritualists for their tolerance, charity, and love for humanity. That mind is matter is evident to me. I can furnish incontestible evidence that I hav caused individuals to fall into a deep sleep for five hours in the space of three minutes after having turned my mind or attention upon them, myself in the office and the patient one mile from me. Also relieved severe pain in the same manner.

I was pleased to learn that you had determined to represent this country in the Liberal Congress at Brussels. That looks like business. Borrow the money if not enough be contributed before you leave. No man upon this continent is more deserving of such a tour, to enable you to recuperate the vitality lost in a Christian prison, for defending the rights of American citizens. I herewith inclose you the five dollars pledged, and should it appear that your Liberal friends are not liberal enough to contribute sufficient under the five-dollar call (I feel confident they are), I will further pledge $10 or $20 more to meet the deficiencies, on your return. Be back in season to attend the Liberal League Congress. Important business will be presented for its attention. Fraternally and truly your friend,

D. R. BURT.

LONG LAKE, MINN., July 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I send you one dollar toward meeting your expenses in going to Europe, please accept it as a promise of good things to come, when I hav more money.

The first volume of the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" came to hand all right. I value it very highly. I love THE TRUTH SEEKER more than ever. Hope you will go to Brussels and hav a good time.

Yours truly, W. ARCHIBALD.

WACO, TEX., July 6, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: Please do not overlook the villainous attack made upon you in the editorial department of the last number (July) of Scribner's Monthly. Giv the hypocritical scamp such a beating as will teach him not to go out of his way to vilify and slander such men as Elizur Wright and yourself. The editor of a magazine that has a million readers has no right to be ignorant and mendacious, and I sincerely hope that you will giv him such a lashing through the columns of your paper as will teach him to beware of how he allows Comstock and his images to use him for their cowardly and dastardly purposes.

Yours truly, R. W. PARK.

LOWELL, NEB., July 9, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I am glad to see that you are determined to go to Europe. I pledge myself for one dollar toward defraying your expenses. I trust you will hav a good time and see all the sights. I will just remind you of a few of the many sights which I saw while in London: British Museum, National Gallery, Tower of London, that old relic of barbarism where many a noble man has lost his head only for daring to hav an opinion, St Paul's, Westminster Abbey, House of Commons, the Times printing-office, Kensington Museum, the Albert Memorial, Madam Tassaud's, Crystal Palace, and, above all, if you can possibly spare the time, go down to Hampton Court Palace, and go by one of the old four-in-hand stage coaches. Now one more and I am done. Go to Barclay & Perkin's brewery. When you go there be sure to put on an elastic vest, for you will come out about four inches bigger than when you went in. Don't be afraid of the swelling, for it will go down again and you will feel better. Yours for truth,

G. GRAY.

"BEWARE OF DOGS."

BERLIN, N. J., July 12, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav just been reading your article headed "Wrongs Too Oft Repeated," and want to say to you not to worry yourself about what Dr. Holland, Scribner's Monthly, or any other writer or paper says about you, but rest assured it will all ultimate in spreading the truth the same as your unjust imprisonment and other persecutions hav.

Fifty-seven years ago I saw the rottenness and corruption of the churches, and went forth to expose them, and that has been the chief labor of my life. I often traveled on foot from meeting to meeting, sending on appointments in advance, and oftentimes in my travels worthless dogs would run out and bark at me. If I had stopped to throw stones at the curs they would only hav yelped and snarled she more, and the whole family, perhaps the whole neighborhood, would hav rushed out to stone me; but by passing on without noticing the curs they would soon get weary of barking and lie down again to sleep till the next traveler came along. You must remember that every church has a watch-dog or snarling cur, and so pass on and take no notice of them except when they come near enough to get a good lick at them, as you hav at Holland, and soon you will be able to pursue your journey in peace. Always remember that truth will finally triumph, for this will giv you courage with which one can chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight. Yours for truth and right,

THE DEAF HERMIT.

THE AMERICAN BASTILE.

Immortalized Bennett, triumphant ascended
From orthodox dungeons to liberty's throne.
The freedom of man you hav boldly defended,
And conquered our Christian oppressors—alone.
Now on the battlefield,
Where the tried veteran's yield,
You won the fresh laurels that circle your brow.
But on the plains of peace,
Bade persecution cease,
We approve, we applaud, we welcome you now.
True sons like our fathers, will never be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant, and the sea rolls its waves.

We giv all men freedom. We claim the same blessing.
This is the grand boon we bestow, and we crave;
This only inheritance worth our possessing.
Is always the gift of the noble and brave.
Like the grand Thomas Paine,
We all tyrants disdain.
Myths, falsehoods, and bigots, we truly despise.
Let it be understood
That man's infinit good,
Freedom, honor, and happiness, duly we prize.
We sons of brave fathers will never be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant and the sea rolls its waves.

Sir, upward and onward—our freedom defending
To glory, and honor, and fame, you arise;
And like the bold eagle still higher ascending
To that elevation which truth-seekers prize.
We do swear to be free,
On the land and the sea,
False creeds and false Christians with truth we assail.
We may fill loyal graves,
But will never be slaves,
While the star-spangled banner shall float on the gale.
Brave sons of brave fathers will never be slaves
While the earth bears a plant, and the sea rolls its waves.

All Freethinkers rally! your duty demands it,
Be true to the last to our country and man,
Our tried and experienced grand hero commands it,
Our loyal field-marshal again in the van.
To the bastile when led,
How our stricken hearts bled!
But truth was our trust when Christ's thunders did roar,
Still the truth we defend,
From beginning to end,
"Fight it out on this line" till oppression is o'er.
True sons of Columbia will never be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant, and the sea rolls its waves.

We hav won many battles. Once they would burn us.
Inquisitions and tortures forever are past,
If Protestants dare they would certainly burn us,
Consign us where anguish forever would last.
Science, mercy, and truth,
Although yet in their youth,
A veto hav put upon torture and pain.
Once our country was free,
And again it will be,
American freedom forever shall reign.
The sons of brave fathers will never be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant and the sea rolls its waves.

Dear brave loyal Bennett—our country's protection,
We giv you our rights and our freedom in trust,
Forever you'll liv in man's fondest affection,
When all Christian tyrants hav moldered to dust.
To ineffable skies,
When your spirit shall rise,
Sweet flowers of memory fill every breast.
Persecution endured,
And our freedom secured,
In all coming time in the land you hav blest.
True sons of Columbia will never be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant, and the sea rolls its waves.

Very respectfully yours. E. N. KINGSLEY.

MILLVILLE, June 28, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am glad you hav got home again to attend to your business. I think it must be gratifying to you the way your friends received you on your return home from prison. I hope you may continue to liv many years yet, and so spread broadcast the freedom of speech. I hav read your paper since its commencement, and hav been well satisfied with it in all things, and I hav done all I could to sustain it. I am in my sixty-fourth year, and am very feeble. I think my days are drawing to a close. I never enjoyed very good health. I hope you may hav a pleasant trip to Europe. I would be glad to send you a few dollars, but I am not able.

D. VANVALKENBURG.

ALTON, ILL., July 6, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav several times noticed an effort of some of our Liberal friends to drag the noble TRUTH SEEKER into the support of the Democratic party, and hav before protested against this, and now again will I enter my protest, and I will not do this without some reasons. Friend Wakeman pitches out in his letter to Mr. Green with the common general abuse of the Republican candidate, Gen. Garfield, for President. All the good men died with Washington, Jefferson, and others, and now he would hav us believe that all our public men are a set of thieves. I despise this kind of stuff, and am astonished at a man of Mr. Wakeman's ability and Liberal ideas to indulge in such. I can and do condemn President Hayes' course as cowardly and mean in the extreme, not only in refusing Mr. Bennett's pardon when he knew he was wrongfully imprisoned, but I also condemn him and so did nearly every Republican for his cowardly act in surrendering the states of South Carolina and Louisiana to the power of the bulldozers, when he knew that if these states were not Republican he was not the rightful President; but then I say Republicans in general condemn him for this act of injustice and cowardice, while Democrats applauded it. Why, in the name of all that is good, should all Liberals be unceremoniously turned over to the Democrats? What has this party done to merit our support? They clung to and fostered slavery, and when our own Ingersoll went before a Democratic committee with 70,000 petitioners for the amendment or abolition of the iniquitous Comstock law, how did they treat him? I believe with contempt. Why has not a Democratic Congress, with a large majority in each House, repealed or amended that obnoxious law? Why? I ask. Will Mr. Wakeman tell us? I can answer. Because the great majority of their constituents are the most intense Christians in this or any other country, namely, the Catholics. Why shall we expect more of this class than of the more liberal, if we say the Christian element?

I admire Leland's sarcasm and sharp cuts, but he must not expect every Liberal to march into the ranks of the most bitter enemies of Liberalism.

Now let us look around us, and what we see there is apt to be a fair index to the balance like situated. Last summer, when Mr. Bennett was sent to the Albany prison, I took some pains to enlarge the subscription of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I believe the whole list was eighteen. Two, and only two, are Democrats; all the rest are Republicans. Besides this, I know a goodly number that for one reason or other did not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, yet every one of them are Republicans. Nor do I know a single Democrat, save the two referred to, and one of them is a strong Spiritualist, that are Liberals.

Now, in the face of all this, why is the mountain to go to the mouse? No, gentlemen, that won't do, and you hav already damaged the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER by such propositions, published, at least, without protest. Now I say this, name the Liberal for President as such, and I am ready and willing to vote for him. I will go as far as the next man for the new party. What principles shall be clearly set forth? Taxation of all church property, no exemption of so-called ministers from any duty that others are required to perform, repeal of the Sunday laws, and many other important things. I say, giv us a candidate standing squarely on these principles, and I am ready to abandon all old party ties and go with them, but don't, for heaven's sake, ask me to join a party whose very cornerstone a few years ago was that of slavery. Is there any Liberalism in the strong enslaving the weak? No, friend Wakeman, neither you nor our good friend Leland can carry the sixteen subscribers here to the two on the other side. There is neither sense nor logic in it, and we will not go, believing as we do, that notwithstanding Comstock, Benedict & Co., there are more liberty-loving men in the Republican ranks than than there are in the Democratic, therefore it would be foolish to jump out of the frying-pan into the fire. What would be gained? No, let us advocate a new party or let party alone. Yours truly,

D. R. SPARKS.

ALTONA, ILL., July 12, 1880.

BRO. BENNETT: "Let no man call God his father and not every man his brother." Could I freely communicate my thoughts to paper, I would express my thanks to Bro. Judas Comstock for the great good he has been the means of doing to the cause of Freethought and the liberty of speech and press.

But for the persecution of Heywood I should never hav cared to hav ordered the visionary "Cupid," which I received by due course of mail. It has had a very wide circulation and been read by hundreds of my friends, both Christians as well as truth-seekers.

What better course could Comstock hav taken to advertise Infidel publications than in your imprisonment? Surely none, for by it thousands hav had their minds called or turned to investigate the case, and must perforce decide upon the justice or great injustice in the premises, and will render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to the devil the things that are the devil's. L. K. MOORE.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MICH., July 9, 1880.

MY DEAR BENNETT, My Much Esteemed Friend: Allow an aged man to intrude on your valuable time in reading a few lines of unimportant matter. I will introduce myself as an aged man of 82 years. I was a Methodist in my unsophisticated days, next a Freethinker, and, since the advent of modern Spiritualism, hav been a candid, honest investigator of its phenomena, its facts. and its lessons to humanity. I was always tolerant and Liberal in sentiment, so that when heroes like Paine, Bennett, and a host of other illustrious braves stepped boldly to the front and proclaimed the gospel of liberty to every man, woman, and child, I felt like buckling on my armor and battling for the right.

Since the nominations, I am asked, Which candidate will you vote for? I answer, Neither of them, unless he will guarantee to his constituents before election that he will carry out a part at least of the demands laid down in the Liberal League platform. I will vote for the candidate that the Liberals as a body vote for.

I am, fraternally, your true friend,

GEORGE STEWART.

OSCEOLA, IOWA, July 15, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find $1 toward defraying expenses of a delegate to the Congress to be held in Europe. I am glad you hav decided to attend, and hope it may become an annual meeting. It would hav been a great mistake to hav refused the invitation there. Such names as Wright, Rawson, Wakeman, Leland, Bennett, Frothingham, etc., and I had almost said Walker, of Iowa, to make up the number, would well represent our cause. You may think Iowa is too obscure to be represented in Europe, but wait a bit, and we shall some day not be so obscure as might now be imagined.

There are occasional meetings in Europe that are emblematical of advancing civilization and giv hope for the future. That at Geneva to arbitrate on the Alabama question. At the same place, and later at Brussels, a Peace Congress met to try and adjust national differences by arbitration instead of war. And now soon an International Liberal Congress will be held. Such moves are cheering, and giv hope for the future.

Permit me, Mr. Bennett, to congratulate you on your proposed philanthropic mission, for which you are in many respects qualified. Whilst many may talk of liberty, you are one that has felt the loss of it. F. J. EMARY.

OAK GROVE, WIS., July 8, 1880

D. M BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find three dollars. I hav been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER for over one year, and like it very well. I don't see how I can do without it. I like the brave and fearless course you are taking in defense of right, truth, and justice.

Hoping that you will prosper in spite of opposition, as you hav in the past, I remain, as ever, Yours truly,

D. T. WOODWORTH.

OGDEN, UTAH, July 3, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find P. O. order for three dollars from the Ogden Liberal League, No. 95. We want you to go to Brussels. I hope it is not too late. Yours truly, JOHN A. JOST, Sec.

BELVIDERE, ILL., June 27, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: In looking over your paper this morning my eye fell on the article about the Brussels Congress. I hav been thinking every day of sending along a little aid, and now I see it is time to make the effort. Inclosed please find one dollar.

My wife and four children all wish to be remembered to yourself and estimable lady, and should you ever visit this section of country our house will be open to welcome you.

We all feel a great interest in your welfare. We are looking forward to the convention which is to be held at Hornellsville with great interest, it being only twenty miles east of us. Hope to meet you there. Hoping that you will obtain funds necessary to take you over the water, I remain,

Your friend and well-wisher, J. Y. CROSBY.

---

FREDERICA, IOWA, July 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I take this method to acknowledge the receipt of the first volume of the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." I am well pleased with it, and think it a book of great worth. I shall want the second volume soon.

Yours respectfully, N. J. MOORE.

---

KEY WEST, FLA., June 28, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Your friends here are very glad to know that you are in your sanctum again. Peterson, Payne, and Abbot took the part of Comstock against the rights of the people, but the people soon got sick of them and their papers. I feel glad that you were not pardoned out of the Christian bastile by the President, for it goes to show him up in a Christian spirit. I wonder how much Howard Crosby gave Mrs. Hayes for keeping you in prison until the end of your term Yours, JAMES PRISE.

---

BROOKLYN, N., Y., July 10, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: The Merrick (L. I) Liberal grove meetings are discontinued this summer in consequence of Mr. Hyatt's absence from his farm and residence in Brooklyn; but at Belmore, the first station beyond Merrick, on the Southside railroad, a series of fortnightly Liberal meetings hav been inaugurated by a few staunch Liberals and Spiritualists, to be continued probably through July and August, at Liberal Hall. Captain Smith and the Messrs. Jackson and Lee are the main movers in the matter. The Liberals hav a small but comfortable hall of their own, and notwithstanding a very powerful church influence—of course very adverse to the meetings—are determined, if possible, to carry them through successfully. The next meeting will be held next Sunday, July 18 h, at 2.30 P. M., when the writer will speak on the topic, "From Rome to Reason," after which free discussion by the audience. The Liberals in that section, I believe, nearly all take your paper, and if you will kindly publish this notice, which I send at the suggestion of one of its patrons, the friends throughout that vicinity will be made more generally aware of the meetings. Yours very respectfully,

W. C. BOWEN.

---

KEENE, MICH., July 10, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I like your paper very much. I am a Liberal in every sense of the word. I believe in free speech, free press, free mails, free trade, and free religion. I detest the "believe or be damned" doctrine as I do the hypocritical, ranting blatherskites that proclaim it from pulpits bought and paid for with the hard-earned money of the honest poor. I consider the clergy of to-day as public vampires and leeches, who are sucking the best blood of the world. I am called an Infidel. Now, I think that he is the Infidel who goes about traducing God and preaching lies for hire. I hav been watching Abbot, Bundy & Co., including Comstock, and I fail to see any difference in them. I think just as much of one as of the other. In my estimation they are a mean, contemptible pack.

Inclosed please find postal order for three dollars.

Yours fraternally, C. L. FROST.

---

ALEXANDER, ILL.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: My subscription to your paper will soon be out; but I can't do without the paper. Keep right on, without fear of Bundy, Abbot, Comstock, Benedict, and the orthodox hell, for "truth crushed to earth will rise again." I glory in your moral courage, and hope that after you hav represented us well at Brussels you will return to the helm and steer the ship of truth as before. I will soon send you an order for renewal.

Yours truly, DAN ILGENFRITZ.

---

THE DALLES, OR., July 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: On account of the detention of my papers in the post-office I only now read of the proposed convention of Liberals in Europe. Mr. Bennett, the noble martyr for the past year in the sacred cause of Freethought, must be one to represent us there. I send my mite, 75 cents, toward Mr. and Mrs. Bennett (who hav suffered almost a martyrdom) going to Europe. Also please find inclosed $1 from Mr. George Plumb, and 25 cents from Mr. J. Weeks for the same object. Fraternally.

ANNIE EVEREST.

---

LONDON, MO., June 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find $3 00 for which send me THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav been borrowing, but as this is cheating the printer and adding nothing to the cause, I must fall in line with that great army whose tread is shaking the life out of superstition. Remember the fable of the lion and the skunk and as you are undoubtedly the lion you can well afford to let your traducers enjoy alone the perfumes they hav raised.

Please address in full as above, GEO. W. MAY, M.D.

---

VINELAND, N. J., July 2, 1880.

D.M. BENNETT, Sir: Inclosed please find post-office order for $10.00; three for renewal of subscription to TRUTH SEEKER to John Gage, Vineland, N. J.; five for "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," and two to help you on your journey to Brussels. I am glad you are going; think it will do you good; hope when you return you will be so thoroughly well of dyspepsia that you will not want to quarrel with anyone and will not allow yourself to do so, no matter what may be said or written concerning you. It seems to me you could afford to rest your whole case with the people now. I know you hav thoughts to giv us that are worth a thousandfold more than anything you can say in regard to A. B. C. & Co.

"Let us hav peace," let others malign, you keep to your work, not be turned aside for anything.

Yours in the truth, CORTIA GAGE.

[Many thanks to our good and fair friend, for her patronage, her generosity, and also her friendly suggestions and hints. We are not specially fond of quarreling but do consider it our right and duty to expose villainy and falsehood wherever found. We are willing to leave everything to our generous intelligent readers.—ED. T. S.]

---

LOUDONVILLE, N. Y., July 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find $2.50, balance due for the two volumes of the "Gods and Religions" I am well pleased with the first volume, and doubt not I shall like the second also, and I think the work is calculated to do great good. You should be congratulated upon the result of your work while in prison. The work will certainly prove itself a shell of wonderfully destructiv power in the orthodox fort.

I am in favor of your going to Brussels. You deserve that trip and the recreation. Besides, I for one consider you a very fit person to represent the true Freethinkers and Rationalists of this country—Abbot, Bundy & Co. to the contrary notwithstanding.

I was well acquainted with the father of Arthur, the Republican nominee for vice-president. He was a Baptist of the hard-shell type, and preached that only through faith in Jesus and baptism by immersion could any one be saved from eternal damnation, and that he that was not quite saved, no matter how good, was completely damned. I know nothing about the son personally, but if President Hayes was justifiable in causing his expulsion from the New York Custom House I cannot see how he can be considered a suitable candidate for the vice-presidency of this nation.

May you hav a pleasant trip, and arrive home safe in due time. Yours truly, F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.

---

SALEM, NEB, July 8, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT: I see by the tag on my paper that my time paid for is up on the first of July. Inclosed please find postal order for $1 50 to go on my subscription. Bro. Bennett, were I a good speller I would write a few lines for the Liberal public, but I will only drop you a few lines of a private nature, with the hope that you will do my writing in your paper. However, I could not object to Wakeman and Leland doing part of it, for I think T. B. Wakeman one of the most calm and profound thinkers in this nation, especially in law and politics. I would rather vote for him for president than for any man in the nation. It is probable I may hav the chance some time in the future. I think you and he take the right course in recommending the Liberals to vote for Hancock. Liberals need not look longer to the Republicans for justice or mercy. But the Liberals can make their power felt, and obtain what the Republicans are not willing to grant us. After that, all parties would be ready to listen to our reasonable demands. If the Liberals will stick together they can change the administration whenever they want to. I think if you and old father Wright, Wakeman, Leland, Green, and a few others, could agree in this matter and bring it before the Liberals in its proper light it would be a grand success. If we could make the Republicans see that we helped to defeat them it would bring them back to first principles.

Giv my respects to Macdonald. Hoping you will consider this matter calmly, I remain, as ever, your friend and brother, H. B. GIST.

---

WHAT SHALL WE DO TO BE SAVED?

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I will take the above words for my text, and endeavor to make a few remarks concerning the general welfare of the human family. One hundred and four years ago our nation declared her independence of the British government and founded this government upon the principles of liberty. Since then times hav changed. Men hav forgotten the price liberty cost; they hav united and formed political rings, and hav hoodwinked the common people to gain their votes; and public officers, instead of becoming servants of the people, and working for the general welfare of all, hav combined and declared themselvs rulers, and by so doing hav trampled beneath their feet every principle of a republican form of government. They hav joined hands with the clergymen, who hav no right to meddle with secular affairs, and are trying to force religion upon the nation, when all past history goes to prove that every such attempt has brought most serious disaster to the people.

This being our condition as a nation, the question naturally arises, What shall we do to be saved?

Will quarreling with one another through the Liberal papers about our different views of a hereafter save us? No. We hav Ingersoll playing the part of John the Baptist, preaching liberty. We also hav D. M. Bennett, with his powerful pen, striving to liberate us from bondage. As a publisher the world cannot show his equal. Liberal friends, may I point you to him as the savior in the present crisis? Do you doubt his sincerity? I point you to his martyrdom in Albany. Do you doubt his ability? I point you to his numerous publications. Do you doubt his willingness? I point you to his public career for the past few years. Now, with all these assurances before you, why not come to the rescue? I move that we do a little more laying and not so much cackling. Mr. Bennett has said he could borrow the means to attend the Brussels Congress. Let every Liberal that can raise something, if it is but twenty-five cents. If you hav not the means at hand, pledge it within the year 1880 I will giv half a dollar; who will do likewise? Here is a good chance for the Young Men's Christian Association to get rid of their foe. Let them contribute a few hundred dollars to defray his expenses, and then ask their God to sink the ship and drown him on his way. Ring in, boys! I'll bet he'll do it for you.

Now, friends of liberty, if you wish to be saved from the hand of the religious tyrant, don't be afraid to put your trust in Bennett. Help him off to Brussels, and it may do much good to Liberalism in America. I think he should take his wife with him too. What do you think about it, brother Liberals? Yours fraternally.

WM. N. RIDINGER.

---

A LITTLE THOUGHT ON HELL.

NEW YORK, July 7, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: It is not often we think of such a place, but the Bible says there is a hell-fire full of burning sulphur or brimstone, and if we doubt it we will surely find out the truth in the case by being forced into it against our will.

Let us see if there is a hell. It seems to me that there are a few people whom I hav heard of who would like to be general-in-chief of a hell long enough to hav D. M. Bennett, B. F. Underwood, and R. G. Ingersoll stretched on a rack or burnt to ashes. We know John Calvin will liv always, for he was appointed to burn an Infidel by a mob of devils, and for that he will always be remembered in the minds of progressiv people as a villain. You, Satan, where art thou? You, hell, show your spark. We defy any hell except the one made by the hands of Christians, who are always ready to make a hell for Infidels because their forefathers did. The burning of Servetus is the best proof of no hell outside of Christianity. If it were possible that a man could liv in fire always, and not burn up the natural conditions of his present existence would become so changed after death that in time hell would become one of the most delightful climates imaginable. It is illogical to say a man could burn eternally without getting used to it. Life is organization of matter, and hence fire destroys it.

I don't care about dying to get to other worlds. This is the only one that really interests me. I may go to the Christian planet hell after death, but I hav not made up my mind yet. I hav nothing to say about heaven except that if I go there I will go prospecting for gold under the plank walk of the great city. They say there are lots of gold in that city, even the walks are gold, and if that is so they are in pretty good financial circumstances. One world at a time if you please. J. H. CORYELL.

---

YANKTON, DA., July 11, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Although you are a stranger to me, THE TRUTH SEEKER comes to my house every week, and has for the past three years, and I must say it has become indispensable to me. It first began to break the bread of life to me in Connecticut, my native state, and since I migrated to Virginia and settled in the mountains of the Shenandoah, I could not liv without it. I want some of your books very badly, and if I liv the year out shall hav some of them. I must say that we here, in this enterprising colony from Connecticut, hav been struggling hard for the past eighteen months; but we begin to see light, and I do assure you as soon as a dollar can be spared you shall hav it. Before I left Connecticut I had given for the church, in the nine years before, over one hundred dollars a year for the support of the Christian people; but I say plainly that if I liv nine years more I shall try to make amends for the folly of the past. While the doors of the penitentiary were closed upon you, how I longed to send you aid in the shape of funds, and how I hav longed to do for the cause you espouse, and which has become my own! It makes me feel that all Liberals are brothers. Although the crash of 1873 and the bankrupt law were taken advantage of by the church, and Christians led me to this enterprise, it all may be for the best, for now the prospect looks brighter. Although we are in the woods, ten miles from any railroad, I am surrounded by friends. We now hav a post-office, and climate and water being the best, why should we not be happy? Yours respectfully, E. D. ROOT.

---

JASPER, FLA., June 14, 1880.

BRO. BENNETT: Allow me, through your columns, to call the attention of the Liberals of Florida to the following quotation from Bro. Green's Liberal League items:

"Let every Liberal friend everywhere understand that the committeeman who represents their state is the head-center of the movement in the state or territory—the one to hav the general supervision of the work; that he should, in fact, not only be that, and do that, but should be a Liberal lecture bureau in himself for his state: and our Liberal friends should not ask him to do all this work for nothing and pay his own expenses, but each Liberal of the state should contribute something for his support."

I fully indorse the position of E. Campfield, committeeman of Kansas, who says:

"Hereafter I shall reply to no letters relating to the work in this state, unless the writers inclose return postage, officers and members of the committees alone eccepted. It is not right or just that those who do the work should be compelled to bear all expenses attendant upon this work, and I trust that each committeeman will establish such a rule as I hav laid down. The sooner it is done the more progress we will make in the work." A. J. OLIVER,

Mem. Ex. Com. N. L. L. for Florida.

P. S.—Since writing the accompanying letter I hav sent to the post-office at Jasper, ten miles distant, for my mail, and received one lone newspaper, the Boston Investigator, whereas I should hav received THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 12th instant, besides many other documents and letters which I hav been expecting for weeks past. I know that the postmaster has refused to deliver my TRUTH SEEKER, and the inference is irresistible that he has suppressed or sent off all my other mail. I hav reason to believe that he destroys the letters which I send weekly to his office to be mailed, as I never receive any replies thereto. A. L. Rawson and H. L. Green generally respond regularly to my missives, and other correspondents to whom I hav recently written in different parts of the country hav always replied punctually. I hav no idea that this letter will reach you; if it does I shall be agreeably surprised. I wrote two weeks ago to T. B. Wakeman, New York, to know what course I ought to pursue, but the probability is that the post-master at Jasper destroyed the letter. A. J. O.

---

N. Y. CITY, July 2, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: Although I hav read several papers, I find that there is none that givs as much satisfaction as THE TRUTH SEEKER. I would do anything for this estimable paper. Since my acquaintance with it I hav read some articles to divers people. It is remarkable that there are men who hesitate to call themselvs Freethinkers, while they are allured by the expression of truth seeker, although the terms are synonyms, and, I judge, it is impossible to be a truth seeker without being a Freethinker. How reasonable is the name of this paper. Inclosed find one dollar for a new reader. Yours for truth, JACOB SOBLE.

---

GARDEN GROVE, IOWA., July 15, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: There are many of my neighbors, as I believe, who should enjoy the reading of the best paper ever published, and I know of no other way of giving them a taste of it, with so little trouble to me, as to order, at least, to commence with, ten copies sent direct from your office to the ten individuals herein named. Please accept this P. O. order for $5 for ten trial subscribers, and oblige,

YOUR FRIEND.

The Spiritualists of Massachusetts

Will hold a camp-meeting from July 18 h to August 25 h at Onset Bay Grove. Among the speakers are Dr. I. P. Greenleaf, Miss Jennie B. Hagan, Mrs. S. A. Byrnes, Miss Emma Weston, Cephas B. Lynn, J. F. Baxter, Lizzie Doten, W. J. Colville, Dr. H. B. Storer, Mrs. M. S. T. Wood, J. M. Peebles, Mrs. R. Shepherd. Board and accommodations for everybody are advertised for either one day or the whole time. Tents can be hired. Among the many natural attractions are bathing, fishing, and boating.

Personal.

W. F. Jamieson is creating a great interest in Freethought in Hastings, Mich. Audiences increased to one thousand. He spoke there July 11th, 14th, 18th, delivering five lectures. He is engaged by the Liberal League of Monmouth, Ill., for five lectures, July 25th, 28th, and Aug. 1st,

A Walk.

BY CHARLES BRADLEY.

"Eheu quantum minus reliquis versari. quam tui memminesse."

Lost is all other love to me,
And gone in memory of thee,—B.

'Twas in the blooming month of May,
That eve my heart will mind for aye,
When we walked out the seaward way

In the clear vailing of the night,
The white-walled cottage alone in sight—
Bright from it streamed a taper light.

The crescent moon, a silver line,
Shone through a cloud, in heavenly eyne—
Her gentle hand was clasped in mine.

The unseen brook gave rippling sound,
The alder leaves twinkled around—
A whispering silence on the ground.

In haunted grove and scented dale,
Waked by the star, the nightingale
With love's own music sang love's tale.

Boundless the shadowy landscape lay.
Save the dim vastness of the bay,
And voyaging clouds that o'er it stray.

Musing along the murmured beach,
Where the feared wave its sand doth reach,
What had our lips to do with speech!

Yet from her lovely lips the flame
Of love in loveliest accents came
As soft and low she breathed my name.

Dark heaved the swell, yet hushed its roar
To ripples trickling down the shore,
Like tears for those who come no more.

But through the gloom so soft and lone
The 'ternal stepping stars outshone,
Swift messengers from worlds unknown.

We heard from off the pirate's grave
Stern echo in her airy cave
Mock the death-voices of the wave.

And bending o'er the bending verge,
Charmed thought our dreadful peet did urge
In the tremendous maddening surge.

Scarce heard so far the vesper bell,
Of home and lov'd ones seemed to tell,
Our hearts confessed that holy spell.

A star asleep on ocean's breast,
A bird in heaven, guarded nest,
Rest here, my soul, blessing and blest.

What more than love can heart receive?
Who loves hath nothing more to giv?
We loved, and in that love did liv.

Dim thundering sea, star-haunted strand,
Souls slaves of love, one heart, one hand,
Till life's lost ebb shall find no strand.

Oft passing home, our way we took,
Crossing, unheard, the rippling brook,
Good night, good night, in one last look.

. . . . . .

O eye of beauty and of truth,
Star of my lost and hapless youth,
Peruse these lines and melt with ruth!

JUST PUBLISHED!

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

Epicurus: or, a Few Days in Athens.

Being the Translation of a Greek Mss. discovered in Herculaneum.

BY FRANCES WRIGHT.

Containing a copy of the head of Epicurus.

Price 75 cents. For sale by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th street, New York, N.Y.

A BUSINESS MAN'S RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL VIEWS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 296pp. Price $1.

The author's conception of a possible future life on this earth is really eloquent and beautiful, and will enlist attention. A curiosity to see what a philanthropic business man has to say upon the social problem, from a poor man's standpoint, will doubtless alone induce many to buy the book. The bold and trenchant blows which he deals "Society" in all its ramifications of corruption and inhumanity; his earnest and manly plea for the social regeneration of the lower classes—will, unless we are much mistaken, make the book the best-abused and best-liked production of the day by these two classes respectively.—Critical Review.

Revelations of Antichrist

CONCERNING

Christ and Christianity.

"This volume gives us mountains of evidence that the Christ of the Bible was never born, never crucified, never died. . . It contains more deep researches into the far back pages of antiquity than any volume I ever read ANTICHRIST proves from history that James Kepha (Cephas, alias Peter), and Paul, all lived before the Christian era, and so did Jesus Christ—indeed, many Christs and many by the name of Jesus. . . In my precious collection of Liberal works I hav placed this last valuable acquisition first and foremost of all."

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

The book contains 446 pages, with a very full Index and table of contents. Price, $2.00.

IRON-CLAD AND MANNA SERIES.

IRON-CLAD SERIES.

| No. | | Cts. |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 2. | Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake. | 5 |
| 7. | Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Muller | 10 |
| 8. | Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison | 20 |
| 9. | Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall | 15 |
| 13. | Essay on Miracles. David Hume | 10 |
| 14. | Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 15. | Were Adam and Eve our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 16. | Why do Men Starve? Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 17. | Logic of Life, Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. G. J. Holyoake. | 10 |
| 18. | A Plea for Atheism. Charles Bradlaugh. | 10 |
| 19. | Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake. | 5 |
| 20. | Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake | 5 |
| 21. | Defense of Secular Principles. C. Watts. | 5 |
| 22. | Is the Bible Reliable? C. Watts | 5 |
| 23. | The Christian Deity, C. Watts | 5 |
| 24. | Moral Value of the Bible. C. Watts | 5 |
| 25. | Freethought and Modern Progress. C. Watts | 5 |
| 26. | Christianity: Its Nature, and Influence on Civilization. C. Watts | 5 |
| 28. | Thoughts on Atheism. A. Holyoake | 5 |
| 29. | Is there a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake, | 5 |
| 30. | Philosophy of Secularism. C. Watts | 5 |
| 31. | Has Man a Soul? Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 38. | Is there a God? Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 39. | Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 40. | Poverty; Its Cause and Cure, M. G. H. | 10 |
| 42. | Science and Bible Antagonistic. C. Watts. | 5 |
| 43. | Christian Scheme of Redemption. C. Watts | 5 |
| 44. | Logic of Death; or, Why should the Atheist Fear to Die. G. J. Holyoake. | 10 |
| 47. | Poverty: Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Charles Bradlaugh, | 5 |

MANNA SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 3. | New Life of David. Charles Bradlaugh. | 5 |
| 5. | 200 Questions Without Answers | 5 |
| 6. | Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin | 10 |
| 7. | Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian. | 10 |
| 8. | Search After Heaven and Hell: A. Holyoake | 5 |
| 9. | New Life of Jonah. Charles Bradlaugh. | 5 |
| 10. | A Few Words About the Devil. Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 11. | New Life of Jacob. Charles Bradlaugh. | 5 |
| 12. | Daniel the Dreamer. A. Holyoake | 10 |
| 13. | Specimen of the Bible: Esther. A. Holyoake | 10 |
| 14. | Acts of the Apostles: A Farce. A. Holyoake | 10 |
| 15. | Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A Holyoake | 10 |
| 16. | Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 17. | Who was Jesus Christ? Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 18. | What Did Jesus Teach? Charles Bradlaugh, | 5 |
| 19. | New Life of Abraham. Charles Bradlaugh | 5 |
| 20. | New Life of Moses. Charles Bradlaugh. | 5 |
| 21. | A Secular Prayer. Holyoake. Per doz. | 10 |

FAMILY CREEDS,

BY

WILLIAM McDONNELL,

Author of "EXETER HALL," "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH," etc.

To any who hav read either of this favorite Liberal writer's other romances, it only need be said that this is not inferior to them. 468 pp.

In cloth, $1.25.

For sale by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th street, N. Y.

FIFTY CENTS

Will pay for

DR. FOOTE'S HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for the AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED PRONOUNCING POCKET DICTIONARY, containing 30,000 words.

ONE DOLLAR will pay for DR. FOOTE'S

HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for a large center-table book containing the Complete Works of Shakespere! Do not forget to send 25 cents to pay postage or 35 cents if you want it registered. Address

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 E. 28th st., New York city.

Wanted.

To sell a patent right. An improvement on Sewing Machines, A Reacting Electric Sandal, A Health and Life-Preserving Invention, which can be applied to all Sewing Machines without any change in the machines. An entire prevention of the suffering and death caused from operating sewing machines.

Apply to the patentee,

DR. C. A. VON CORT,
THERAPEUTIC HEALTH INSTITUTE,
6'25 168th street, near 3d avenue, N. Y. City.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13'27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 35 cents. Send to this office.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1870. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Dizler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrines, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familia tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

The Gods and Religions OF Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructive work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.

tJan81.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington Ave, New York, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK are at liberty to CONSULT ITS AUTHOR in person or by mail FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY,
129 East 28th Street New York.

DR. KINGET'S NEW BOOK.

"MEDICAL GOOD SENSE"

—AND—

PRIVATE READING FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.

—EMBRACING—

SEXUAL PHILOSOPHY AND PHYSIOLOGICAL MARRIAGE.

Containing over 500 illustrated pages, well bound—price $2. It treats of the nature, causes, treatment of, and prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases. It unfolds some of the deepest mysteries of human nature in the generation and development of life, sexual relationship, marriage, parentage, and offspring, all viewed from a secular standpoint. It fully answers numerous questions, the delicate nature of which prevents thousands of women from asking. Any person sending $1.50 before the day of publication, this fall, will receive a copy, well bound, mailed free. Contents table sent free for stamp.

DR. T. R. KINGET ANNOUNCES

to his Liberal friends and patients throughout the United States and Canadas that he is, as usual, treating

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES,

and positively curing ninety per cent of those pronounced incurable. Having had over thirty years' experience, Dr. K. is meeting with remarkable success in curing obstinate cases of Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Nervous Debility, Impotency in both sexes, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Dysentery, Piles, Diseases of the Skin, Kidneys, Bladder, Genital Organs, and all diseases of women Consultation Free. Address

T. R. KINGET, M. D.,
317 East 14th St., New York.
Questions for Invalids free.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall, this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person. Price 20 cents.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds.
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hay met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Thelogy, Etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

LOVE VENTURES.

A rose tinted record of love in the tropics, with strange and startling adventures thereto belonging. Price, 50 cents.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp, $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2 00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo, 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 68 pages; price, 25 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo.. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

HISTORY shows that the human mind, fed by constant accessions of knowledge, periodically grows too large for its theoretical coverings, and bursts them asunder to appear in new habiliments; as the feeding and growing grub at intervals casts its too narrow skin and assumes another, itself but temporary. Truly the image-state of man seems to be terribly distant; but every moult is a step gained, and of such there hav been many.—Huxley.

IT is a waste of words to talk of negating when it is just as common as to affirm. And Christians negate all gods, Christs, bibles, and religions save their own, and ninety-nine one-hundredths of all Christian beliefs save their own special church and faith. As the scientists, most of them, do not care to deny gods, because they think them of as little real import as are the spooks in the garret or black bears in the closet, they content themselvs with seeking out causes and tracing them to effects; they know that experimental knowledge will in time kill all myths, and so decline to waste time in negating them.—Elmina Drake Slenker.

As the scriptures teach us to humble ourselvs in the dust, to clothe ourselvs in sackcloth, and to scatter ashes on our heads, so those whose practice it is to pour forth unpremeditated prayers are ambitious in the employment of images of the like disparaging nature. I hav heard of a divine who, in his public devotion, indulged in the following tirade: "Oh, Lord, do thou bless thy dust," meaning himself, "and thy dust's dust," his wife; "and the dust of thy dust's dust," their children, "and all thy dust now before thee," the whole congregation. I well remember in early life hearing again and again pronounced on the like occasion, "Lord, we put our hands on our mouth and our mouths in the dust and cry out, Guilty, guilty; unclean, unclean!"—Essays.

HE is the most perfect being that can recognize goodness where none else sees it; beauty, where others see only ugliness. There is a lovely legend to this effect: It is told that Jesus and his disciples were entering into a city, a crowd had gathered near the gate about a cur that had been hunted down by some evil-minded boys and left there mangled and torn as a mark of their brutal contempt. The crowd were standing about the poor creature as he lay with the death-foam upon his mouth, his eyes bloodshot, his ears torn, his skin lacerated, and foul with bloody dirt. They were expressing natural disgust in characteristic ways, holding their nostrils, turning away their heads, lifting up their hands, crying, "Ah, the wretched beast." The disciples, many being with the crowd, joined the cry. Jesus looked on a moment and then said, "How white the dog's teeth are!"—O. B. Frothingham.

INDEED it is, on the face of the matter, inexpressibly absurd to suppose either that we can instruct the great mover of the machine, or that by our humiliation or importunities we can induce him to alter his purposes. The conduct of the whole must be governed by momentous considerations; each wheel, as in a vast piece of mechanism, must govern and be governed by its connection with others, and to believe that the wishes and desires of any individual or congregation of individuals should suspend and vary the indication of the universal scheme, or should even for a moment be attended to and not be swallowed up in its insignificance, must display a superlativ incapacity in the person by whom the mistake is made, together with a degree of egotism and narrowness of soul which would be altogether incredible were it not that in so many instances we find it unequivocally realized.—Wm. Godwin's Essays.

THE sort of belief and no belief which is nearly inseparable from the profession of the Christian faith renders every man in some degree a hypocrit. Truth is no longer sacred and inviolable to our thoughts. We juggle with the powers of our understanding, and "palter in a double sense." Each of us becomes in some sort a double man, and is encumbered with limbs and articulations which make no proper part of ourselves. Truth is the proper element of the human soul, and frankness its becoming habit. We can never be what under advantageous circumstances we might be expected to become till our word shall be as sacred as our oath; till ingenuousness is our daily habit; till by self-examination we come to know what we think and what we are, and till we are ready to render every man an undisguised account of the results of our judgment upon every momentous subject and the reasons on which our judgment seeks for its support.—Essays.

THE monotheism of the Old Testament is far from being homogeneous. Sometimes the Lord has the passions and caprices of a gigantic man; he repents having made the other men; he crushes enemies and exacts the pound of flesh; he is jealous; he counts the incense and marks if its perfume be rare; he is open to various inducements to condone offenses. Sometimes the later page soars above this fetichistic smoke of sacrificial fat into the serene space where Cleanthes sang his hymn to the Supreme. But the scriptures never forget to assume that man must be reconciled to God, while God is reconciled to man by some vicarious project that preserves the self-respect of justice.—John Weiss' American Religion.

THE prayer of Cleanthes, referred to by Mr. Weiss, is as follows;

"O God, from whom all blessings descend, whom the storm and the thunders obey, preserve us from error; deign to improve our minds; attach us to that eternal reason by which thou art guided and supported in the government of the world." Cleanthes was a Stoic, but if Christianity has proclaimed any better or more sensible prayer we should like to hav a copy of it.

Odds and Ends.

CHARIVARI tells of a negro named Domingo in one of the French colonies, who, speaking of the advantages of the Christian religion, said, "There was a time when I knew nothing of God or the devil, but now I know and love them both."

LITTLE Freddie was undergoing the disagreeable operation of having his hair combed by his mother, and he grumbled at the maneuver. "Why, Freddie," said mamma, "you ought not to make such a fuss. I don't fuss and cry when my hair is combed." "Yes," replied the youthful party, "but your hair ain't hitched to your head."

A TEACHER, endeavoring to familiarize a little girl with the various countries of the Western Hemisphere, with little evidence of success, finally asked, "If I were to bore a hole through the earth, and you were to go through at this end, where would you come out?" "Come out," replied the child, "why, I'd come out of the hole, Miss."

A GOODLY parson complained to an elderly lady of his congregation that her daughter appeared to be wholly taken up with trifles or worldly finery, instead of fixing her mind on things above. "You are certainly mistaken, sir," said she. "I know that girl appears to an observer to be taken up with worldly things: but you cannot judge correctly of the direction her mind really takes, as she is a little cross-eyed."

LITTLE Franky's mother was very pious, but she was an invalid; and so his auntie, who was also pious, looked after his religious instruction, and let no occasion pass to enforce some precept. One day Franky suddenly said: "Oh dear! I wish I had wings!" This angelic aspiration was regarded with great joy by the two sisters, and they eagerly asked why he wished for wings. "Oh," said Franky, "I'd fly up in the air and take Aunt Susan with me, and when I couldn't go any higher I'd let her drop."

AN Irish gentleman, well known in sporting circles for his wit, was accosted by a friend with, "Upon my word,——, you are riding a good horse." "And why should I not ride a good horse?" "Well," rejoined his friend, "but will he jump timber?" "Timber," replied the other, "faith, he'll just jump over your head, man, in a jiffey!"

HE was a brand-new office-boy, young, pretty-faced, with golden ringlets, and blue eyes. Just such a boy as one would imagin would be taken out of his trundle-bed in the middle of the night and transported beyond the stars. The first day he glanced over the library in the editorial room, became acquainted with everybody, knew all the printers, and went home in the evening as happy and as cheery as a sunbeam. The next day he appeared, leaned out of the back window, tied the cat up by the tail in the hall-way, had four fights with another boy, borrowed $2 from an occupant of the building, saying his mother was dead, collected his two days' pay from the cashier, hit the janitor with a broomstick, pawned a coat belonging to a member of the editorial staff, wrenched the knobs of the doors, upset the ice-cooler, pied three galleys of type, and smashed his finger in the small press. On the third day a note was received, saying: "Mi mother do not want I to work in such a dull place. She says I would make a good preacher, so Do I. my finger is Better; gone fishin'. Yours."

A RUNAWAY HUSBAND.—One day last week a man residing in East Toledo, O., skipped from his family and brought up in Detroit. His wife got a clue to his whereabouts and came on after him, and yesterday she had an interview with him at the Central Station, where he had been run in for the purpose. She had no tears to shed. On the contrary, her hair had a fighting bang, and as soon as she could get her breath she began:

"So, you miserable little apology for a human being, you skipped out, did you?"

No reply.

"After I had washed and sewed for nearly twenty years to support you, you got tired of your family, did you? Our style of living wasn't tony enough to suit you, and you wanted a diamond pin and a cane!"

"Say, Lucy, I'm sorry," he mumbled.

"Well, I ain't!" she snapped. "No, sir! on the contrary I'm glad of it? You've chewed tobacco and drank whisky and whittled shingles and loafed on the corners at my expense just as long as you ever will!"

"What do you want of me, then?"

"Want of you? Why, I want to clear my character! All our neighbors say that you ran away from me, and some pity me and some laugh. You run away from me? Why, you low-born corner loafer, you couldn't run away from anything but a spade or an ax. I followed you to get this matter straight. I've got to liv there and I'm not going to be pitied or laughed at!"

"What do you want!" he asked.

"Here's what I want!" she said as she seized his collar and twisted him around. "Now take that—and—that—and that—and I'll have these officers sign a paper that I found you and kicked you out to take care of yourself! Now you git! Don't ever write me; dare to come back to me! Even if I hear that you ever tell anybody that you were married to me I'll buy a shotgun and hunt for you!"

The husband sneaked out doors and down the street, and the wife, having the "docs" in her pocket, walked the other way, muttering to herself:

"Skipped out! Run away from his family! Well, his old shirts will make a mop worth twice the value of his old body! Now, I want to see some one grin in the face of this testimonial that I raised him right off his heels!"—Detroit Free Press.

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | 2 |
| 32. | The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 0. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 2 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 5 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 1 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 2 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. Hopps, London. | 5 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 2 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 10 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 1 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 3 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 1 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 5 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 1 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 10 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 2 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 101. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 5 |
| 102. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 1 |
| 103. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 2 |
| 104. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 10 |
| 105. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 106. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 107. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 5 |
| 108. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 2 |
| 110. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 111. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 1 |
| 112. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 113. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 2 |
| 114. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 1 |
| 115. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 116. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 2 |
| 117. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 3 |
| 118. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 5 |
| 119. | The New Age. Bell | 3 |
| 120. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 10 |
| 121. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 2 |
| 122. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 123. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 124. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 10 |
| 125. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 2 |
| 126. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 10 |
| 127. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 5 |
| 129. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 2 |
| 130. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 5 |
| 131. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 3 |
| 132. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 1 |
| 133. | Talks with the Evangelists | |
| 134. | Is there a Future Life? | |
| 135. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | |
| 136. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 137. | | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 1 |
| 139 | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Com teck Laws | 10 |
| 14-. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, MD. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D., | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off: on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 60 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO,

The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, 40

Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, 40

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

The Church and Education, 5

On the Religious Education of Children, 5

Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran, 10

Sold at this office.

FOUNDATION STONES.

A Volume of Sermons

BY GEORGE CHAINEY.

Handsomely bound in Cloth. Price, $1.00.

PAMPHLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Heads and Hearts. | 5 cts |
| Iconoclasm. | 5 cts |
| Ecclesiastical Lynch-Law. | 10 cts |
| All four will be sent post-paid for | $1.00 |
| Card Photographs of Mr. Chainey | 20 cts |
| Cabinet " | 40 cts |

Address G. C. SMITH

129 Main St., Evansville, Ind.

Your sermons stir me like trumpets. Iconoclasm is the best sermon ever delivered in an American pulpit.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Freethinkers' Badge Pin.

The cut shows the design and size of the badge, but not its beauty. The whole badge is intended to signify symbolically that the "world moves," and that "universal mental liberty" is being spread over the world by the "leaves of learning." Price of single badge, solid gold, package registered, and postage paid, $1 50. Club one dozen or more to one address, package registered, and postage paid, $1 35 each. One badge free to getter up of a club. Remit by P. O. order or registered letter. Postage stamps taken for fractional parts of a dollar. Orders filled in the order of their application, within three weeks after they are received. Badges to be had only from the patentee. LUCY L. CHURCHILL,

West Richfield, Summit Co., Ohio.

Mention this paper.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., May 19, 1879.

MY DEAR MADAM: Your idea of an external and visible sign for the friends of mental liberty, to exhibit to one another on their persons, seems to me very good. In union there is strength, i. e., courage. A quiet, pretty badge, such as you propose, can certainly do no harm. I should like to wear one. But it must be pleasing; for part of our mission is to promote beauty everywhere and in all things. To make the world beautiful, and the human life in it beautiful, are the vast results of liberty. We must do nothing ugly, think nothing ugly, feel nothing ugly, wear nothing ugly.

Very truly yours. JAMES PARTON.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS, April 29, 1880.

DEAR MADAM: I hav received the beautiful badge. Accept my thanks.

Very truly yours, JAMES PARTON.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Vol. 7. No. 31. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, July 31, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE are now in this city eight-five Protestant Episcopal churches. Their number has doubled in twenty-five years.

THE Polish residents of South Bend, Ind., firmly believe that Mrs. Luchiske is possessed of a devil, and she agrees with them. Ceremonial efforts are being made to expel the fiend.

A NEGRO barber at St. Louis studied law at night for several years, and was finally admitted to the bar. He now works in the shop on Saturdays and Sundays, and practices with considerable success in the courts on other days.

THE Rev. W. E. Walker, a Congregational pastor of Vermilion, Dak., got drunk at a public ball, and his behavior was so bad that his church had to put him on trial. It was then proved that he caroused habitually, and he was deposed.

AN exchange says: "Some one deposited a letter in the Bennington, Vermont, post-office last week bearing the inscription, "Mr. Abraham. Kingdom of Heaven, Heaven." It was forwarded to the dead-letter office with the indorsement, "No line established between Bennington and that place."

A. M. NORCROSS of Norwich, Conn., is in a dilemma. He can hardly accept Garfield, and to vote against his party is repulsiv to him. He finally decides the matter by setting two hens with twelve eggs each. One he has dedicated to Hancock and the other to Garfield, and the one hatching the greatest number of chickens will decide his vote.

THE highest percentage of municipal growth shown by the census is that of Denver, which has increased 650 per cent since the last national census. For the second place Minneapolis shows an increase of 400 per cent, and Oakland, Cal., comes third, with an increase of 233 per cent. St. Paul, and Camden, N. J., share the fourth place, with an increase of 107 per cent.

THE sole hold of the Sultan over his subjects is that he is the head of their religion. The only man who can compare with him for this position is the sherif of Mecca. The last sherif was an ambitious man, and it is believed that he was assassinated in consequence of orders received from Constantinople. The present sherif is a young man, and the assassination of his predecessor has aroused much feeling in his behalf.

CHARLES W. WALLACE, the son of the Rev. Dr A. Wallace of the Ocean Grove Record, who was arrested while boarding the steamer Plymouth Rock on Sunday, July 11th, for stealing the gold watch and chain of the housekeeper, Mrs Lloyd, at the Arcade Hotel (the property being found in his possession), pleaded guilty before Judge Walling on July 24th, who sentenced him to Trenton state prison for one year at hard labor.

THE pastor of the Methodist church at North Adams, Mass., in explaining to his Sunday-school the meaning of "original sin," said that Adam's fall did not morally effect anybody now. The superintendent assured the children that the pastor was mistaken, and endeavored to prove it by argument. The discussion lasted two hours, and finally became heated, the pastor accusing the superintendent of being "neither a gentleman nor a Christian." The children did not get any very clear idea of that day's lesson.

THE Electrician says that the life of a submarine telegraph cable is from ten to twelve years. If a cable breaks in deep water after it is ten years old, it cannot be lifted for repairs, as it will break of its own weight, and cable companies are compelled to put aside a large reserve fund in order to be prepared to renew their cables every ten years. The action of the sea eats the iron away completely, and it crumbles to dust, while the core of the cable may be perfect. The breakages of cables are very costly, and it is a very difficult matter to repair them in comparison with a land line. A ship has to be chartered at $500 a day for two or three weeks in finding the locality and in avoiding rough weather, as cables can only be repaired in calm weather. One break in the direct cable cost $100,000.

THE West Pawlet Baptist church in Vermont now lies a heap of charred ruins, and its people are lamenting the fact that there was no insurance. It is the third uninsured Baptist church which has been burned within a few weeks, the others being at Milton and at Springbow, both in Pennsylvania. If this kind of special providence continues, insurance policies will be in demand among pious people who hav neglected them. It has been proposed to make church trustees individually liable for loss when a church is burned which they hav neglected to insure.

THE Rev. Frank Marshall entered Fairland, Ind., without credentials, but he was so good looking and fluent that he readily gained favor with the Baptist congregation and soon became their pastor. He was equally successful as a beau, and was able to take his pick of the maidens of the place. He chose the daughter of the wealthiest resident, and a wedding day was appointed. Just before the time came, however, while the popular clergyman was at a social gathering, his wife appeared with a child in her arms. He had deserted her in Ohio. A jocose deacon insisted upon his kissing her, and he did so with a bad grace.

MR. BRADLAUGH is certainly a man who is much misunderstood. He is a man of towering intellect, of undaunted courage and perseverance, a ripe scholar and a profound lawyer; an agitator of reforms and an inveterate enemy of violence under any and all circumstances, and of gentlemanly deportment and language. I consider him the most remarkable man in the House of Commons. From a poor boy he has, by his own will and determination, raised himself to the position of a lawmaker of the land. Such cases are frequently met with in this country, but not in England, where the suffrage is limited and where the man has waged a life-long warfare against church and state, the House of Lords, iniquitous English land laws, the restrictions of the suffrage, aristocratic privileges, and even the Throne itself. Rely on it, you hav not heard the last of Charles Bradlaugh.—Philadelphia Times.

THE Rev. Dr. Wentworth writes to the Troy Times, on reading of a recent feet-washing ceremony, as follows: "The wit of the Illinois Conference, the Rev. George J. Barrett, was attending a camp-meeting held by the feet-washing Baptists, and stood in the rustic preaching stand looking down on the scene while the brethren and sisters gathered at the front benches and stripped off shoes and stockings, and the preacher who conducted the services went around the circle with a tin basin and towel and washed the feet presented, till all were served. When the ceremony was over, the preacher looked up to the stand, and, with the peculiar twang and whining upward slide of the voice sometimes called the 'holy tone,' said with solemn distinctness, 'We should be glad to know what our beloved Bro. Barrett thinks of this ancient and honorable custom.' Barrett straightened up, and said he thought well of the custom; feet washing was a good thing—a useful habit; and, as for the cases that had passed in review before their eyes to-day, he judged it would hav been well if it had been attended to a fortnight earlier."

A DIFFERENCE of opinion exists among European engineers in regard to the practicability of establishing a sea, as now proposed, in the great Sahara, the chief problem being, it would seem, how to keep it up. It is argued that supposing the sea to be created by means of a canal, it will lose an enormous quantity of water by evaporation every day, without an introduction of an equal volume of fresh water. The water evaporated being replaced by a supply coming through the canal, the whole body would soon reach the maximum of saturation; and thus, the evaporation still continuing, a deposit of salt will be formed which, in time, must fill up the whole space of the interior sea, the salinity of the water being such that no animal life would be possible in it, and the result being simply the accumulation of an immense deposit of salt. On the other hand, the projectors of the enterprise claim that the presence of this water, and its evaporation, must produce copious rains, which will in large measure return into the sea, and thus not only accomplish the object referred to, but also convert a steril waste into a fertil country.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK, in an interview published in another column, says that when the Sabin case was under discussion in the executiv committee of his society, before the arrest was made, it was suggested that, as Mr. Sabin was a man of respectability and a church-member, he should be first warned to discontinue dealing in the class of books that were afterward seized. But the committee decided that he should be treated precisely as every other person engaged in violating the law. This was very commendably and sternly just. But when Samuel Colgate, the president of Comstock's society, mailed circulars, the mailing of which constitutes a crime similar to that of which Comstock says Sabin is guilty, he was treated with far more tenderness. Indeed, had his treatment been regarded by the society as a precedent for the Sabin case, Mr. Sabin would hav fared very comfortably. This is no defense of Sabin, for if he sold the books Comstock says he did, he ought to be prosecuted all the more severely for his respectability; but we cannot overlook the protection Comstock and his society threw about Colgate, when his offense was as clearly proved as many Comstock had helped to punish.—Truth.

AT the prayer-meeting of a fashionable Brooklyn church on one evening an old gentleman who had just come from New Jersey told the people of the great need of rain felt by the farmers of that state. Then he asked the brethren to pray for immediate showers in order that the grain might not be entirely parched up. He was followed by a brother just arrived from Wisconsin, who announced that in his part of the country there was no need of praying for rain, for they had suffered from such copious rain falls that many of their farms were under water. He told them, however, to be comforted in view of the possible destruction of the hay and grain crop of New Jersey, for the yield of such things in Wisconsin was so great that the New Jersey farmers could buy of their Wisconsin brothers at exceedingly low prices. The old gentleman, as the representativ of his New Jersey friends, could not exactly see the equity of this, not understanding where the Jerseymen should find comfort in having to buy, even at low prices, what they had expected to reap from their own farms. The brother who next led in prayer was somewhat embarrassed, but he made it all right by thanking the Lord for the superabundant harvests of Wisconsin and offering a petition for showers on the parched fields of the New Jersey farmers.

A LONDON correspondent of the New York Sun gives the following reasons "why Charles Bradlaugh is an Atheist": You've all heard of Charles Bradlaugh, the best advertised and best known man in England. Well, long before this letter arrives you will see that he has gained the day and has taken his seat in the House of Commons as member for Northampton. I can imagine how the brilliant Col. Bob Ingersoll will chuckle over this, for they are both on the same platform in religious matters. Perhaps the readers of the Sun would like to know a little about so conspicuous a public man. A friend who knows him well tells me that he was born near London in 1833. His school days were ended before he was twelve years old, and he became an errand boy in a lawyer's office. It is somewhat difficult, with Mr. Bradlaugh's avowal of Atheism, to picture him as a Christian young man and Sunday-school teacher, but so it was—no one excelling him in punctuality and goodness. Then why did he become an Infidel? Well, it seems he was induced to prepare for a confirmation service. His spiritual adviser, the Rev. I. G. Packar, told him to study carefully the Thirty-nine Articles and the four gospels. Bradlaugh possessed then, as now, a mind quick at detecting discrepancies. Fancying that he perceived contradictions between the Thirty-nine Articles and the gospels, and desiring further light, he wrote a courteous letter to Mr. Packar, stating his perplexities, and asking for counsel. Instead of a kind reply, the bigoted minister suspended him as a teacher in the Sunday-school, and this strange and unmanly behavior so upset the young man that he neglected his attendance at church, passing his Sundays at open-air meetings of Infidels and listening to Chartist lectures, his views becoming decidedly heterodox. Mr. Bradlaugh is a powerful orator, and he will make a stir in Parliament.

Events of the Week.

AN eruption of Mount Vesuvius began on the 25th.

FOURTEEN prisoners broke out of an Iowa jail last week.

GEN. GRANT has been elected president of a mining company.

THE Turcomans hav captured and beheaded the Russian General Skobeleff.

A DESPERADO was lynched at Leadville on the 23d for deliberately shooting a policeman.

THE famous sea serpent has been seen again, this time at New Rochelle Bay, on Long Island Sound.

A BOY in England was recently sentenced to three months' imprisonment for stealing a rosebud.

Two disastrous earthquakes recently visited the island of Manila. Every public edifice was destroyed.

THERE has been a fresh outbreak among the natives in South Africa, and a second Zulu war is feared.

AN estimable young lady in Brooklyn has been driven insane by the recent revival at Talmage's Tabernacle.

SIXTEEN lives were lost by the running down and sinking of a steam yacht on the Detroit River, near Detroit, on the 22d.

THE Rev. Mr. Kalloch, Jr., of San Francisco, has been arraigned for the murder of Charles de Young, editor of the Chronicle.

A SHOCK of earthquake was felt at Ottawa, Ontario, on the morning of the 22d. It was accompanied by a loud, rumbling noise.

THE English steamship Hazeldean was sunk in the English Channel by a collision a few days ago. Five persons were drowned.

AN explosion of powder in the artillery works at Koorsk, in the south of Russia, not long since, killed eighteen and wounded twelve persons.

SEVEN hundred Mormon converts arrived at this port on the 21st, on the way to Salt Lake City. They are mostly Danes, Swedes, Norwegians, and English.

EIGHT California sea lions escaped from an aquarium at Coney Island a few days ago, and scattered through the bay. High waves had destroyed their pen.

AT a recent pigeon-flying match a carrier pigeon made the extraordinary flight of 470 miles—from Columbus, Ohio, to Hudson City, N. J.—in 26 3 4 hours.

THE entire force of a circus, some sixty in number, hav been arrested and imprisoned at Leechburg, Pa. Some of the circus men had abducted and outraged the half-witted daughter of a farmer.

THE boat Little Western, the smallest craft that ever attempted to cross the Atlantic, has reached England in safety. She sailed from Gloucester, Mass., on June 12th, carrying a crew of two.

DR. TANNER is now in the fifth week of his long fast, is in good condition, and bids fair to complete the proposed forty days. He has lost a pound a day in weight, and is two inches shorter than when he began his fast.

THE entire force of workmen—over one thousand—engaged in completing a new hotel at Rockaway Beach struck, a few days ago, and took possession of the hotel until paid their wages, which were several weeks in arrears.

TROUBLE is threatened between the whites and Indians in eastern Oregon and Washington territory, owing to the encroachments of the settlers on Camas Valley. The Indians threaten to take forcible possession unless the whites leave.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred, on the 21st, at the tunnel being dug under the Hudson River between Jersey City and New York. The roof of the tunnel, near the entrance, caved in, instantly flooding the tunnel and drowning twenty men. Eight others barely escaped. The bodies of the victims hav not been recovered yet, as a coffer-dam will hav to be built before the tunnel can be cleared.

Selections.

Conclusions Regarding Christianity.

[The following pertinent remarks were written by S. P. Putnam for the new work, "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," and are extracted from that work:]

In loooking over the vast field surveyed in this work, several important inferences are noticeable.

First, we see that the gods are entirely the creation of human imagination. They are woven out of the hopes and fears of men. They are the forces of nature, the various aspects of the universe personified by a lively fancy. Every god of history can be explained in this natural way. There is not the slightest evidence of any "revelation." If the gods hav grown better, it is because humanity has grown better; because that of which they are the changing reflection has advanced in brightness and power. Every attribute of a god can be found in the infinitude of nature. Nature is the mother of all the gods, man has been the father, and superstition the midwife; and between these three a most wonderful brood has been spawned in the oceans of human thought and fancy. Not without benefit do we trace with wise comparison these grotesque productions of the past. They are a part of human history, and landmarks of progress. Though not facts of life, they are indications of growth; they are evolutions of that most superb of all forces, the human imagination. When once we hav found out the secret of the gods—that they are not a divine conclave shaping and ordering the course of the world, but, like mosses on the tree, are merely signs of decaying and transforming life—then they become a brilliant and versatil museum, through which the fearless mind can wander and see that they came not from above, "all bright with burning plumes and splendors of the sky;" but like the worm they sprang and flashed from below, and their decaying images shall be a stratification upon which shall be built the temple of humanity, in which not even the greatest of them shall be a living light.

"Thought makes them and thought breaks them," and thought will use them simply as shining crystals by which to understand the obscurities and struggles of the past.

This natural history of the gods is most plainly evident in the career of Christianity. It has taken the dark and dreadful aspects of nature, enthroned them in the heart of the universe, and made them an avenging deity which has been the terror and despair of the race. The poet sings that "nature is red in tooth and claw." Truly it is. From our standpoint the phenomena of nature present many a bloody and cruel tendency; but Christianity, instead of relieving this tendency and throwing upon it the light of a tender beauty, has only intensified it and made it more horrible and powerful yet. Its so-called "Fatherhood" has been a tremendous monster, requiring the sacrifice of his own son before he could be placated enough to forgiv the sins and mistakes of men. How can Christianity claim to be a revelation of the divine beauty when it has thus deified the blackness of the grave and made it the controling power of the universe; or, as Channing so tersely expresses it, "built a central gallows?" So far as Christianity claims to be a revelation, it is a revelation of cruelty, injustice, and horror. It givs no real hope to the race. It has grown out of the dungeons and caverns of desolate nature. If there is anything kindly and sunny in it, this has come from the inborn sentiments of the human heart, and from the other and beautiful side of nature herself.

Orthodox Christianity is the enthronement of the cruel aspect of things; Liberal Christianity is the endeavor to put into its place the benign aspect of things. So far as the latter makes this a deity, it is a superstition still, though of a nobler sort. Christianity, no matter how cheerful it may be made to appear, must pass entirely away, for any attempt to deify either the bright or dark side of things is futil—it is all the work of the imagination. We must come directly to nature herself and accept her exactly as she is—"now bright, now dark; now lending splendor, now reflecting gloom."

We thus find the seed of every god in the fertil bosom of the earth. Innumerable as the forests themselvs, the gods spring from the same source; they grow, flourish, and decay by the same laws. Some are short-lived, almost, as the flowers; others endure for centuries, like the majesty of the oak; but all are bound finally to sink into the primeval dust, to be preserved only by the memory of man and to be no longer the ministers of his hope and fear.

Again, we find that all the gods are essentially alike. Solomon says that there is "nothing new under the sun;" and certainly this is true of the gods and religions of ancient times. None of them can boast of novelty. They are transformations one of the other. They are "oft-repeated tales." They lack invention. They each tell the same story. The same miracles are performed and the same wonders exhibited. There may be a change of uniform, and new masks may take the place of the old, but the identical drama is performed; there is the like opening and the like finale. All the thousands of gods seem to pull the one string, and the "Punch and Judy" show is an everlasting repetition. The gods seem less capable of growth and expansion than any other product of the human imagination. The Koran is borrowed from the Bible; the New Testament is borrowed from the Old; and the Old Testament is borrowed from the Vedas.

The story of the fall of man is common to many religions, and so is the deluge. There hav been sixteen crucified saviors, all made out of whole cloth. The "miraculous birth" is a frequent occurrence, and the "wise men" hav wandered to many a place besides the stable at Bethlehem. The blind hav received their sight, the lame been made to walk and the dumb to speak, in other countries than Judea. Jove has not been the only thunderer, nor Jesus the only one who has risen from the dead and ascended into heaven, nor the only one who is to return in flames of fire. Brahma was ahead of him by many centuries in this brilliant display of fireworks.

Christianity, in its doctrins, forms, and ceremonies, is made up entirely of what went before. The only really new thing in it is the personality of its reputed founder, and it looks as if even this was the product of an ancient myth. But certainly there is not a single original precept in the New Testament. There may be fresh vigor and hope, a wonderful illumination wrought from new circumstances and opportunity, but the same body of doctrin is there, the same heaven and hell, the same God and the same devil, that hav always blessed and bothered humanity. The rite of baptism was nothing new. The Lord's Supper was a rejuvenated pagan meal. The Sabbath was six thousand years old. Christmas was a heathen festival. The mass was a Roman ceremony. Easter drifted from a remote antiquity. The cross was born in Egypt. The church grew from the old-time sepulcher, and the pulpit sprang from the synagog. The trinity came from Plato. Total depravity came from the Hindoos, and hell from Persia. Christianity in its final outcome was simply a cosmopolitan religion, new only in its combination, a complex arrangement by which India, Greece, and Rome found satisfaction for their ancient philosophies, which needed a new dress in order to retain the affection and reverence of the race. Christianity was the pantheon of all the gods molded into a magnificent trinity and millions of saints, and in this fresh fairy-land of rehabilitated divinities the race once more reveled with childlike credulity until with mature and dauntless mind it entered the portico of the edifice of science.

Again, we find after accurate survey that morality is entirely independent of the gods and religions. It has its own source in nature and the mind of man, and has derived but little good either from the teachings or the example of the gods. They hav been both moral and immoral—the creatures of time and place. In no instance hav they ever emphasized the absolute right. Their goodness has been national and provincial. They hav reflected the vices of the age in which they ruled. They hav been floating clouds of human prejudice, very like a whale or very like a weasel, as the changeable minds of their votaries determined. Matthew Arnold says that "religion is morality hightened by emotion." We might also say that as frequently it is immorality hightened by emotion. Religion is simply emotion, and in its blind sweep curses as well as blesses. Where can we find greater exhibitions of cruelty, injustice, and sensuality than in the gods? To a certain extent religion depends on morality, but morality depends on religion never. Religion must hav some morality, or the world would send it at once to the dogs. But morality has no need of religion. It grows of its own power. Humanity and nature are its eternal coadjutors. It passes the gods disdainfully by, for they hav never yet added a single item to the moral acquisitions of man. Their commandments hav been simply repetitions of human experience and reason. All that the gods hav furnished is the thunder and the lightning.

Christianity may be a moral power in and through the human element that pervades it, but not through its God. He has become at last a decent fellow, simply because the world has insisted upon it. At first the Christian's God was exceedingly immoral. He thought nothing of raping a few thousand virgins; a murder seemed to please him very well. He could get along quite comfortably with adultery. He winked at a little thieving on his own account. He has grown better since, not by any innate tendency, but because the outside, common sense morality of the world insisted that unless he did change, he would be thrown entirely overboard. So the Christian's God has slowly conformed to the increasing morality of man. It has always, however, been behind the times, and not ahead. It has never initiated a single reform. It has never given a new commandment; that has always come from the heart of man; and God has opposed it until it became popular, and then he has thundered in its praise. God, instead of being in any sense the creator of morality, has simply been its courtier, its flatterer, its supple slave; and so the gods hav always the vices of a slave. They always curse the "new morality," and hav no more sympathy with virile ethics than a doll has with a growing child; and one might just as well say that a doll is necessary to the growth and beauty of the child that holds it as to say that a god is necessary to the moral progress of the race. The progress goes on, whether the gods will or no; and the gods are just as often found upon the wrong side as upon the right side, and, like us poor mortals, their hindsight is vastly better than their foresight. The gods, like the priests, only furnish the millinery of ethics. The growing body itself springs from the pulse of universal humanity, and its naked grandeur far surpasses the embroideries of heaven.

Again, while we find that the gods and religions hav been off and on with a genuine morality, now for it, and now against it, they hav ever been the foe of science. True knowledge has always had to battle them. They hav ever been the fast friends of ignorance. In itself, simply as feeling, religion may not be opposed to science, but as a matter of fact, in its historic expression, it has always been opposed to science. There has been from time immemorial a bitter antagonism. This has been most conclusivly shown in Draper's "Conflict of Science and Religion." We may so define religion that it may harmonize with knowledge, but the gods which hav actually swayed the minds of men have fought against every inch of advancement. Science has never found a single helper in any of those dark deities. Astronomy, geology, chemistry, the railroad, the electric telegraph, hav come by human grit, and never by celestial assistance. No god has ever led the way. Whenever a god undertakes to lead, there is a forty-years' wandering in the wilderness; it is science that cuts its way into the promised land. There is no reason why we should be grateful to the gods; rather should the gods be thankful that humanity has allowed them to exist so long as it has in their lazy dignity. Such leniency is entirely misplaced, for the "aristocracy of the skies" hav ever been a bar to discovery. They hav dreaded the light; they hav opposed investigation; they hav wanted the human race "tied up," for they hav ever felt that more truth was fatal to their supremacy. It is possible that by a plentiful use of the dictionary, religion may be transformed into an angel of light, but in the past it has been an angel of darkness, and has loved to hover in the midnight of ignorance, thinking that there only it could wing its happy flight; and so on every occasion it has summoned its innumerable divinities to push back the rushing dawn, but, like Dame Partington, they hav always had to giv up and let the mighty ocean of human progress hav its own sweet way.

Finally, we find that of whatever apparent use the gods and religions might hav been in the olden time, they are now eternally to be put aside. They can no longer minister even to the fancy of men. Even as dolls they are "played out." Mankind has now advanced to pure science. The heavens are now cleared of deities, and the sun and stars alone pursue their majestic way. Man is the highest conscious intelligence which we know anything about. There is neither one god nor many gods. There is simply the universe with its manifold capacities and amazing infinitude. There is endless force and the magnificent transformations of matter. There is the potency of man impinging upon crude material with creativ energy and new and beautiful order. This is all we hav. It is enough for immortal progress. Instead of a thousand changing gods we hav vast imperial nature sweeping on in unutterable music and light; we hav the sturdy hand of science unlocking a million secrets; we hav the brow of man wearing fresh laurels from day to day. We bid farewell to the pantheon and take up our abode in the temple of humanity, where we no longer worship, but work; where we dwell in the light of reason, of simple human friendship, rejoicing in the beauty of earth and disdaining the imaginary splendors of heaven almost forgotten in the magnificence of nature's advancement and improvement.

Such are some of the rich and valuable lessons derived from a survey of this work. After this look into "the backward and abysm of time," our forward look is more splendid and inspiring. We traverse the dim fields of the past, trace the wreck of many a colossal god, see the gold mingled with the dust, and from the weird, fantastic scene take the hand of science with more noble confidence, and contemplate her starry brow with more elated mind. This admirable study of the past givs fresh impetus to our progress. What the gods hav vainly tried to do we will accomplish. Whatever gleams of promis and delight they hav flashed forth from the infinit bosom of nature we will make more illustrious and more fruitful still. Laying aside the errors and superstitions of the childhood of the race, we will still preserve its fresh vitality. The poetry, the beauty, the romance, the glory, of the gods hav not passed away; they shine in more sublime and beneficent achievments, for the only god we now hav is the endless universe itself, and the only creator that shapes, combines, modifies, and makes more entrancing and useful the myriad forces about us, is that supreme intelligence that finds its throne in the brain of man and its angels in his skilful fingers.

Communications.

A Pile of Idea.

Two heads are better than one. The thought in two heads is more powerful than the thought in one. Four heads are stronger than two, and so is the thought in them. Thought is quantitativ as well as qualitativ. Thought can be massed and stored and measured as well as corn or coal or cotton, and they are equally combustible and incendiary, under requisit conditions, and equally expansiv and steam-productiv under high pressure. They need to be carefully and judiciously handled. The thoughts in two or four human heads can be organized; so they can in four thousand or four million. In intellectual warfare it is just as important to platoon, regiment, and brigade ideas, and parade, maneuver, and drill them for attack, as it is the material bodies of soldiers engaged in material warfare. Let one man without adherents, without any following, fire off an idea, and not so far as a little candle throws its rays will his loudest word be heard in a naughty world. But let him organize a sect, a party, a following, and establish or charter newspapers to take up and reverberate his earthly thunder, and he becomes a leader and a hero at once.

Every man, as soon as he gets a clear idea, especially a brand new idea, is seized at once with an ambition to toot his horn and trumpet his thought into the ear of every other man. If he knows no better way than to go personally to one other man, and then to one other man, and so on till he has reached every other man, it is slow and tedious work, and in practice he never makes much impression beyond a few personal friends. Even if he pipes his bugle before an audience of hundreds of thousands, and then and there takes no scalps, counts no noses, he builds his idea on the sand, and it evaporates out into space. But let him go to one other man and enlist him, that is, make a list of him, and then they two go to two other men and enlist them, that is, make a list of them, and then they four go to four more, and so on, every time doubling and every time enlisting, putting on record, forming into groups, squads, and platoons, and informing them with the idea, infusing them, that is, fusing, melting them in and together, with a thought, and attaching them at their own hearty free will by an esprit du corps—in that way some psychical work may be done, some encouraging and permanent mental progress made.

Every man likes to conspire with his neighbor, that is, breathe together, over an idea about which they approximately agree. Every man likes to get the adherence of others to his idea, and likes to add himself to others to reinforce and strengthen a good idea. He has an instinct that something is piled up, enmassed, fortified, by adding mind to mind. But there comes a time when his instinct ought to be enlightened by science, and he ought to be informed that there is a science of organization. That science shows that every individual ought to volunteer or enlist in a movement for the best good of the human race—shows that every individual can so enlist without abridging his own liberty; indeed, by so enlisting will enlarge his own liberty, because he adds other shoulders to his to easily, noiselessly, turn the social wheel in order to secure his own best good, and shows that every enlisted head accepting the idea, and every recorded heart devoted to the idea, is as appreciable, as measurable, and as important as every able-bodied soldier enlisted in a material regiment. His ideal regiment is strong just according to the numbers enlisted in it, and again strong just according to the strength of the individual minds enlisted, just as a material regiment is strong according to the numbers, and again strong according to the bodily strength of the individuals. The regiment may be strong in numbers, but weak in mind or body. Mere numbers do not always carry the day. It is courage, celerity, alertness, inventiv resource, cunning, that win in the long run. These are brain qualities, all of them, power that you cannot see nor handle as you can a human arm or a sword which that arm wields. You see the result, but not the force that produces it. It is brain that tells. It is mind that conquers the sword. Heads and hands run in parallel lines and are balanced, mental with material strength, the one equaling the other, the one backing up, reinforcing, and supporting the other; so that that same organizing, regimenting, drilling, and even ambulancing, that is carried to such perfection in the destructiv military world can be carried out to complete and perfect details in the ideal, planning, thought-constructiv world. Financiers know this, or rather they hav an instinct of it, a sense of it, although they do not as yet know the science of it; and they add pocket to pocket to make a formidable, remorseless, and unbreakable treasury. Speculators and gamblers know it, and they organize "corners," pools, and syndicates, which bulls and bears may play at. The captains of industry and transportation know it, and they organize through-lines, branches, and combinations, tempered by the lobby. The politicians know it, and they organize into machines and rings. The priesthood know it, and they squat on every variation of religious belief or unpre-empted or unpatented line of theologic idea, and organize sects, sees, dioceses, and popedoms around it, and each believes his gospel is to be preached to every creature and is finally to rule the world.

Everything in this world is organized—except truth. She, poor thing, is left to shift for herself. Lies, fallacies, injustices, tyrannies, are organized, and hav to be, in order to sustain themselvs. Truth, indeed, without the aid of organization, is enough for all the lies and injustice in the long run; but it is too long a run. It might just as well be made shorter by a hair or two—hair of the same good dog, organization. Truth can be greatly aided by organization, and there is really no law, human or divine, against organization on the side of truth. Just a little organization ought to be allowed to truth—enough to giv her a fair start, a little headway, and some encouragement to catch up with the lies, and fallacies, and tyrannies a little quicker than she has hitherto done, or is now doing.

The National Liberal League is one among the very few organizations on the side of truth. If it has not the honor of being the first among such organizations, it has of being the latest, most urgently needed, and most successful. The League has risen in answer to a demand—to supply an urgent need of the time. Our institutions were founded by the fathers on the principle of total separation of church and state. But the church finds she cannot exist without props—without the power of the state to lean upon. God Almighty, it seems, having founded his church upon a rock, is not almighty enough to keep it there without the aid of the state, as against a minority of unorganized men in the state. So, by stealthy ways and cat-like cunning, the church creeps by night through by forbidden paths into alliance with the state again. Besides, the church never was wholly rooted out from the state. There are some weeds, like the Canada thistle, for instance, that it is almost impossible to dig out of the ground so but that some little ends of roots will remain to sprout and grow to thrifty life-size again. Just so with the church. It had been so long imbedded in the state prior to 1776, that although the fathers did the best they could in laying broad and deep and strong the new foundations of this American state, yet unobserved, or, if observed, believed to be harmless, some little rootlets of the church were left uneradicated from the state. These hav been neglected, unwatched, allowed to sprout into new life and grow, till to-day they hav become strong, threatening, and rampant. The reason of this relapse on the part of the state, and re-grasping of power on the part of the church, is, that the church organizes and casts votes, while Liberals do not organize, and either do not vote, or vote at random—vote as often as any way with the church which tramples upon them. This must be remedied. Liberals must organize, and the Liberal vote must be concentrated and enmassed into an engine of power, as the vote of the church is to-day. Then, when the time comes, let them grapple.

The progress of the League since its foundation has been most encouraging—a firm, healthy, steady growth, just as it ought to be—nothing factious or pretentious or spongy about it. It has neither come up like fungi of a foggy morning, nor gone up like a rocket in the night. It just moved steadily and grandly on. Let us be satisfied with this firm, steady growth, and giv it our confidence, all the more, as an institution of permanence.

Just look at the annual growth of the League ever since its foundation in Philadelphia in 1876.

In its first annual Congress at Rochester in 1877, 18 local auxiliary Leagues were represented, or had the right of representation.

In the second annual Congress, 1878, at Syracuse, 61 local Leagues were represented, an increase of 43, which considerably more than trebled the National League that year.

In the third annual Congress, 1877, at Cincinnati, 121 local Leagues had the right of representation, an increase of sixty, and within one of doubling the number of the previous year. Or dropping as permanently lost three or four Leagues that withdrew at Syracuse, the number that remained was more than doubled.

The Leagues so far this year already number 200, an increase of 79. Much greater than in any one year before.

To double again this year it will hav to gain 42 more local Leagues, making a grand total of 242 Leagues to be represented in the next annual Congress. The agents and workers will hav to be very industrious to organize 42 new Leagues in time for the next annual Congress, which will probably meet in September. Still it can be done. But this is the last year probably that the Leagues can be doubled. Henceforth they must be satisfied with a steady increase of 100 or 200 Leagues per annum.

Let us organize to go slow, organize to abide, and to keep what we get. Things of mushroom growth perish like the toads whose stools they are.

If we go steadily on, setting forth our own demands, loyal to our own idea, courting no other parties, flirting with no other attractions, conferring our voting favors independently and where they will secure results, we will come to be a power and get our power respected. When factions and minor parties find that we are temperate, that we demand and concede just and equal rights to labor, to capital, and to woman; that we accept the laws which science prescribes in trade, in commerce, and in finance, in addition to our own special planks relating to church and state, all other parties, as we grow stronger, will come to us.

Then let us go slow, solid, sure, and bide our time.

THERON C. LELAND.

---

MR. F. F. FOLLET, of Rockford, Ill., is making arrangements for a grand campaign through his state the coming fall and winter. He desires first of all to procure the names of every friend of the Liberal League movement in Illinois. Will every friend send him his name, not forgetting to inclose a few postage stamps. Brother Follet is prepared to furnish blank forms and instructions for forming auxiliary Liberal Leagues. Friends in Illinois, aid brother Follet in his good work.

Liberal News Items.

Mr. Seth N. Allen, secretary of the Society of the Republic, of Miple Rapids, Mich., writes that that old Liberal organization is about to take out a charter as an auxiliary Liberal League. Good!

Parker Pillsbury has promised to attend and address the Hornellsville Convention. This will be interesting news to the thousands who are preparing to attend that great gathering. There is no nobler man or abler speaker in the United States than Parker Pillsbury.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, the popular Liberal orator of Michigan, writes: "I assure you that I shall be more than glad to be present at the Freethinkers' Convention. One of the most valuable meetings I ever attended was the one at Chautauqua. Your prediction as to a larger attendance this year than last will be fulfilled, I am sure, if Freethought has increased in the East as it has in this state during the last year.

Mr. P. L. Coryell writes from Laramie, Wyoming: "After travels of many months in quest of the true geological formation of the mountains and plain lands, and after due inquiry on the subject, I am compelled to say that the inhabitants of Wyoming contain more Freethinkers and enemies of bigotry and religious persecution for opinion's sake than any other community I ever had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with."

There is one thing I desire to impress upon the attention of the Liberals of central and western New York, and that is the importance of making arrangements for meetings in the various towns immediately after the Hornellsville Convention. At the Convention will be Pillsbury, Underwood, Jamieson, Chainey, Mrs. Colby, Burnham, Bell, Putnam, Leland, and a number of other of our ablest speakers who can be obtained for a reasonable compensation. They should all be kept at work in the vicinity of Hornellsville for a month after the Convention closes. H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y.

West Pawlet Notes.

THE Baptists of West Pawlet hav not, of late years, kept a minister much over a year, and many but a month or two. When he goes away the members are always mad at him. They all love him at first, and all kick him at last. When their last minister came about a year ago they all worshiped him. They thought he was God Almighty simplified and condensed. They seemed to think he was Jesus Christ just risen. He knew everything, and could preach, O, such instructing sermons. He was, in fact, God and all with them, and what he didn't know God Almighty didn't. Time swept on, and a mighty and wonderful change came over them. After he had preached his farewell sermon, which was about money and supporting a minister, one of the elect was heard to say, "The damned fool don't know enough to suck eggs," and added, "Somebody ought to hav shot him before he got half done with that sermon." Of such is the kingdom of heaven.

A CHURCH BURNED.

A building situated at West Pawlet, belonging to God Almighty, and known as the Baptist Damnation Factory, was burned a short time ago. Loss, about $2,500, with no insurance, showing that God is not much of a business man. It caught fire from a burning barn situated in the rear. God might hav moved the church a few rods away from the barn. It would hav been a small job compared with the moving of the sun back, as he did once. He might hav stood some water up edgeways between the church and barn, like the barks of water when he divided the Red Sea. He might hav fixed it as he did the children in the fiery furnace, so that it would not burn. He could hav changed it into a pillar of salt, and thus rendered it incombustible. He could hav sent three hundred foxes with as many of Babcock's patent fire extinguishers tied to their tails, and extinguished the fire. He might hav made a small flood and put out the fire. He might hav made the little boy who set the barn on fire die in his infancy, as he does many children because they are going to do bad things when grown up. He might at least hav sent an angel the day before, and told them to get it insured. But the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob didn't propose to fool away any mercy on that old gospel mill, and the elect seeing that such was the case did the next best thing, which was to get water. If there had been a Moses among them it would hav been handy, for he could hav smote a rock, and a couple of dozen cool, refreshing, spouting, gushing springs would hav been very acceptable. It is a fact worthy of notice that they didn't stop to pray. It is strange that people who hav so much faith in prayer never try it at such times. There must hav been some who had faith as large as a grain of mustard, and they could hav moved the church a mile if necessary, as it was much lighter than a mountain. It has been estimated that over five thousand prayers hav been offered up to God in that church, and if they had any saving power it seems as though they might hav saved the church.

The earthly proprietors refused to let it be used for Liberal lectures or Spiritual conventions, and it is very strange why God should thus let it be destroyed. The reason why the hotel was burned a few months ago was because a Spiritual convention was held in the hall. So the elect said at the time. It must be discouraging to people who believe in special providence, and that God has an eye on them and their welfare, to hav their church thus burnt down. The society is rather hard up, and it is not probable that they would hav thought of rebuilding it had it not been for the Infidels bragging that they could not rebuild it. That made a few of the elect mad, and they are going to put it right up, more to spite the Infidels than for the glory of God.

Communications.

Some Politics.

The term "Liberal," and from that "Liberalism," I take it, means, in the United States, general dissent from the Christian religion and opposition to it. Liberalism, I suppose, comprises skeptics, Infidels, Freethinkers, scientists, evolutionists, Socialists, Positivists, Spiritualists, even down to the vanishing-point of Free Religionists. The National Liberal League was founded to organize and put into effectiv shape, for propagativ and especially for voting purposes, all these varying shades of dissent and opposition.

The idea of the membership and make up of the League was and is that it will be composed of those persons whose skepticism, free-thinking, and dissent are activ and predominant—persons who are willing to say and do something, yes, and giv something, for the promotion of Liberal principles as opposed to the priesthood, the church, and their impositions upon the free citizens of this republic. It has been supposed that there are large numbers of Liberal persons—men and women—in the United States who are independent, non-partisan in politics, or slightly attached to sects or parties of any kind—persons who would find it no sacrifice to drop any previous party association and unite with their fellow-Liberals in a great, compactly-organized movement to oppose the aggressions of the ecclesiastic powers—unite with them in any fair and honorable measures to compel churchmen and church property to bear their share of taxation, to repeal Sunday laws, to oust the Bible from public schools; unite with them even to the extent of forming a new political Liberal party or to vote with either or any of the old parties wherever and whenever there is a prospect of promoting the ends, aims, and principles of the League.

The League seeks the patronage and affiliation of all persons who care not a farthing for the Republican party or the Democratic party or the Greenback party as such, but who are willing to vote for any party, or alternately for all parties, just as, at any given election, the situation and the prospect seem best calculated to obtain such new legislation or repeal of old legislation as Liberals demand. The League invites the activ aid, co-operation, and influence of every intelligent person in the United States, but it does not greatly expect the affiliation of persons who are devotedly attached to party, right or wrong, and who would feel distressed to be called upon to vote, as the League might vote, against their party and for the one to which they had always been opposed. Such persons will be a weakness to the League, and not a strength, and will do better to stay out till their Liberalism grows stronger than their party spirit. The League was not made for obstructivs, and such persons will not find themselvs at home in it.

But the great central body of activ Liberals must keep an eye single to the objects of the League, and move steadily on to secure them, regardless of croakers on this flank, critics on that, or cowards in the rear. The League is to be to Liberalism what the Young Men's Christian Association is to the church and the Republican party—the organizing, coordinating, executiv head; to carry out in our case all measures designed to promote free inquiry and Liberal principles, to strike off intellectual shackles, to repeal oppressiv laws, to emancipate the masses of mankind from all the remaining slaveries.

Meantime a new political campaign is upon us. The opportunity is here, which comes so rarely for Liberals to express themselvs, and do it effectivly, on the ecclesiastic legislation which has been imposed upon free citizens of this republic during the last ten years, in clear violation of both the written and unwritten Constitution established by the fathers. This legislation has been enacted by the Republican party. They alone hav done it, for they alone hav been in power; and they are the party to be punished for deeds done in their iniquitous Congresses. Will Liberals continue, term after term and age after age, voting for the same old decaying party because of its once glorious but now tarnished name? voting for it because of its early deeds, though the spirit of liberty has wholly died out of it, and a spirit of despotism worse than the first has been born into it? To the present writer this seems preposterous and illogical to the last degree. What order of mind can that be which actuates any Liberal who sets any value on his principles to submit to repeated ecclesiastic outrages at the hands of the Republican party? Because he may be so fortunately situated that these wrongs do not here and now fall oppressivly upon him, has he no regard for what may come to him in the future? and will he submit to let the children of his brother Liberals be miseducated in the public schools; to let his poorer brethren be taxed to support magnificent churches and relieve them from taxation; to let the whole spirit and free tendency of the republic be reversed by voting God into the Constitution, as a Republican Senate attempted to do; to let the editors of Liberal newspapers be fined and imprisoned for no crime but their free thought? One would suppose that one wide, all-pervasiv shout of protest would go up from every member of the Liberal host—"Not another vote, by the eternal! Never for you, but every time against you, till these crimes are expiated!"

And yet it seems there are even subscribers for The Truth Seeker, whose editor suffered his year in prison for no crime whatever, at the hands of the Republican party—readers of The Truth Seeker who write complaining letters to its editor because he proposes no longer to lick the hand of the tyrant who smites him, and advises the Liberals of this country to vote in the most effectiv way against the Republican party. Such Liberals need a shoemaking term in a Republican prison themselvs to develop into wider proportions such small hearts and brains and sympathies as they now possess. It almost seems that Republicans, and especially Republican Liberals, are degenerate sons of noble sires. Look to England, our old mother country. This crime would not hav been permitted one hour in old England. A quarter of a century ago a postmaster-general of England ventured to detain a private letter directed to the Italian revolutionist Mazzini, and there arose such a storm all over England that the illustrious lord at the head of the Post-Office Department had to resign to appease the general indignation. See, too, how right recently the magnificent Bradlaugh, aided by the press and people and Liberal parties of England, has compelled concession of his rights against an unscrupulous ecclesiastic oligarchy in a country where the church is united to the state. But here, where we boast of "a church without a bishop, and a state without a king," and where the Constitution prohibits the establishment of any religion, editors and authors can be fined and imprisoned at the beck and nod of the priesthood for sending by mail a scientific pamphlet which has happened to incur their censure. And subscribers write to these editors in surprise that they or anybody should hav any complaint against the party that now administers the government. Well, this is a consistent world! If these pusillanimous ideas are going generally to prevail, the League is a very premature organization. Based on so stupendous a misapprehension of the Liberal sentiment of the country, it might as well disband. But it cannot be that this is the general sentiment. It must be that the mass of Liberals remaining behind who hav not yet spoken hav a correct appreciation of the situation. It must be that the great body of the Liberals of this country hav carefully observed the progress of events; and, Republican though many of them are, they hav yet no such veneration for this party that they will continue voting for it in spite of its many crimes. It must be that the majority of Liberals know that this once great and glorious party is no longer the party of freedom—that it is dead in trespasses and sins, and that it ought to be sent into outer darkness, there to betake itself to meditation and repentance.

But the hardest thing of all for Republican Liberals is to turn right around and vote for the Democracy, which they hav always opposed. But Liberals, above all other men, are thinkers, reasoners, act upon evidence, and it ought to be easy for men of that stamp to follow their principles wherever they lead—to follow them out of any party that abandons them, and into whatever other party may take them up and adopt them.

The first resolution, voted with enthusiasm by the League last year at Cincinnati, and, what is more, reported and read to the Congress by Colonel Ingersoll, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, reads as follows:

"Resolved, That we mutually pledge each other that we will, in our several localities, use our influence and cast our votes for such candidates for office as publicly declare their belief in the absolute secularization of the government; and we recommend that the state and auxiliary Leagues in their respectiv localities act together upon all political questions."

Now it so happens that this year the Democratic party, in convention assembled at that same Cincinnati, incorporated into their platform the first plank of the platform of the Liberal League, in the words, "Separation of church and state for the good of each." In addition to that the Democratic candidate has officially announced principles to the same purport, which hav been published in The Truth Seeker. The Democratic party then, in its platform of principles and the utterances of its candidate, is a long way ahead of the Republican or any other party in the adoption of principles which the League was specially formed to propagate. It will be then perfectly in accordance with the above resolution of the League to cast our votes for Democratic candidates, as they hav "publicly declared their belief in the absolute secularization of the government."

But suppose the Democratic party had not taken this Liberal advance and announced these Liberal principles. Suppose the Democratic and Republican parties stood about even in that respect this year, still the best political policy would lead the Liberals to vote the Democratic ticket this year as retribution for the evil work done by the Republicans. They are the ins and the Democrats the outs. The situation should be reversed even on no higher ground than for adequate punishment. The Liberal party must commence voting as a party sometime. It may as well begin this year as any time. We are too few in numbers to make much impression as a separate party. It is too expensiv, too laborious, and too ineffectual to go it alone yet. The next best thing to do is to act as a balance of power, and vote against the Republican party, the author of all our woes. The most efficient way to vote against the Republican party is to vote directly for the Democratic party. Every Liberal ought to be willing to vote for the devil incarnate if necessary to beat a God insensate. And it would be out of no love for the devil, but out of respect for his strength united to ours to turn out of heaven, which he has disgraced, a dishonest God who don't know any better than to oppress the honest men who placed him there. So too, it is out of no love for the Democratic party that Liberals will vote for its candidates. Wakeman, Wright, Green, Bennett, and thousands of others, all Republicans and many of them Abolitionists heretofore, know thoroughly well the history of the Democratic party, and concede all that can be said against it. Its crimes in the war against slavery, before and since, are all known and undisputed.

But it is not really for the Democratic party that we propose to vote. We propose to use the Democratic party as a club to beat out the brains of the Republicans as a punishment for their recreancy to the principles of the founders of the republic. That once done, if the Democracy hav no gratitude for our assistance in elevating them to power, if they repudiate our claim for recognition in the laws they make, or, still better, unmake, we will turn square around at the next election, with our increased numbers, and use the Republicans as another club, haul the Democratic party up a blind alley, and put the same finishing touches to their political career.

We, the Liberals, are not going to vote as Democrats for the Democracy; but we volunteer, condescend for this once, to vote as Liberals for the Democrats—vote as an experiment, a sort of political trial trip this year, to test our engines and see how the machinery works. Then when the Democratic turn comes to go into outer darkness, as very likely it soon will, for their forgetfulness of the principles of freedom, we will again vote as Liberals for the Republicans—and so alternate from election to election till we obtain the legislation, and the repeal of legislation, which we demand.

Every time after voting we will haul off for report of results, count our scalps, and look after the wounded and missing—keeping our forces well and compactly in hand for another struggle, attacking or defending either side, but always pushing our own cause at every election. On the political chess-board there are many moves—not just only one move and that this one only year. If death does not end all, one election does not exhaust all Liberal possibilities. The future is ours.

No harm can come from the Republican party going out of power for a term. They hav become haughty, imperious, corrupt by long-continued success. Teach them by defeat that they are mortal and can be cut down in the sere and yellow leaf, like other growths that hav become old and decrepit. A term or two out of power will rejuvenate them. A leave of absence, with a few seaside baths and some laundrying, will clean them up and prepare them to resume power with new ideas, a fresh stock of free principles, and a wholesome "fear of the Lord"—and the lord over them is the people who make them, and may any day unmake them as well.

T. C. Leland.

An Appeal to the Liberals of Illinois.

WILL THE FRIENDS OF THE LIBERAL LEAGUE MOVEMENT IN ILLINOIS HEED THE FOLLOWING ADDRESS?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hope you will find a place in your crowded columns for this valuable address from our energetic Liberal friend F. F. Follet. And I desire to impress it upon the minds of the Liberals of Illinois to hold up the hands of this faithful servant of the cause of humanity, and the best way to do that is to immediately, after you read the address, mail to Mr. Follet a quantity of postage stamps or one dollar in money.

H. L. Green,
Chairman Ex. Com. N. L. L.

THE ADDRESS.

Friends of the Liberal cause in the state of Illinois, and more especially those who are in sympathy with the National Liberal League movement, please giv me your attention.

The National Liberal League movement is going forward very rapidly in almost every part of this country except in this rich and fertile state of Illinois, and the only conceivable reason that I can giv why it does not advance here is that there has heretofore been no working sub-committee to push the work forward in this state; and inasmuch as it has pleased the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League to appoint me to represent the state of Illinois on the Executiv Committee (I hav just received a certificate to that effect), I am extremely anxious to push forward the organization of auxiliary Leagues without delay; and in order to do this so-much-needed work more efficiently and more rapidly, I am anxious, as soon as it can be accomplished, to organize an executiv sub committee, in accordance with the instructions given in Article XI. of the Constitution of the National Liberal League. If suitable persons can be found who are willing to take hold of this work with me, I shall be most happy to hear from them. I would prefer that this sub-committee be composed of two gentlemen and two ladies; but I am not tenacious as to that; I want live workers. I would like, as far as practicable, that they be located in different quarters of the state.

Now, friends of the League, please send me your nominations for this sub-committee, and in the mean time let all who want blank applications for charters, and instructions in regard to organizing auxiliary Leagues, write me at once.

And I would further appeal to the friends of Freethought in the state of Illinois, and all of those who hav a desire to see the work of organizing Leagues prosper in this state, to send me pecuniary aid in the form of postage stamps and money in order to help me in more efficiently carrying on this work.

The Constitution of the National Liberal League makes no provision whereby the State Executiv Committee receives any pay for postage, stationary, traveling, or any other expenses they may incur in this work. There are but few, if any, men who are absorbed in business who will giv the work the time and attention it requires. So far as I can ascertain, the work has to be done by those who can the least afford to stand the expense. And I feel satisfied that when the Liberals of this country come to a proper understanding of the situation in this matter they will open their hearts and purses to help push it forward.

I am a poor man, past the meridian of life (56 years old), and I am willing to devote the remainder of my life (as I hav been doing for some years past) entirely to the cause of humanity and to the advancement and elevation of the human race.

But I must hav some pecuniary aid in order to successfully carry forward this League work. I will endeavor to make monthly reports of all sums received (when the remittances amount to ten cents or upwards) in The Truth Seeker and Mind and Matter. I hav never asked aid for myself to the amount of one cent, and I hope I may never be compelled to do so. But now I feel compelled to ask aid for the cause of humanity and the good of the generation in which I liv.

Friends of free thought, free speech, free press, and free mails; friends who are in favor of national protection to national citizens in all of their equal, civil, and religious rights, irrespectiv of race or sex, let me hear from you.

The work we hav in hand does not brook delay. The Christian church, through its ministers, such as Anthony Comstock and the Y. M. C. A., is leaving no means untried or stone unturned in its endeavors to crush out freedom of thought, speech, and action in regard to free religious belief and liberty in this country. And the sooner we, as men and women, meet these issues, the better it will be for generations that are so follow. F. F. FOLLETT.

Rockford, Ill, June 24, 1880. Box 263.

P. S.—I keep on hand and take orders for all of D. M. Bennett's publications, as well as his photos in prison garb and those taken before his imprisonment, which I am prepared to furnish at publisher's prices. I also take subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Mind and Matter.

F. F. F.

Two Hundred Auxiliary Liberal Leagues!—The Political Situation.

Secretary A. L. Rawson notifies me by to-day's mail that a charter has just been issued for auxiliary Liberal League No. 200, and he adds, "Please notice and hurra." And this charter, I am glad to know, has been issued to one of the oldest and best Liberal associations in the United States, the old Liberal Association of Maple Rapids, Michigan.

Two hundred auxiliary Liberal Leagues! only think of it and take courage. Now let the good work go on. This news should stimulate the members of each of the old Leagues to meet and reorganize and go to work. It should inspire the friends of state secularization who are still unorganized to at once meet and organize. It should arouse the Liberals all over the country to greatly renewed action in behalf of the principles we profess.

Yesterday I was gratified to learn that Mr. Bennett and Mr. Underwood, two of the ablest champions of the Liberal cause, had settled their differences in an amicable manner. That is just as it should be, and I hope this good example may become contagious in the Liberal ranks. Now that we hav two hundred auxiliary Liberal Leagues we can afford to be a little magnanimous with each other and forget our differences and "shake hands across the bloody chasm."

The political situation is being earnestly discussed in THE TRUTH SEEKER and other Liberal papers, and some of the writers are expressing their views in strong language. Friends, we must try and not get too much excited and lose sight of the interests of the Liberal League movement. It is evident that neither of the old political parties are very much in love with us. We hav compelled them all to say something in their platforms for the purpose of obtaining our votes, and if we get further concessions from them in the future it will be by working in unison so as to make our strength felt. For myself, I am inclined to the opinion that if we could all go together it would be about the best thing we could do just now to use the Democratic candidates to punish the Republican party for its shortcomings. But I may be mistaken. I desire to hear the opinions of all before I definitly decide. I am not a Greenbacker, but if I am convinced that by voting for the Greenback ticket I can best subserve the Liberal League movement, then I will vote that ticket.

The way I look at it is this: With Liberals the vital question should be the secularization question. The other political questions affect all persons alike. If the present financial arrangements oppress the people, the oppression is felt alike by the Catholic, Protestant and Liberalist—by the Democrat, Republican, and Greenbacker. But the injustice that the Liberal League movement was organized to remedy is felt only by persons with certain opinions. The Liberals in this country to-day are a proscribed class, denied the advantages others enjoy, and proscribed on account of the views they entertain on religious questions; and until I am a free man, enjoying the same privileges that my orthodox neighbors do, I shall not take much interest in other political questions.

My idea is that we should all vote together, and let that vote be cast where it will aid us the most. But, friends, do not allow your zeal for your own way of thinking in relation to our duties politically this fall to cause you to do anything or say anything that shall weaken our strength or the cause we all hav at heart. I hav confidence that good council will prevail at the next Liberal League Congress, and if we do not come to a conclusion in which we will all agree, we will at least make a long step forward toward political action in favor of state secularization.

With two hundred live Liberal Leagues, and the number constantly growing, we can become, if we will, a great political power in this country. Again I say, let us keep cool and exhibit wisdom and discretion in whatever we do, and act together for the good of humanity.

H. L. GREEN.

Attention, Freethinkers! Read Carefully and Respond.

I am confident that the best work that I ever devised was the getting up of the large posters for the Hornellsville Convention, and now I desire to learn how many friends I hav who will aid me in getting them circulated from one end of our country to the other. Remember the size, 33x48; color, red, white, and blue. An eagle at the top with a scroll in his beak, on which is inscribed, "Universal mental liberty." At each side of the eagle selections from Paine and Ingersoll; then a full notice of the meeting, with a full list of our speakers, some thirty; next comes the names of Liberal editors and leading Liberal papers; then the railroad and hotel arrangements, and other important things; around it all a fine border.

These posters will be ready for delivery by the time these lines are in print. Every Liberal in the United States will want one copy at least to keep for an ornament in the sitting room.

Now, remember, I will forward a single poster for ten cents; over one and less than twenty-five, seven cents each; over twenty-five and less than one hundred, six cents each; one hundred and over, five cents each. Now I desire to learn now many true Liberal friends I hav, and I shall consider every person who orders one poster and puts it up, one of my personal friends. I never was more earnest in any work than this. Ten of these large bills well posted in a small town, if not a person thereof attends the Convention, will do more for the Liberal cause than a good lecture. Let us now get five hundred orders this week. I mean all I say in this matter. H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y.

Work for the Liberal League.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: If there are any Liberals who are foolish enough to think there is no necessity for the National Liberal League movement, let them read the following resolutions passed by the United Presbyterian General Assembly of the United States:

WHEREAS, It pleased God in his eternal purpose to choose and ordain the Lord Jesus, his only begotten Son, to be the heir of all things, and judge of the world, by virtue of which appointment he exercises a dominion over all created persons and things, which dominion all intelligent beings to whom he has been revealed are bound to acknowledge in their respectiv stations and relations; and

WHEREAS, The Constitution of the United States contains no explicit recognition of God, or of the supremacy of his law, or of the subjection of the nation to the Lord Jesus Christ; therefore

Resolved, That this omission, whether due to oversight or intention, is a serious defect in that otherwise excellent instrument, and one which should, by legal and constitutional means, be removed.

Resolved, That Christianity is the vital and essential principle of free government. The prosperity of the nation and its permanence depend, therefore, on the maintenance of its Christian character. When it shall voluntarily bring itself into a proper relation to the author of its existence, and to his son, exalted to be the "prince of the kings of the earth," then "our land shall yield its increase, and God, even our God, shall bless us."

The only way to protect ourselvs against the encroachments of this church power is to multiply the auxiliary Liberal Leagues. Friends, organize at once in every town where the Liberals can be found. H. L. GREEN.

A Word about Bequests.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Admitting that a man should hav the privilege of disposing of his property by will as he sees fit, we are still surprised that a man will do it in a way more to gain notoriety than to really benefit the object for which it was intended, following out the rule, as it were, that as the wealth was limited to the donor in his life, so it should afterwards be limited in its benefits. While we further admit that perhaps many of these people are sincere in their work and honestly believe that it will do the most good in the way they dispose of it, and fully believe that an established religious creed or institution is more fitted to be intrusted with the bequest than some untried institution or charity, they are no doubt influenced to do this by those who hav an interested motiv about it, and so these men are more or less duped in the matter. Let this be as it may, my question is, Hav these people really done the best they could in this disposition?

Out of armies of lawyers, doctors, divines, writers, and statesmen, how very few ever arise to distinguished honors! So in the matter of bestowing bequests; how very few ever truly distinguish themselvs by a happy hit! Girard was one who showed a far-reaching mind. He intended that his bequest should truly benefit the people. And where, let me inquire, has a charity done a nobler work than his? Peabody, in his efforts to educate the colored people of the South, has done another noble deed. Cornell has followed Girard. Cooper has done a grand thing for New York city. These men hav really done well, and they hav truly reached the people. They hav thrown their charity open unto all, and this proves that their hearts had truly the right beat. And it may be reasoned that these men had unlimited wealth to bestow and could so dispose of it as to make successful a scheme which with a few thousands would be utterly impossible. I am not so sure about that. Small bequests hav to be concentrated with others in order to become successful in work, and why not in one field as well as another?

To illustrate this, suppose a person desires that a free art school should be established in the city of Providence, R. I., and he knows that what he can afford to giv will not establish it, then he admits that he has got to hav more aid before it can become available. Well, then, giv it direct to the city itself and name your conditions. It would be accepted, no doubt, if the terms were of a reasonable nature. Others, with similar minds, seeing that so much had been done, would be anxious to giv the object another push forward. Others throwing in their mite, the object would be accomplished, and a glorious charity at length blossom into fruition which would be destined to do a permanent good unto all. This case will hold good in other fields wherever it may be applied.

It is right here that these people are duped. They should never giv to sectarian control, but always direct to the government, to be managed for the good of all. Charity should ever be broad and free, and should in this manner be distributed. Without this wholesome feeling in the soul the charity availeth nothing.

I hope to see this public spirit, so well begun by Girard, Cooper, Cornell, and others, blossom still more in the future; and I should be pleased to see the public administer for the good of all instead of a trusted few. Could a free school of art, of music, of history, or a high school, be established in every town in our country by these voluntary means, how much good would they bestow upon the community! The more these schools could be scattered, the more good they would do. Hundreds and thousands would avail themselvs of this charity that are now debarred by distance from the school alone.

Here is a good field to work in, and one that appeals to true charity, and one that will test the true feeling of the heart. It remains to be seen in the future how many will stop giving to sectarian institutions, being flattered to do it more or less, or who will use a more independent mind and bestow their favors upon the government, to be used for all.

No person could leave a more worthy monument of himself than to plant, or help plant, a free high school in his nativ town. This institution, if rightly established, will last long after a marble slab will lie prostrate in the dust. It would stand as a green bay tree, and keep its donor's name forever bright, and implant a warming influence in the hearts of all who come under its benign sway.

JAMES W. ARNOLD.

Hamilton, R. I.

The Brussels Congress

Is to meet Sunday, August 29th, and will hold three sessions daily for three days, closing on Tuesday, the 31st, with a solemn secret session, with doors closed to all but the faithful to the cause. The prospects of our delegation are better than ever. Indorsements and money still come in, and it is safe to say American Liberals will hav no reports from there to cause regret in having recognized a forward movement in the work of humanizing and secularizing the governments of the world. A. L. RAWSON.

Convention of Michigan Spiritualists and Liberalists.

The Spiritualists and Liberalists of Van Buren and adjoining counties will hold their next Convention Saturday and Sunday, August 7th and 8th, 1880, in the apple orchard grove of Robert Nesbitt, in the township of Hamilton, six miles northwest of Decatur village, commencing at 2 o'clock, P.M., on Saturday.

Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Detroit, and Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, of South Haven, are engaged as speakers. Dr. C. A. Dunning, of Marcellus, will furnish vocal music; the Hamilton Brass Band, instrumental music. There will be some tenting on the ground, also a refreshment stand with lemonade and ice-cream.

To help defray expenses and avoid "passing the hat," a fee of ten cents for each adult will be taken at the gate on Sunday. L. S. BURDICK, Pres't,
Box B, Kalamazoo, Mich.

LOTTIE M. WARNER, Sec'y.,
Paw Paw, Mich.

Book Notice.

THE GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.—D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "The Champions of the Church," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," etc., has brought out this work from his office of publication, 141 Eighth street, New York city.

The volume, which the writer states to be more of a compilation than an original production, opens with an introduction of nearly fifty pages, in which the antiquity of the earth and man's primitiv condition upon it are discussed, followed by accounts of early superstitions; origin of priests and their rule; ancient forms of worship, and brief sketches of Hindoo, Norse, Greek, and Roman mythology. The main body of the work consists of historical descriptions of numerous gods, demi and semigods, with outlines of the teachings supposed to hav emanated from them. These divinities include those worshiped by the Hindoos, Persians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, Chinese, Greeks, Romans, Norsemen, the African tribes, and other savages, and the Semitic races, numbering in all about two hundred. The latter portion of the book is devoted to a history and criticism of the Bible, given in that thoroughly radical style that characterizes all of the writings of Mr. Bennett. There will be found in the 835 pages of this volume a great amount of information, a large proportion of which is not in any other form accessible to a majority of the people. The book is dedicated "To Mrs. Margaret McEwen and Mrs. Martha Van Allen (mother and daughter), two noble women, who hav shown marked kindness, not only to the writer, but to many sick and dying in the prison hospital (where these pages were written), and who by their continued kindness hav caused many rays of cheerful sunshine to fall upon the sick and hapless prisoners, though differing in religious views from the author." Women who merit such a dedication are certainly worthy of all praise.—Banner of Light.

MRS. COLBY and Mrs. Smith will attend a two-days' meeting at Little Valley, N. Y., the last Saturday and Sunday of July, and at Byron, a grove-meeting, the first Sunday of August. Persons wishing their services can address them accordingly. Permanent address, Laona, N. Y.

THE first American bank was instituted in 1781.

Discussion.

Mr. Mair's Fourth Letter.

NEW YORK, July 21, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The criticism of your second letter was written in haste and partly with the hope of drawing from you a more careful and logical support of your first thesis. To hold up a record of ancient mythology against portions of which parts of the Bible were especially directed, and without further comment or argument exclaim, "There, that disproves Christianity," is to reject it in a spirit of rash indifference upon the most superficial examination and not on incontrovertible evidence. I presume that the body of proof of the first thesis is now before us, and laying aside, as far as I may be able, all bias, I desire to examine it with impartiality and thoroughness. But I shall have to make some corrections before I really enter on the work of comparison and criticism.

Firstly, I repeat distinctly and unqualifiedly that it is a gross perversion of scripture to suppose that there was any physical action in the begetting of the human body of Jesus Christ. No Christian holds any such abominable thought. The idea of any sexual cohabitation of God with the Virgin Mary is abhorrent to every sect of Christians. You may, if you choose, continue your flippant remarks on this supposition, which originated in Infidel minds, and are held by such only, but in so doing you forfeit all honesty and manliness, and only mislead those who are no better informed.

In your last letter you say: "Christianity is held up to the world as being a supernatural system of religion, though gotten up less than nineteen hundred years ago, and that upon the divinity of its character the whole world depends for present or future happiness. The claim is stoutly made that it is a new discovery, a divine invention of the greatest importance to the whole world, the like of which was never known before. Now this claim is true or it is untrue." If by Christianity you mean salvation by the death of Christ, you err when you say it was "gotten up less than nineteen hundred years ago." The gospel was preached to Adam, and he and every saint in the Old Testament was saved by the foreseen sacrifice of him who was to come. The scripture represents that there was a revelation made to Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, and thousands of others of the elect of God before the commencement of the written revelation. There never was a time when the knowledge and salvation of the true God was entirely lost to the world. Some scattered saints here and there, like Enoch, amidst all the darkness and moral wandering, walked with God; and Christianity, in this sense, began with the commencement of the ruined world, when first the glad tidings of the mercy of God were told to Adam, and the sweet story, now fully told out, has been the felicity of myriads of redeemed sinners ever since. The full revelation, I grant you, was made when "grace and truth came" fully manifested "through Jesus Christ;" but his coming has been the hope of prophecy—to which fact you obstinately shut your eyes and adduce no comparison—since Adam. The promise to Adam has been the genuine coin, of which all false religions are the counterfeits, and very poorly executed at that. As to the remark that "if other mythical gods had long before fallen in love with the daughters of men and got them with child, it is hardly worth while for Jehovah, or rather Jahveh, to claim he was the inventor of that process. If he had only followed in the footsteps of his predecessors we cannot accord him the honor of originality in that line," etc., it merely shows the incompetency of the writer, which he confesses in the ninth paragraph, to distinguish the difference between the coarse conception of a god with human passions and lusts and a human structure seducing a virgin out of mere concupiscence, and the formation of, by the power of God, without lust or connection, a human body in a virgin's womb for the most exalted purpose—the satisfaction of his justice and honor and the salvation of men. Neither, sir, does it honor your sense of the consideration due to an opponent who believes Christ the holiest and best gift of God, and who naturally is very averse to such irreverence and flippancy. If you were a Buddhist, I should certainly expect, however desirous I might be to win you from delusion, to treat your faith with all courtesy and reverence, for there is nothing at which, if a man sincerely believes, I can scoff.

You misrepresent me (unintentionally, I grant) when you quote me as affirming that "while you (I) admit that religious systems have borrowed from other systems, you (I) seem at a loss whether Judaism borrowed from other nations or other nations from Judaism." I did not say anything of the sort. My own mind is perfectly convinced of the divine origin of Judaism. And as far as your further remarks in the paragraph have any truth, they merely prove what I did say.

As to the fifth paragraph—you will pardon me for the satire, but why did you not deny that the Jews ever inhabited Judea? Your list of "the best Bible scholars" amuses me. Prof. Kuenen, Ewald, and DeWette, and the "learned Germans" are proverbially rationalistic, Greg is a pronounced Infidel who has written against Christianity, and Chadwick is not much better—a very liberal Unitarian. Why did you not also quote F. W. Newman, Eichhorn, Bauer, and perhaps Prof. Robertson Smith? Still, DeWette wrote this just before his death in 1849: "This only I know, that there is salvation in no other name than in the name of Jesus Christ—the crucified." I can name you Bible scholars equal to DeWette, the greatest of these, who did not accept such silly conclusions. The age of Genesis, as you remark, and the reliability of Josephus, will be proper topics to discuss hereafter.

I judge you have given my reply a very hasty reading. I have not anywhere, as yet, alleged the rapid and wide diffusion of Christianity as a proof of its truth and divinity, but merely as one proof of the personal existence of Christ. You mistake history when you mention any other religion as having as rapid a diffusion, which seemed so cogent an argument in favor of the Christian revelation to the polished but unbelieving Gibbon that he elaborates five reasons to evade its force. I should call these reasons axiomatical absurdities, were it not that judging from the manner in which you bring in an irrelevant defense of Thomas Paine, against whom I have said nothing, you might also digress to eulogize Mr. Gibbon.

The historians I had in mind were Josephus, Tacitus, and Seutonius, and you might include Pliny. It is perhaps a slight inaccuracy to call the last three contemporaneous, because they lived about seventy years after Christ's crucifixion. Tacitus, as you know, speaking of Christians, says, "The author of that name was Christ, who in the reign of Tiberius was punished with death, as a criminal, by the procurator Pontius Pilate;" and Seutonius records that "Claudius Cæsar expelled the Jews from Rome (A.D. 52), because they raised continual tumults at the instigation of Christ." I do not quote these to rely on them now, merely to acknowledge the slight chronological inaccuracy. With regard to the governmental archives to which I referred I see you claim for yourself a relationship to the old lady with whom you wish to connect me. You say that "if any archives can be produced relative to the crucifixion of Jesus I am certain they are also spurious forgeries," in a decidedly "I told you so" manner. I referred to the Acti Pilati, quoted by the early Christian apologists Justin Martyr and Tertullian, a paragraph of which reads as follows:

"Pilate to Tiberius, etc.:

"I have at length been forced to consent to the crucifixion of Jesus Christ, to prevent a tumult among the Jews, though it was very much against my will. For the world never saw and probably never will see a man of such extraordinary piety and uprightness. But the high-priests and sanhedrim fulfilled in it the oracles of their prophets and of our Sibyls. While he hung on the cross, a horrid darkness which covered the earth seemed to threaten its final end. His followers, who profess to have seen him rise from the dead and ascend into heaven and acknowledge him for their God, do still subsist, and by their excellent lives show themselves the worthy disciples of so extraordinary a master. I did all I could to save him from the malice of the Jews, but the fear of a total insurrection made me sacrifice him to the peace and interest of your empire" (Mc Clintock & Strong's Enc., vol. ii, p. 680). I am aware that the genuineness of this is disputed (but what is there favoring Christianity that Infidelity has not disputed?) but my own convictions from the circumstances attending it are that it is not spurious. Still I should not have quoted it had you not asked for it. It forms no part of my argument.

As to the ninth paragraph I have already sufficiently noticed its contents. I hardly care to defend my sincerity if you are ungenerous enough to doubt it, but my first thought of your meaning was that you had confounded Gabriel with the Holy Ghost and supposed it was the latter who delivered the message to Mary. It was probably stupid on my part, but I was not certain of your reference.

As to Christ being accounted by Christians a demigod, you will pardon me if I am sufficiently dogmatic to insist that theologians do not hold so. But if they did, it makes no difference, scripture does not teach it.

In regard to Buddhism, you are not called upon, as you have said, to defend it, and the lengthy quotations you have made are pointless. I sincerely admire and pity Buddha and have no harsh word to say of him. I shall hereafter, however, compare his system more fully with Christianity, and now I must turn to your preceding letter.

Among the authorities you quote are Sir William Jones and Prof. Max Muller, both I think Christians, the former I know a most devout one. They are better competent to express an absolutely reliable judgment on the comparative merits of Christianity and other systems than either of us, so I scarcely need an apology for the following quotations. Sir William thus expresses his judgment of the scriptures: "I have carefully and regularly perused the Holy Scriptures, and am of opinion that the volume, independently of its divine origin, contains more sublimity, purer morality, more important history, and finer strains of eloquence than can be collected from all other books, in whatever language they may have been written." And Prof. Muller sums up the advantage of a comparative study of religion, particularly of the orientals, in these words, "We shall learn to appreciate better than ever what we have in our own religion" (Chips from a German Workshop).

The lists copied from Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and also your own catalogue of virgin-and-child traditions, are slovenly pieces of composition. No. 6, Thammuz, is the name under which the Phœnecians and Syrians worshipped Adonis (No. 29) of Greece. He is referred to in the Bible, as is also Baal. Why duplicate? Besides, he was not crucified but killed by a wild boar on Mt. Lebanon. Neither was Atys (Nos. 17 and 13) crucified, but on account of his broken vow became insane, unmanned himself, and was changed into a fig-tree. Quirinius (Nos. 40 and 8) was the name given after his deification to Romulus, the reputed founder of Rome. According to mythology he was carried to heaven by his father Mars as he was reviewing the people near the marsh of Cupra. Another tradition represents him as murdered by the Roman senators for his tyranny, and cut into pieces and carried out of the Senate-chamber under their cloaks—a decidedly curious crucifixion. Prometheus (12 and 9) was chained to Mt. Caucausus, where a vulture or eagle preyed daily upon his liver, which grew again at night. Who is your authority for the crucifixion of Indra? Some of the names you adduce are new to me, but it would be a waste of time to examine them further, as well as an insult to the intelligence of every reader who obeys the scriptural injunction, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

In your own carefully (?) prepared list at the end of the letter your passion for the epithet "virgin mother" has led you into a ridiculous blunder. Your definition of virgin would not agree with Worcester and Webster. In plain, not one of those you enumerate was a virgin, but all obtained offspring in the usual manner. And then as to "No. 5.—Alcmene, virgin mother of the Redeemer Alcides," she was a married women, the wife of Amphitryon, king of Thebes, and mother of Alcides by Jupiter, who visited her in the guise of her husband! Alcides was a patronymic of Hercules, duplicated in No. 17. The "Redeemer Sakia-Muni," No. 4, here is "Buddha Sakia of India," and "Sakia of the Hindoos," No. 2, of the foregoing lists, and who never was in fact, and never believed to have been in fiction, a crucified savior. Isis, No. 3, is identical with Io, No. 4, this being the Greek form, that the Egyptian. Is it on such glaring inaccuracies and perversions that Infidelity builds its superstructure? Am I not justified in calling the whole thing slovenly?

From the utter misunderstanding of Biblical theology which has been shown in support of the first thesis of this discussion it seems necessary to have a statement of scriptural teaching as to the person and character of Jehovah to obtain a proper standard of comparison. Having ascertained this, we will be more competent to contrast with it the systems from which Mr. Bennett derives Christianity.

The revelation of God in the scripture is partial, progressive, and relative, and it was historically so to the Jews. It is not a pantheistic or materialistic conception, but the belief in the existence of a distinct Personal Cause, who existed apart from and before the universe. An eternity before the creation the same almighty, all-wise God existed; and when it pleased him to call matter into being, he created it out of nothing and shaped it in its present condition, as briefly sketched in Genesis, ending with the creation of man in "his own likeness." This creation, including man, is still depending upon him for continued existence and preservation; it has no power to exist inherent in itself. Omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent providence is everywhere ascribed to God in the scriptures.

Man was created innocent, with power to remain so, but by his own wilful act he brought on himself the penalties of a broken law, and destroyed the harmony of the universe. The scripture, henceforth, is that man is an apostate rebel and God has to deal with him in that character. As a rebel, despising God and his holy law, God must punish him, yet God is essentially love; and how infinite justice demanding reparation for a broken law, and infinite mercy for the sinner, can be both exercised without destroying either is the glory of the Christian revelation—redemption outglories creation.

The probation of man by God forms the theme of God's dealings with him in the Old Testament, which yet proclaims by types and shadows the greater truth to be revealed. Man, a fallen creature, does not know God and has no desire toward him. The world becomes abominably wicked, and man proving irretrievably evil, the earth is purged and a new race, to put it that way, is commenced. But failure marks this. Noah, scarcely redeemed from the flood, becomes drunken. Then after an interval Abraham is separated from idolatry and made the depository of blessed promises. A nation springs from him to whom a law is given, and God reveals himself to them as Jehovah—a name of relationship. Man without law fails, God now tests a nation under law, they fail. He sends them prophets, they reject them, "then said the lord . . . , what shall I do? I will send my beloved son, it may be they will reverence him when they see him. But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the Lord, come let us kill him . . . so they killed him. . . ."

These dealings with man so far related extend over a period of four thousand years, during which God manifests his existence by the universe he made, answered prayers, confirmed revelation by miracles, and establishes his claim to be God by prophecy—though of course prophecy has other designs. That this is a scriptural exposition of miracles and prophecy, I quote Exodus vii, 5, where, referring to the miracles against Pharaoh, it is written, "The Israelites shall know that I am Jehovah when I stretch forth my hand upon Egypt," and as a disproval of false gods Jehovah challenges, "Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods" (Isa. xli, 23).

As to the mode of divine existence, while finite understanding can never grasp it, it is, relatively speaking, gradually unveiled, The unity of the godhead is a truth indicted in Old and New Testament alike. "Jehovah our God is one Jehovah" (Deut. vi, 4, and Mark xii, 29). But in the Old Testament, beginning with the first revelation of the person of God up to the last chapter, there is a grammatical singularity in the language. Says a converted rabbi, eminent for his knowledge of Hebrew, "The word Elohim, which we translate God, is plural. . . . How came Moses to chose this word when another singular name (viz., Ail and Eloah, which he uses on other occasions) might have been employed to describe the creation of the world and the supreme God" (Frey's Judah aud Benj., pp. 130, 141. Briefly, the teaching of Scripture and the Christian faith is that God is a trinity of persons in the unity of the godhead, which was also, though less fully revealed, the belief of the Jews before Christ, as the glosses of the rabbins fully prove.

After the fall of man there is the promise of a savior, with a word used that intimates his divinity: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed, he (as it should be translated being a Hebrew word, in other places rendered Jehovah) shall bruise his head," etc. Then as the time draws near, the prophecy becomes more circumstantial, foretelling the time and place of his birth, his mission, his miracles, his rejection, his sufferings, his betrayal, his death, his burial, his resurrection, his ascension, his salvation, etc., etc. These were written at various times during many hundreds of years, so that they cause a great desire for and expectation of his coming. Yet when he came and fulfilled all these prophecies, they rejected and crucified him as foretold, and yet to-day jealously guard the very books that testify of him and witness against themselves. I especially direct your attention to this and ask you if you have adduced any character and circumstances resembling it.

In the New Testament "the fulness of times has come," the prophecies are largely fulfilled—the promised Savior comes, born of a virgin by the power of the Holy Ghost. The three persons of the Trinity are revealed plainly, each acting a different part in the great plan of redemption, for, as St. Austin teaches, "The Father did not assume flesh, nor the Holy Spirit, but the Son only, that he who in the deity was the son of the Father should be made the son of man, in his mother of the human race, that the name of the Son should not pass unto any other who was not the son by an eternal nativity."

The Christian faith is that Christ, the son of God, is "God of God, light of light, true God of true God, begotten not made." There never was a time when the Son was not, nor was he made of things existing but is the same essence as the Father. He displayed God on earth, the "word was made flesh," so that the two natures, divine and human, distinct, yet became one person—Christ. He was crucified by wicked hands, rose on the third day, and ascended to heaven, where he now sits at the right hand of God—his death being the only salvation and himself the only way of approach unto God. Those who do not exercise faith in him after reaching years of accountability, dying unconverted, are forever lost—subject during eternity to the wrath of God and the punishment of eternal hell. The Son having offered himself without spot a sacrifice to God to save his own which were in the world, the Spirit, the third person in the Trinity, quickens, regenerates, and sanctifies those for whom Christ thus died, and changes them from a state of apostasy and hate to allegiance and love to God.

On the ground of the death of Christ, God now offers salvation to "whosoever will believe," pleading with a solemn, affectionate, never-wearing persuasion to every human being that hears, to accept the free gift of God, and yet pronouncing, as in the nature of things it must be, the necessary doom of eternal damnation to those who scoff at the offer and reject the blood of the Son of God. If I were you, reader, I would accept the gift of God.

In this hurried and imperfect sketch the character and work of God may be summarized as follows:

A God self-existent, incorporeal, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent, immutable, holy, just, loving, jealous of his honor, hating sin, merciful.

The Creator, Upholder, and Ruler of everything, so that nothing happens by chance.

A Trinity in Unity.

A prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God.

A God of prophecy, revealing himself also by miracles.

A God against whom men are continually sinning, and "before whom the whole world is brought in guilty."

Who provides a Savior, who, being the second person in the trinity, becomes incarnate for men's salvation and to reveal God fully to men. Which is, according to prophecy, uttered centuries before.

The Incarnate God proves himself by miracles, is rejected, crucified, raised on the third day, and ascended to heaven, all as prophesied centuries before his incarnation.

After his ascension, the Holy Spirit, the third person in the Trinity, descends to "convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and judgment;" "of sin because they believe not on" Christ, and to console believers during his absence. This is the Spirit's gracious office during this period of grace.

Christ having left a promise of his return, his followers are taught to wait, watching for him.

Those who reject him dying are damned, and unbelievers living at his coming will be turned "into everlasting fire."

This is an imperfect outline of God whom the Christian adores and loves. I do not adduce it as proved or as true, but merely that, true or false, it is the Christian faith. My future articles will contrast with this standard the different characters and religions which Mr. Bennett alleges to be similar to this religion, or more correctly, to use his own words, from which "Christianity, being neither new nor original, is copied."

I understand, sir, that you will sail for Europe before this is in print. I wish you a pleasant and safe voyage, and remain, Very sincerely yours,

G. M. Mair.

Political Action.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The proper stand to be taken by Liberals in the pending national canvass seems now to be a subject of much discussion in your columns; which shows that the advocates of mental liberty and the separation of church and state are alive to the necessity of united and intelligent action on the part of all classes who favor a government administered on the basis of impartial rights, and who demand an executiv whose acts shall not be dictated by ecclesiastical control. The subject is one of the highest importance, and it behooves us to look well at the political situation, that we may not throw away our votes on a candidate whose predilections for orthodoxy would lead him to ignore our rights, or from ignorance of his true standing be led into the error of casting our votes directly counter to each other, as has been the case heretofore, from not having the question properly discussed and understood before election. I am sorry to see so much acrimony exhibited by some of your correspondents at the mere mention of the expediency of uniting our votes for once upon the candidate of a party which offers us the only available means of ousting a confessedly church-hampered faction from power. Of the candidates presented by the Democratic and Republican parties one or the other of them is almost certain to be our executiv for the next four years. Outside of these two great organizations the other nominees do not stand the ghost of a chance; they will not obtain a single electoral vote. This may be a fact to be deplored; I nevertheless believe it to be true; and that every vote thus given will count for nothing as to practical results in the present campaign. The question then is, Has the dominant party so conducted itself, or is it likely to, that Liberals can afford to giv it another lease of power? If not, what shall we do to rebuke it? I am aware that numbers find it hard to cut loose from a party with which they hav been identified for years, even when corruptions become alarmingly apparent. Probably a great majority of those constituting the Liberal element to-day belonged to the Republican party during its career of usefulness, many still cling to it in hopes of a reformation, while those who left it doubtless did so with sincere regret. But it should be remembered that no party can enjoy a long-continued lease of power without corruptions creeping in, nor is it advisable to continue long in power any party after the issues that called it into existence hav been swept away. I greatly like the sentiments of Geo. W. Julian, one of the original Abolitionists, in a speech in Indianapolis, regarding political parties, in which he said: "If one's party is a deity to be worshiped, or a master to be served, with what propriety or decency can he unfurl the flag of reform? Every passing day confirms me in the truth of what I said years ago, a political party should be regarded simply as a political make-shift. It is an agency now and then made necessary by some new turn in the wheel of our politics, and useful only so long as the occasion for it continues. It is not an institution, but a temporary combination of men inspired by a common political aim, and when that aim is accomplished, the combination should be dissolved. Having done its work, and being unfitted for new tasks, it becomes a stumbling-block in the path of progress, and ceases to be a party by degenerating into a faction."

Narrowed down to these grounds, and confident that any attempt to rebuke a great party which has become the subservient tool of ecclesiastical tyranny will be futil if made in the direction of an independent organization, every Liberal is justified, nay, it becomes his imperativ duty, to lay hold of the nearest available club with which he can deal the Republican party a blow square between the eyes, and, by bringing it abruptly to the ground, teach it that a party of liberty that disgraces its record, that enacts a statute in a free land which would be an abomination under the reign of the meanest tyrant that ever cursed a throne; that through its senators voted solidly for an amendment to the Constitution the only logical outcome of which would be persecution; that bolts the door of a felon's cell upon a man for publishing an Infidel paper; that ordered closed the grounds of our late Centennial Exhibition on Sundays, thus depriving the laboring classes of the privilege of visiting it; that rejected a man as a candidate for governor of Ohio because his rulings in regard to the Bible in the schools did not suit the orthodox; that does all these and more because the church demands it, and yet shows no disposition to correct its errors, has outlived its usefulness and is only fit to die.

It may be asked if we will be any better off under a Democratic administration. I think we will. We can certainly fare no worse, and I see no sense in continuing any party in power simply from a dread that its successor may follow the same tactics. The Democratic senators were certainly the most loyal in the "God-in-the Constitution" matter, and in voting against bayonets at the polls. It has been urged that Catholics are all Democrats and control that party. But this is true only of one section of the Catholics—the Irish. The French almost to a man vote the Republican ticket. The Germans are divided. Doubtless in some districts, as in New York city, the Catholics do control the legislation to a great extent, but a fearless executiv will not truckle to any sect in doing what is plainly seen to be his duty. Even in New York city it was a Democratic governor who came down, one July day a few years since, and gave mortal offense to the Catholic population by countermanding the police injunctions that the Orangemen should not parade. I believe Gen. Hancock to be a man of backbone enough to stand up to his honest duty unawed by the orthodox element. I think a considerably less number than two hundred thousand names to a petition would be sufficient to cause him to do an act of simple justice to a man who had committed no crime! I do not believe the "power behind the throne" would hav sufficient influence over him to sway him from the path of right. His record has not been tainted with fraud, nor is he a member of any church. His wife is a Unitarian, having a pew in Dr. Bellows' church.

Of the Republican nominees, if I mistake not, Gen. Garfield has preached himself at times, and Gen. Arthur's father was formerly a minister in this village. For my own part, I would favor an independent organization if I thought we could gain anything thereby, but I do not believe we could. I want to see, with Col. Ingersoll, a set of questions drafted and submitted to not only the presidential nominees but to every candidate for Congress, governor, state senator, and assembly in every district throughout the Union. Let us allow no candidate for any law-making office to run this fall without submitting to him a uniform set of questions, and if possible get the questions and his answers published in his home papers. We hav time enough if we go to work in dead earnest to giv them a fusillade of constitutional bullets from the Liberal platoons; and, although a nominee's pledges before election are proverbially unreliable, we can at least show them that there is a Rationalist element pervading the country which they will not dare to wholly ignore. In this article I hav only given my own views upon the subject under discussion, and every Liberal will of course be guided by what he believes to be the best course. E. C. Walker says he would rather be the smallest of independent animals than the tail of the most colossal lion. That is all right. Every one will of course examin the subject in the best light he has, and cast his vote according to his conscience. I would not hav it otherwise. It is a matter in which all are interested, and each ought to present his views.

To those who still cling to the Republican party in the hopes of better days, I cannot do better than submit the closing words of Mr. Julian in his masterly speech spoken of above, and I cannot help remarking how aptly it applies to the case of Mr. Bennett and others who were identified with the Republican party in the days of its usefulness and power:

"And now, in conclusion, let me remark that in arraigning the administration and leaders of the Republican party I hav intended no attack upon the honest and intelligent masses who still follow its flag and still hope to redeem it from dishonor. In some other organization and under other leaders they will yet perform as honorable a service as they hav already rendered in wisely solving the great problems of the past. Neither would I pluck a single laurel from the brow of the party in the days of its glory, when its great hosts were led by such men as Lincoln, Sumner, Seward, Greeley, and Chase. I was with it and of it in all its grand achievements, and no man can be prouder than myself of its glorious record, and no man forsook it with more sincere regret. But when I saw that its great work was done, that the marvelous energy it displayed during the war had been turned into the channels of corruption and plunder, with the startling results I hav attempted to depict, and that the devil had safely intrenched himself in the very works that had been built to bombard him, I parted from the friends of a lifetime, whose love was then turned into hate and scorn, and entered upon a fight for political reform which I am resolved to prosecute to the end."

Greenwich, N. Y., July 20, 1880. D. Louis Bodge.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1880.

A Visit to Our Old Home.

Forty years ago we were a member of the Shaker Community at Mount Lebanon, Columbia county, in this state. There are many persons still living there whom we remember with fondness, and whom we like to see as often as we can make it convenient to visit the old grounds. At intervals of five years, on an average, we hav returned to the home of our youth, to see not only our whilom companions, but to look again upon the old hills and valleys, the forests and cultivated fields, orchards, and gardens, where we spent thirteen years of our life, and which make up the beautiful scenery of that locality.

On Thursday, the 22d inst., we left the noisy and bustling city, and by the Harlem Railroad passed through the counties of Westchester, Putnam, and Dutchess, and with pleasure viewed the hills and valleys, the woodland, the farmland, and the thrifty villages with which those counties abound. Nearly everywhere the evidences of thrift and prosperity were abundant. Westchester and Putnam counties are considerably broken, and the proportion of rocky hills compared with arable farming lands is large; but the most is made of the latter class, and many thrifty homes are seen. Dutchess county has much good, productiv land, which is evidently kept in good condition. As in the first two counties named, much of the land is devoted to grazing. Large numbers of cows are kept, and the milk sent to this city. Farms so occupied seldom run down. The droppings of the cows keep the land in good condition. A difference is seen when Columbia county is reached. It is naturally as good land, but grain and hay-growing is the business most pursued by the farmers. They sell their grain, they sell their straw, and scarcely anything is returned to the land, and hence it suffers and is impoverished. The effect of this kind of bad economy is becoming visible to those who ride through that section.

The residents in the Shaker Community, for the last twenty years, hav been but about half what they were forty years ago, the number of those who hav left and those who hav died being in excess of those who hav joined them. The membership of the Community is wholly kept up by additions from the outside world. Many children are taken when young and reared there, but none are born within the Community. They are strict celibates, and the marriage institution is unknown among them. Though the Mount Lebanon Community formerly numbered seven hundred persons, and now but about half that number, they are nevertheless in a flourishing condition. Their farms and gardens look well and are producing good crops; the fences are in good order; the buildings are well painted and everything presents the appearance of thrift and good management.

It was decidedly agreeable to meet and take by the hand the old friends whom we knew and loved nearly half a century ago, as well as to make the acquaintance of those who hav come upon the stage of action since those days. We found a goodly number of those who were once our companions who hav become aged in their lives of faithfulness and cross-bearing. Many hav passed their seventh decade, while a few are midway between eighty and ninety. One aged sister, Dolly Seaton, is one hundred and four years old. We had a pleasant little chat with her, and with the exception of deafness, her mental and physical faculties are well preserved. She walks about from house to house with ease, carries a pitcher of water up-stairs without difficulty, and waits upon herself like a person of seventy-five. She spoke strongly in favor of the virgin life she had led, expressing her thankfulness that she had shunned the sin which is in the world, and had been faithful to the dictates of her faith and conscience. She said if she had another century to liv it should be a continuance of the same life she has lived. It occurred to us that if ordinary people, by a few years of tolerably faithful life, are fortunate enough to secure a good-sized crown in that better world, as we are told of by those who know just about as much of it as we do ourselvs, sister Dolly's crown ought certainly to be both large and brilliant.

We looked with special pleasure over the new dwelling-house, belonging to the Central Family, built in the place of the one which stood upon the same ground, and was burnt five years ago February last, the fire being the work of a malicious man who had worked for them several years and was about to be discharged. He fired two or three of their large buildings, and is now serving out a sentence of fourteen years at hard labor in the State Prison at Clinton. The new dwelling-house is one hundred and ten feet in length by sixty in width, is four and a half stories in hight, and cost $60,000. It is built of the best red hard brick, so bright in color as to require no painting. A splendid cellar, with paved and cemented floor, is under the whole house, and is divided into many rooms or compartments for various purposes. One was occupied by canned fruits, one by numerous barrels of flour, and others by other stores, vegetables, roots, etc., in winter. In one room in the cellar we saw a quantity of eggs standing endwise in boards filled with inch-holes for the purpose. We were assured by those who had proved it that eggs kept in that way and reversed or turned end for end once a month will keep perfectly fresh the year round. This is a very simple process, and everybody ought to be apprised of it.

The entire house is heated by a furnace in the cellar, so that the litter and trouble of keeping up fires in cold weather in fifty separate rooms is wholly avoided. The kitchen, bake-room, and dining-room are models of neatness and perfection, and it is to be doubted if in these qualities they are excelled anywhere in the world. The dining-tables are some thirty feet in length, and the tops are polished marble. The facilities for cooking and baking are of the very best description, and everything is as "neat as wax." This house is the home of eighty persons, and a good home it is. From two to four persons occupy a room, and always of the same sex. The males occupy the rooms in one-half of the house, and the females the other; but they are in each other's society about the same as other people, and they probably liv happier and more pleasantly than the average of mankind. They rarely get angry at each other or indulge in unfriendly language. They have more of reasonable love and less of unreasonable hate than almost any other people in the world. Avarice and selfishness is but little known among them. All are brothers and sisters in one family, and what they have is owned in common.

They hav adopted as a rule for each person to sleep by himself, and each one has a hair mattress. Feathers for beds are largely discarded. The rooms are well lighted and ventilated, and the best attention is paid to the preservation of health. Each story is well supplied with hot and cold water. The water is brought from the mountain springs, nearly two miles away, and is perfectly soft and pure. On the first floor are two large sitting-rooms, or reading-rooms, one for the brethren and one for the sisters. Here they gather at meal times and await the call to the dining-room. Papers and books are lying on the table, and all can read who wish. The two reading-rooms are separated by folding-doors, and when desirable these are opened, throwing the two rooms into one. This is done one night in each week, when the family assembles to hear one of the members read some book which all wish to hear. Quite a taste for reading exists among them. A splendid book-case is in one of the public halls of the house, and it was gratifying to see the "Truth Seeker" publications prominent among the books therein. When we were assured that the "Truth Seeker Library," and other "Truth Seeker" publications, were sought for as eagerly as any other works, we could not avoid the conviction that the readers are on the road to the temple of truth.

The regular meeting room of the family is on the third floor of the T part of the building, a room about sixty by thirty feet, and perhaps twenty feet in hight. Here the members of the family unite in singing, marching, and dancing, which are their favorit modes of worship. They also hav a due proportion of speaking, with silent prayer. Vocal prayer is not used there save in songs of supplication, in which all unite. Their meetings continue from half an hour to one hour and a half. Sometimes they are very animated, when the dancing is very lively and the spirit is well aroused. Involuntary physical operations of the body are not uncommon, and visions and trances were formerly of not unfrequent occurrence. The Shakers are Spiritualists, and believe in the ministrations of departed friends.

The modification that has taken place in their theological notions within the last third of a century is very perceptible. Several expressed themselvs as unbelievers in a personal deity, and regard him as the sum-total of the life principle of the universe, the supreme ruling power. Some imagin he possesses intelligence, while others, who do not think he has parts and organs, hav no idea that he has intelligence, thoughts, or design. Deity, according to their views, is dual, being equally male and female. They are not trinitarians, and do not think father and son are equal in power and age, but are duotarians, and believe rather that God is the father and mother of all existences. They believe that Jesus was not begotten in any different manner from human beings, and that his only superiority was in the pure and sinless life he led. They regard him as having lived a true Shaker life, abstaining from all sexual indulgences, and setting an example that his true disciples must follow. They discard a physical resurrection and the idea of a literal hell, a troubled conscience being the hell they recognize. They hav no use for a personal devil. Some of them attach much importance to the "Christ spirit," distinct from the person of Jesus, and regard it as an element next to the central deific power, and believe it is the spirit to which all must attain who become pure and godly.

The government of the community is vested equally in males and females. Each family has two elders and two eldresses. These direct the spiritual services of the family, and listen to the confessions of the members when they deviate from the prescribed rules of life. They are charitable, and giv such words of mild reproof and advice as they deem necessary. Besides the elders and eldresses, there are deacons and deaconesses, who take in charge the temporal business of the family, direct the labor that is performed, and, in co-operation with the elders, assign to each member the position he shall occupy and the labor he shall perform. The government is mild and reasonable. The supreme government over all the families of a society, or rather of two societies, is vested in the Ministry, consisting of four persons, two of each sex. These are appointed by their predecessors, and are selected from the best and wisest members of the community. If one dies, or becomes incapacitated for duty, the remaining three select one to take his place. They also appoint the elders, and, in connection with the same, the trustees and deacons. They occupy much the position of bishops, having charge of the elders and their subordinates. They occupy a very convenient building by themselvs, and are engaged at suitable mechanical employment when not otherwise occupied. Every member, whether officer or otherwise, is expected to be industrious unless sick. No drones are allowed in the hive.

The Mount Lebanon Ministry hav two societies under their immediate supervision, Watervliet, in Albany county, being the second, where they pass a portion of their time. They also hold general advisory power over the seventeen auxiliary societies located in various parts of the United States; so, besides having the capacity of bishops, they are also popes. There is no appeal from their decision. On the 17th of the present month they are to start on a visiting tour to the Eastern societies, four of which are in Massachusetts, two in New Hampshire, two in Maine, and one in Connecticut.

We visited the cemetery of the society, and stood by the graves of many we knew when living there forty years ago, and memory brought back to us vividly the scenes and experiences in connection with those departed ones. It is well once in a while to thus take a retrospectiv view of the years and the friends that hav passed away. The time thus spent is not unprofitable. Many of those who hav for years been resting quietly in their graves had done us acts of kindness, and we had done the same to them. The remembrance of these things was not unpleasant.

We called for a short time at the North Family, presided over by Elder Frederick W. Evans, a healthy man of seventy-two years. We had a pleasant visit with him as well as with Oliver Prentiss, an uncle of our better half. Mr. Prentiss is eighty-two years of age, and as activ mentally and physically as most persons of fifty. In speaking of the journeys he had made, he said he had been eighty-two times round the sun. One of the most arduous journeys he ever made was when he traveled five hundred miles on horseback to reach a place to be born in. His confidence and belief in the two main features of Shakerism—a virgin life and a community of property—are as strong as when he embraced them sixty years ago.

Elder Evans has been in the society half a century, and previous to that had been a Freethinker, and is little more than that now. He does not believe that the Jewish God, Jehovah, is the God of the universe, nor that Jesus is God, or was begotten of God. He pays great deference to the Christ spirit, disconnected from Jesus, which he believes comes nearest to the central deific principle in the universe. He believes that the greatest evils known to men come from an abusiv indulgence of the sexual organs and the stomach, from which arise the spirit of war, cruelty, and bloodshed. Those who would lead pure lives must abstain from those indulgences. He has led a virgin life for half a century, and for thirty-four years has eaten neither animal flesh, butter, nor cheese. He is strong in the opinion that if men will learn to liv properly, and to beget their offspring under suitable conditions, the world will become far happier than it now is, and will be far less governed by the baser animal passions. Elder Evans, like his brother, George H. Evans, is a thorough land reformer, believing that every man has an inalienable right to the soil, as really as to the air and water. His ultra views on diet are not held by all the members of the society, though they all liv temperately and hygienically, making no use of the flesh of swine. They hav not a hog in any of their communities.

With all their temperance and abstemiousness, sickness and death sometimes visit them, but they hav the best arranged hospitals, and the best of nurses to take care of the sick. Their system of practice is the most improved eclecticism, with a moderate use of medicines. From their even, temperate lives they undoubtedly attain to more than the average age of mankind. They pay considerable attention to agriculture and horticulture. Their seed gardens are extensiv and well conducted. The superior quality of Shaker garden seeds has been noted for seventy-five years, as well as the various articles they manufacture. They hav for many years conducted an extensiv business in preparing medicinal extracts and other preparations. They are now extensivly engaged in putting up medicines for Dr. White of this city, large quantities of which are sent to Europe and Australia.

Our day's visit there was pleasant, and we returned home with our convictions confirmed that if there is an industrious, temperate, frugal, virtuous, and happy people in the world, they are the Shakers. Whether they are leading just the lives that all men should lead is questionable, but in the ages of the past and in various old-time religions the virgin and community life has been conscientiously practiced. This was particularly the case with the Essenes of Egypt, and certain sects in India. There are indeed but few religious ideas that are new in the world.

Letter from S. F. De Jones.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You will confer a favor on me if you will allow me a space in your paper for a correction of my letter of July 10th concerning Prof. B. F. Underwood and our case.

Mr. Underwood, in a letter to me since, explained the matter in a different light to what I conceived it to be. Mr. Underwood says that he left instructions here with a gentleman to keep him posted on our suits. That gentleman left Pittsburgh about a year ago for parts unknown, therefore he could not hav posted Mr. Underwood.

I had written a letter to Mr. Underwood some time ago, which he says he did not receive; so unknowingly I can see that I hav done the gentleman injustice, and now wish to withdraw any reflection cast upon that gentleman in my letter. Respectfully, S. F. DE JONES,

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 18, 1880.

The Political Caldron.

If the remarks we hav hitherto made on the political aspects and duties of the present year hav had no other effect, they hav tended to demonstrate the fact that Liberals are just as much divided on the political issues of the day, and hav just as strong prejudices in politics, as any class of people in the country. There is, doubtless, little hope that there will be a unanimity of feeling among them as to which is the proper candidate to vote for, and what is the correct position for Liberals to occupy. We hav received numerous letters in response to the observations we ventured to make, and it is amusing to see how they differ from one another. We cannot giv all of these letters in this issue. Some unite with us and think Hancock is the man to vote for, under the present emergencies, in order to defeat the corrupt party now in power, and which has trampled on some of the dearest rights of the people. Others seem more wedded to the Republican party than even to Liberalism, and deem it almost a sacrilege for any one to say a word against it. They seem to think it holds a patent on all that is patriotic, good, and true in politics, and that any one who dares breathe to the opposit of this deserves ostracism of the severest type. The third-party men, probably as numerous among Liberals as either of the others, condemn both the old parties in unstinted terms, and insist that we must all vote for Weaver, though he is well known to be the most out-and-out "blue-light," bigoted churchman among the four candidates running for the White House.

We, of course, dislike to find ourselvs in a position antagonistic to men whom we know to be good and true Liberals; but as we are willing to accord to them the right to do as they decide to be the most right and proper, we trust they will be equally generous to us. Some advise us not to be rash and hasty. We think we hav been quite deliberate, and hav taken about as much time to think over the result of Republican legislation and the conduct of Republican courts as almost any man in the country. In the eleven months we were locked up within prison walls, when we knew we were alike the victim of the church and the Republican party, we had ample time to think the matter carefully over and to decide upon the proper course for us to pursue. We think it hardly necessary for any one to accuse us of being hasty or rash. A year's steady oppression affords sufficient time for one to calmly survey the field and to decide how to act. Despite all that may be said to the contrary, we are firmly convinced that it was Republican legislation, in answer to the demands of the church, that caused our arrest and secured our conviction and imprisonment, and we would be glad if no one would ask us to cooperate with the oppressors who strove to deprive us of liberty, property, and life. As we said before, it was a Republican senator who introduced the Comstock bill, it was passed by Republican Congressmen, signed by a Republican President, executed by the Republican courts, penalties enforced by Republican judges, and now the papers giv us the intelligence that Stewart L. Woodford, the Republican United States District-Attorney who caused our arraignment and signed our indictment, who acted as the tool of the church, of Comstock and Colgate's Vice Society, has already, under pay of the general government, gone out to stump for Garfield. William P. Fiero, Assistant United States District-Attorney, who prosecuted us and held up our "Open Letter to Jesus Christ" and THE TRUTH SEEKER before a Christian jury, and thus secured our conviction, also under pay of the United States government, is soon to start out to keep the Republican party in power. It is also announced that Rutherford B. Hayes is going to California to stump for Garfield. It is not stated that Comstock, Judge Benedict, and Colgate hav yet been assigned any position on the stump, but of course they will do all they can to perpetuate the rule of the Republicans.

Since the church and the Republican party hav united, both making Comstock an honored brother, since Republicanism has allied itself with Comstockism, and really is Comstockism, we are placed equally antagonistic to each. To us Rutherford B. Hayes is the same person, whether unjustly holding us in prison at the command of the church and Comstock—and after he had declared that we did not deserve imprisonment—or when he is stumping for the election of Garfield; the same when he treated with deafness and disdain the righteous appeal of 200,000 loyal people, as now, when he and his menials are using every effort, fair and unfair, to secure the continued life of his party. So long as Hayes, Benedict, Comstock, Woodford, and Fiero are for Garfield, we are opposed to him. If they are Republicans we are not. We shall place ourselvs in opposition to them in political matters, believing we shall thereby be in the right. Those who wish to train with them and embrace them in brotherhood, and vote with them, hav a perfect right to do so; but we are impressed with the conviction that there are a very small number of our Liberal friends who, had they had our experience, would continue to embrace and caress their churchly and Republican persecutors and oppressors. Comstock has, on several occasions, avowed himself the enemy of Infidels and of Infidel publications, and it was a part of his plan to destroy Infidel publishers. Comstock has derived his power equally from the church and the Republican party; they hav united and enabled him to do what he has done, and by their co-operation he hopes to accomplish much more of his peculiar work. We repeat, we are equally opposed to each. But all do not feel as we do. Those who care more for politics than for Liberalism will doubtless continue to vote with Hayes, Benedict, Comstock, Crosby, Woodford, Fiero, Garfield & Co. They may thereby exhibit their consistency and loyalty to liberty; but we cannot believe it. We can see no virtue in continuing to co-operate with those who are plotting and working to deprive us of that which is more dear to us than life itself. If a man or a people should ever show spirit and indignation, it is when a designing and malicious enemy is striving to destroy him. How those who profess to be Liberals can work and vote with the party and combination that is doing all in its power to oppose, crush, and destroy them is more than we can understand. That the church is trying to do this, and that the Republican party has coalesced with the church in its efforts, is too patent to require demonstration. But none are so blind as those who will not see; none so stupid as those will not be convinced.

It may suit some who count themselvs staunch Liberals to co-operate with this Republico-Churchico party this year and elect Garfield, but we are quite sure it will not suit us. We are uncertain whether we hav a vote. We were sentenced to prison for thirteen months for depositing in the mail one of Mr. Heywood's harmless pamphlets, and that may hav deprived us of the right of franchise. If it is so, it is the Republican party that has so robbed us, after voting with it for twenty-four years. We shall hardly kiss the hand that has thus crushed us, and ask the smiter to please do so again. We shall vote against those who hav done us this great injury, provided we hav a vote; and if we hav not a vote, we will say what we can to induce others to vote as we would be glad to. If some of our good Liberal friends condemn us for this and see fit to throw us overboard, they will, of course, act upon their best convictions, as we act upon ours.

It is not wholly because we hav received personal wrongs ourselvs that we feel as we do, but we hav seen them inflicted upon others—good men, too, who deserved nothing of the kind. We hav seen the same kind of injuries done to E. H. Heywood, John A. Lant, Dr. E. B. Foote, and many others, and we decidedly think the party who has been guilty of this vile conduct should be allowed to take a back seat for at least four years.

It is not that we hav any special love or admiration for the Democratic party that we feel like co-operating with them in defeating the Republicans, but it is because the administration of this government for the next four years will be with the Republicans or Democrats. Garfield or Hancock will be President. Weaver and Dow are scarcely in the race. We are resolved to help the man who has the best chance to defeat the party who has wronged the cause of liberty the most. The most vital question is not whether the third party should not ultimately triumph and will not in a few more presidential terms, but it is, Which is the man, and which is the party that can destroy our deadliest foes now?

That is the party we must join with, the same as a frontiersman would be justified should he find a pack of wolves attacking his cabin and his wife and children, in accepting the aid of a bear or an enemy's dog to help drive them back. Between two evils it is always admissible to choose the least. The question is not what good work the Republican party performed twenty years ago, nor what good deeds the Greenback-Labor party may perform twenty years hence, but the vital question is one of the present, here and now. The enemy has his clutch upon the throat of our dearest friends and brothers, and where is one who can help us to destroy him? This is just the position of things, and we should not shut our eyes to the fact. Let us not cry, Peace, peace, when there is no peace.

The great truth that the church and the Republican party hav for years been hand in hand, "cheek by jowl," cannot be successfully denied. This party has shown the disposition to giv the church all she asks. The clergy and the dignitaries of the church are nearly all Republicans, to a man. The church furnishes the motive power which actuates the Republican party. The Methodist church has run this country for twelve years. If Garfield is elected he will probably be succeeded by Grant, in which case we can count on twelve years more of Campbellite and Methodist rule, to end possibly, as Mr. Ruggles says, in imperialism.

Some appear to be greatly troubled with fear of the Catholics, and because the most of them vote with the Democrats. But there is little immediate danger in that direction. The Catholics are not half so numerous as the Protestants, and they hav not been half so insinuating and aggressiv. Between two evils let us always choose the least. Let us unite with the lesser to destroy the greater. It does not follow because we help the Democrats this year to defeat the Republicans that we must become a permanent ally to the Democratic party. Let us rather, as Mr. Leland suggests, hold ourselvs free to put in our votes where they will do the most good. At the next general election it may be advisable to vote with the Democrats, and it may not. Let us demand our rights, and if they are denied us let us be prompt to oppose those who thus rob us. If a party spits upon us, throws us to the earth, and places its heel upon our neck, let us hav the spirit to exercise independence and bravery enough to do our best to overthrow it. It is possible after a punishment of four or eight years the Republicans may become sensible of the wrongs they hav done us, and it may be proper for us to unite with them to crush another foe. Let us take the right step this year and hold ourselvs in readiness to do the right thing in years to come. Present duty is the thing to be attended to now; let other duties be attended to as they arise.

We of course do not consider that we hav the right to dictate to others how they shall cast their suffrages. We simply claim the right to express our sentiments, as we accord the same to others. Those who think that the Republicans possess all the virtues, that they are immaculate, that they hav never taken a dollar of the people's money, that they hav been true to the Constitution and the principles of liberty, that they hav not co-operated with the church, and that the two hav not oppressed Liberalism nor infringed upon the rights of unbelievers and Infidels, will of course continue to vote the Republican ticket.

This is probably about the last we shall hav to say upon the subject of voting for Garfield, Hancock, or Weaver. By the time these lines reach the majority of our readers we will likely be on the bosom of the Atlantic ocean, on our mission to the International Congress of Freethinkers to be held at Brussels, Aug. 29th, 30th, and 31st, to be absent about two months. By the time we return the campaign will be pretty well over, and it may not be necessary for us to hav much more to say upon the subject of politics. When the National Liberal League holds its annual meeting in the coming autumn, the question touched upon here will doubtless be thoroughly canvassed and some line marked out, and some course recommended for the Liberals of the country to pursue. We apprehend the major part will be somewhat governed by such recommendations, for it is assuredly desirable that Liberals, so far as possible, should be of one mind in their political action, and work in unison and harmony. At all events let us cherish a fraternal spirit, and if we cannot see alike in matters political, let us differ without enmity, and always, whatever may betide us, be united in our fealty to truth, reason, and mental liberty.

Good Words from a Great Biographer.

MY DEAR MR. BENNETT: I hav received your second volume, and contemplated you many times in your prison garb, as you appear in the frontispiece. The dress becomes you. It brings out your bland and benevolent traits, and givs you a kind of grand-pontiff expression.

As for the volume itself, it strikes me dumb with wonder. How you could hav executed such a task, in such unpropitious circumstances, in the space of eleven months, passes my understanding. I should hav wanted twenty-five years for it, and then should not hav been half as interesting as you hav made it. Your work is one long exhibition of the weakness and cowardice of man, and shows how in every age and in all climes, he has been cheated and plundered through his fears. What fools we hav been and what fools we are! Your example, I hope, will make many men not afraid to touch the idol and help level it with the dust. But when the idol is overthrown, the great problem of human happiness will remain. Never forget that.

Very truly yours,
JAMES PARTON.

Newburyport, Mass., July 23, 1880.

Ho for Brussels!

When these lines are penned it is expected we will take the steamer for Europe on Saturday, the 31st inst. The only thing that will prevent our doing so will be that Mr. Rawson may not be quite ready, in which case the starting may be deferred till Wednesday, August 4th. We expect to be absent not less than two months. Mrs. Bennett will preside in the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER, the same as when we were in prison, and our faithful assistant, Eugene Macdonald, will be editor during our absence. We hope the friends of the paper will not suffer it to languish while we are away. This is the dull season of the year; money comes in slowly, though expenses are as heavy as at any time. We trust those whose time has expired, or is near expiring, will kindly renew, and that those who wish books will order as freely as their pocketbooks will allow, thus helping the needful work along. Every reader can tell when his time expires by noticing the date on the tab attached to the wrapper of his paper.

We shall undoubtedly, from time to time, advise our readers of our whereabouts, and at what we are engaged during our absence. If any of our friends wish to write to us while away, please address us care of Freethought Publishing Company, 28 Stonecutter st., E. C., London, England. We will be glad to get letters while abroad from friends at home.

The donations received since our last, to help defray expenses to Europe, are as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| C. B. Tuttle, | $1.00 | L. DeWitt Griswold | 1.00 |
| Adrian Liberal League, | 2.00 | Geo. H. Look, | 1.00 |
| Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Armigh, | 2 00 | Harry B. Shears, | 5.00 |
| Caroline S. Ellis, | 5 00 | Jas. H. Lydiard, | .50 |
| Jas. G Watson, | 1 00 | V. J. Borrette, | 1.00 |
| J. M. Rounds, | 2.00 | J. F Ruggles, | 1 00 |
| Chas. F. Blandin, | 1 00 | J. Sedgebeer, | 1.00 |
| S. Gilbert, | 1 00 | E. Worman, | 1 00 |
| J. M. Weed, | 5 00 | John Maxfield, | 1 00 |
| Ava, Ill., League, | 3 00 | James Body. | 1.00 |

We extend our sincere thanks to these kind friends who hav thus contributed to help take us over the water and home again. We are sorry to be under the necessity of asking any one for aid, but such is the situation with us. About half enough has been contributed to defray the expenses of one delegate, so it will readily be seen that it will go but a small way in paying the expenses of two. If there are those who still feel like making donations to meet expenses, they will please direct to this office as heretofore. May we all liv to meet again, and under more favorable auspices.

An Important Correction.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The quotation in the second column of the first page of your last issue, concerning the "Bible-believer in Norwich," is from Jeremiah, and not Isaiah, as the printer rendered it. The mistake is to be regretted, as our Christian friends, not finding the godly injunction in Isaiah, may pronounce it bogus scripture and deny its divine authenticity. B. B.

The Phelps-Pool Debate.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Kansas stands quite at the front in Freethought sentiment, and Osage Mission is the battle-field of the state. Hence the Phelps-Pool debate just closed deserves fitting notice in your columns. I shall not attempt a synopsis of the argument but giv the facts so far as would interest the Liberal public.

In February, Prof. A. O. Phelps gave us a week's course of lectures. In connection with the advertising for those lectures a challenge was published to all clerical Christendom to meet him in debate upon a question involving the validity of the Bible and Christianity, and the challenge was kept before the public from week to week. The debate above referred to was the result. Rev. C. W. Pool is of the Christian denomination, of Burlington, Kan., is a good talker, well posted, good ability, and fair education.

Commencing Thursday, May 20th, Prof. Phelps affirmed for three nights, "Christianity is entirely of human origin."

Commencing Monday night, Rev. Pool affirmed, "Christianity is of divine origin."

The debate was held in the Methodist church. The audience averaged about 600 people, they came from a distance of five to fifteen miles. Four or five clergymen were in attendance. Many Christians who were never known to attend Infidel lectures listened to Phelps' hard dealt blows at their vulnerable citadel. It was because they dared not that many of them did not try their strength upon him. Liar, blasphemous wretch, villain, are among the epithets applied to him. This is the proof of the value of the debate to us and our cause.

It is but just to say, the anger, malice, epithets, and Christian deportment came mostly from the Methodists. Mr. Pool was a gentleman, and his ministerial brethren, with one exception, were gentlemen, and, with rare exceptions the membership of that church bore themselves well. If I were compelled to join a church the Christian would be the one, for the reason, I would not need to swop hearts, and would hav no use for Holy Ghost influences, and my ministers would always be ready to debate with an Infidel.

Mr. Phelps has arranged with Mr. Pool for another debate at Burlington, to take place soon. Also another debate here for next fall.

Mr. Phelps has done much to organize Freethought in Kansas and giv us the proud pre-eminence we hold among the states. A thousand such men would neutralize the influence of the sixty thousand priests and clergy of the country. And, brother Liberals, the reason we hav not the thousand laboring in the field is because we do not properly support those now at work.

The all-important question that should engage the next Liberal Congress and the several state conventions this fall is to devise a system by which money can be raised to support lecturers in the field. It costs annually to maintain the religions of the United States nearly as much as her general government expenses, while a single million spent in Freethought effort annually would humanize these religions, and remove all danger of the overthrow of our liberties by priestly ambition and their dupes. Money has popularized Christianity. A comparativly small amount will popularize Freethought.

Millions of men and women throughout the land tacitly assent to Christian theology only because it is popularized. The Christian religion is an institution for the manufacture of hypocrits.

It is time Freethinking people were investing a little money in the interest of honesty. Since writing the above I learn Phelps has held a debate with Elder Shick at Sedan, of five days' duration. A note from a friend there says Shick was snowed under. I hav also just received and forwarded to Phelps a challenge from another Christian clergyman, to debate with him, nine miles southeast of this point. Am glad to find them bold enough to begin to offer the challenge. We hav been making aggressiv warfare upon them. Perhaps they dislike to be so much on the defensiv. We in southern Kansas propose they shall find enough to do in the latter position. Liberals everywhere, make an aggressiv warfare. Fraud and lies may be assailed fearlessly in this age and under a Constitution stamped all over with the impress of the genius of Thomas Paine.

H. L. R. Jones.

President Porter Still Harping about "The Ancient Faith."

"And yet we must acknowledge that to the superficially educated and hasty thinker the theory (of modern philosophy) brings many attractions, because it answers so many questions by a single formula and gathers and disposes of so many phenomena under a plausible generalization, and above all, because it releases the conscience and life from present obligations.

"Against these tendencies would I warn you most earnestly, by the consideration that so fast and so far as God is unknown by any man, so fast and so far does hope depart from his soul—hope for all that a man should care to liv for, hope for scientific progress, for his own moral welfare, for the progress of the race, for a successful life."

The address from which the above is taken has been pretty extensivly published, showing that the public mind looks upon it as a strong production. But how many occupying his position could say that those who accept modern philosophy and reject the "ancient faith" are lost to all interest in "scientific progress," is not very clear, except upon the general principle that bigotry blinds men to the truth. How could a man who pretends to know something of modern philosophy—a man who has read to some extent the writings of Herbert Spencer—say, with the life and writings of Spencer before him, that so far as God is unmoral sentiment! How can such utterances still emanate from our seats of learning? What must be the bigotry in the minds of the hearers who can sit and listen to the statement that those who accept modern philosophy do so because it abandons conscience, i. e., "releases the conscience and life from present obligations!" President Porter still dreams of the virtue of "the ancient faith," which has stood in the way of progress, as his own attitude toward science and philosophy givs apt illustration. He antagonizes modern philosophy, which is equivalent to the repudiation of science. With him faith is better than knowledge. He is still harping about the "ancient faith." Freethinkers hav a work yet to accomplish as long as college presidents turn their backs upon science and then deny its existence.

W. S. Bell.

Hints to Liberal Leagues.—Sing, Brothers, Sing!

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Although I trust the Liberal Clubs in this city will take an interest in the "Liberal Hymn Book," I can scarcely hope that this work will be appreciated here so much as in distant places. In New York, and perhaps in some other large cities, there are so many excellent speakers on scientific and Liberal topics—more even than the people hav time to listen to—that singing at Liberal meetings would doubtless be voted a bore and a waste of precious time. But it is far different at places where, although Liberal opinions hav penetrated and awakened up men's thoughts, they hav not yet loosed their tongues. In many localities people of advanced ideas meet together, feeling that they are under the ban of society, or that they would be if it were generally known that they attended Liberal Leagues. They are shy, half afraid of each other, doubtful how far they may speak their thoughts, and untrained in expressing these thoughts. They hav organized into a League by putting their names to a paper and paying their fifty cents or a dollar; but when they meet there is no plan of action, no program of exercises, and—except when a stray lecturer comes along—there is no real interest attaching to the meetings. Yet these friends of Freethought are in earnest, hungry for information and action, anxious to help on the cause of Liberalism, and only needing to know what to do. They want to hav their enthusiasm kept alive by some means, and since a large majority of League-members, especially in country places, hav all their lives been accustomed to singing hymns in Christian churches, it may be expected that singing Liberal songs to the old church tunes will help to keep alive their enthusiasm and to attract other persons who hav already become indifferent to the Christian doctrins to join the Leagues.

During a journey through the South and West last fall I visited some Liberal League meetings and I then promised a few friends than on my return to New York I would prepare a small volume of songs adapted to popular tunes for their use. That promis is now fulfilled in the publication of the "Liberal Hymn Book," which has received the hearty praises of Hon. Elizur Wright, James Parton, Judge Mills, A. L. Rawson, H. L. Green, T. B. Wakeman, and many other friends of Freethought.

Now let Liberals who hav organized into societies for their own comfort and edification and for the extension of their ideas take lessons in methods of propagandism from the Christian associations they hav left. Songs and singing hav been found at all times potent instruments wherewith to stimulate the zeal of believers and arrest the attention of the indifferent. Hymns and tunes constitute no inconsiderable part of the machinery of the gospel net. Of late, preaching has largely given place to vocal music. Not Moody's preaching so much as Sankey's singing gathered the multitudes. Let Liberal thinkers attract people to listen to their stirring appeals for reason and right by means of the familiar tunes which all can sing and which fall sweetly on every ear.

Until Liberals organize more thoroughly progress will be very slow. What is now wanted is a program of exercises for Leagues to use at each weekly meeting. This should be published regularly in Liberal papers, just as the religious papers regularly publish every week the program of lessons which are used concertedly by each orthodox Sunday-school in the land. The Sunday-school Union embraces the Sunday-schools of all evangelical churches—that is, all churches which hold to the doctrines of the trinity, the atonement, and eternal punishment. The Sunday-schools connected with these churches use a course of Bible lessons which extend through the year; so that, go into any Sunday-school you please, you will find the same Bible lesson being considered—recited by the children and explained and commented on by the teachers.

Liberals need some such plan for exercises in their Leagues. It might be well for a committee to be appointed at the next annual convention to devise some plan whereby every League would be provided with interesting exercises at each meeting. One plan that has occurred to me is that of publishing each week, in the Liberal papers, a short, half-column essay on some particular scientific or Liberal topic—some selection from the works of Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer, Darwin, Besant, or a score of other good writers. This selection should be assigned for reading in each League on the next meeting following a certain date, the reading to be followed by illustration, debate, etc., by the members; or a volume of such short essays might be published, and a special Sunday, or other day in the same week, assigned for the consideration of each essay. This volume might be called the Liberal Bible. With a copy of it and of the large "Truth Seeker Collection," which contains forms for conducting marriages, burial services, and other special occasions, and from two to ten dozen copies of the "Liberal Hymn Book," each League would be able to carry on every week such enjoyable and profitable meetings as would bring in outsiders, attract the ladies of the community, and make the Leagues socially respectable. Eliza B. Burns.

[We think the above excellent suggestions of Mrs. Burns should induce every Liberal to send for a 15 or 25 cent copy of the Liberal hymn-book, and every League to send for the "Truth Seeker Collection."—Ed. Truth Seeker.]

Politics and Finance.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In The Truth Seeker of July 3d you and Mr. Wakeman hav spoken words of wisdom on the political situation. You hav spoken at the right time, and may we not hope that the readers of your paper will giv heed and act and vote accordingly. In voting the Democratic ticket we may not gain all we may wish, but will gain much, as they are far more liberal on all of the important issues of the day. They are not under the control of the money and church powers.

The bloody shirt will disappear. We shall hav no more federal troops and deputy marshals to control elections. The military will be subordinate to the civil power. The Republican party is fully committed to the old Federalist doctrin of eighty years ago, while the Democrats stand on the Jeffersonian doctrin of reserved states' rights, and they are more liberal on the money question.

As the Morrison-Truesdell discussion on finance is ended it has become public property, and I suppose criticisms and comments are in order on either side.

Mr. Truesdell boastfully claims a victory, and that Mr. Morrison has made a total failure. As to that, people will differ. If I may be allowed to giv an opinion without being asked, I should say that if Mr. Truesdell is satisfied, Mr. Morrison ought to be. Mr. Truesdell may hav done as well as anybody could on the wrong side of the question, and Mr. Morrison may not hav done as well as some others might on the right side, yet I think he has no occasion to feel very bad.

Truesdell's last article is a remarkable one. He evidently expected no reply or he would hav been more guarded. The whole article is a bundle of sophistries. But I will now notice but one or two under the head of "fiat money." It seems to me that there has been fooling enough about fiat money.

Who ever saw or heard of any money except fiat money? Surely gold, silver, or paper is not money until it is made so by the fiat, decree, or the stamp of the government. But when either receives the fiat, decree, or stamp of the government, then it is money; and if made legal tender by law, all are of equal value as far as money—a circulating medium—is concerned.

There is a wide difference in the intrinsic or market value but none in the money value, for neither has any money value until placed there by government.

He says: "With your scheme in force, we should be compelled to cancel existing contracts and to discharge present debts in fiat money, but no power on earth could force the people to make new contracts upon such a basis. All economists agree that money, to be stable, must possess a purchasing power as well as a paying one." If any economist has made such a statement he must hav made it knowing it to be false.

Any kind of money made legal tender, either gold or silver or paper, has power to compel the canceling of contracts when they become due, and has done so for nearly twenty years, and will do so probably for all time to come. But no government on earth ever did or will hav power to compel the people to make contracts for any kind of money, either gold or silver or paper.

In a certain sense, any kind of money has a purchasing power, that is, as an inducement, but not a power to compel. I sell a horse and take Mr. Truesdell's note for one hundred dollars. When the note becomes due he can tender me the money, either gold or silver or greenbacks, and compel me to take the money and surrender the note, and this is all right. But in the purchasing of the horse, Mr. Truesdell may lay a thousand dollars in coined gold on my table, and say to me, "I want your horse, and there is your money." No power on earth can compel me to accept his money for my horse. So we see that money has no purchasing power to compel the making of contracts, but has the power to compel the canceling of debts.

E. B. Rounds.

Saginaw City Liberal League.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Will you please rectify the mistake in your paper in regard to the names of the present officers of Saginaw City Liberal League, No. 84, which are as follow: A. C. Ganschaw, President; Mrs. H. F. Allen, Secretary? If you do this it will save some trouble in regard to our correspondence.

Saginaw City, June 28, 1880. Mrs. H. F. Allen, Cor. Sec.

Mr. Bell at Harlan, Iowa.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mr. W. S. Bell delivered two lectures at this place on the evenings of June 15th and 16th. On the first evening Professor Bell examined the doctrin of hell, on the second evening he answered the question, What has Freethought to offer in the place of Christianity? The Professor handled his subjects eloquently. He was listened to by an attentiv audience, which was both large and intelligent. Bro. Bell is an eloquent speaker; his points are clear and distinct, and he does not fail to make a lasting impression on his audience.

Mr. Bell's terms for lectures are easy, and within the reach of all Liberal societies. Liberals, let us see that such men as brother Bell are kept constantly in the field. We intend to engage Mr. Bell again, if possible, to deliver an-known to any man, so far must that man be dead to every other course of lectures here some time in the near future.

Yours respectfully, C. W. POTTER.

Harlan, Iowa, June 18, 1880.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 5.

INSCRIBED TO J. H. DODD.

FRIEND DODD: I am glad thee can see that the church "did an act of bigotry and cruelty in imprisoning D. M. Bennett," and I agree with thee that "really obscene literature ought to be prohibited from the mails;" but as it is a thing that cannot be done without robbing the people of a great and important right—the right of sending private and unopened messages on business, politics, love, or any other sacred or secret topic—why, the lesser evil must be relegated to some other form of elimination to save the danger of incurring a greater. It is also true that "bad literature must be met by good." But I do not think "Cupid's Yokes" a bad book. I believe nine-tenths of all the intelligent and unprejudiced people in the land would consider it a valuable treatis upon physiology and the sexual relations of civilized and enlightened nations. Even if the book errs in a few of its conclusions, it is doing great good in arousing thought and controversy upon the most important subject that can by any possibility interest us as members of the human family. We see the world sick unto death, morally and physically, from sexual intemperance. We see thousands tied to "companions" whom they loathe, despise, and hate. We see children growing up in an atmosphere of constant hate, rage, and rebellion—no love, no harmony, no peace, but all pulling different ways, and yet bound together by law.

And in homes where love is an abiding guest, lust is also far too often its twin sister. Ignorance and passion, and a long and close familiarity with these two attendants of the marriage relation, hav so familiarized the majority of us with their presence and apparent relationship and similarity that it has been found hard to always discern the one from the other.

The "sanctity," false prudery, and selfish intolerance of the ages hav always declared such books as treat of the physiology, nature, and legitimate use of the generativ organs in human beings to be obscene, vulgar, and immodest. "Doctor books" are considered in the same light, and to be seen with one in your hands is in too many places thought a great breach of natural delicacy and common decency. You may study about the genealogy and culture and parental generation of the horse, cow, dog, and even hog; of plants, trees, and flowers, and it is all right; but touch upon race-culture, and it is all wrong.

They forget that the "child is father to the man," and what the world is to be in the next generation depends upon the right generation and training of the children of this.

Such books as "Cupid's Yokes," and the story of "Libra Dawn," and papers like the Alpha and Physiologist, though meeting opposition and bigotry from the cultured critic who prefers hidden wrong to exposed and cleaned-out cesspools, will liv and sow good seed that shall produce valuable future crops of goodness, purity, health, and happiness.

> "Alas! the blows for error meant
> Too oft on truth itself are spent;
> As through the false and vile and base
> Looks out her sad, rebuking face." —Whittier.

Snowville, Va. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Michael O'Shaughnessy's Fourth of July.

Hoora, Mishter Editur of TROOTH SEEKER, but we jist had a bos toime on the foorth of Jooly out here (the foorth cum on the fifth this yere, u no). We had our selebration at our church, the St. Pheelip's Chapel, in Crawford county, on the hill ferninst Mike Gorman's whate field. Our hooly fayther, Dig Oya, a deestant relashun to Begorra (u no him), jist sent two teems to Muscoda fur two hole wagin lodes of beer and jist a fifteen-gallon kig of the craythur to trate his spayshal frinds on, and ye no Mikel O'Shannessy (that's mesel) was not at all modisht in makin' him belave that I was wun of his spayshal frinds (bles his sowl), and before the da was gon we got rayl confidenshal, u jist bet.

As soon as dalite cum on the mornin' of the foorth, the peple cum in from all direcshuns to see the big sites, and to here the big guns go off, and to see those kigs of beer tapt. And what d'ye think wuz the nooze we heerd the first thing when we arrived? Why, wun of our choorch-mimbers had jist gone and dide and must be buried before we cud kommence to injoy ourselvs in airnist. But u see sum dirty dog of a spalpeen had jist got hold on that kig of the craythur, and they were jist puttin' a shtick in the beer, which they were sellin' at only tin cints a glass (all fur the good of the choorch, ye no), and before we noed it, sum of us wuz purty well korned, and before we got dun berryin' the corpus, Pat Flynn, he jist kicked up a fuss wid our marshal (who is always sober when there is nothin' stronger than wather in reach), and they jist shtript therselvs an' wint at it, an' thin the glory kommenced at wunst. But yu'd jist otter see that praste of ours wade into that fite with the holy vistments on. He jist nockt fourteen men down at wun blo, an' niver touched them at all at all (that's a mirakel, u no), an' he tuk the feller who kommenced the fuss by the top of his hed and the sit-down of his britches an' jist led him to the gate, an' afther takin' his boot awa from his sit-down two or three times, he let him go, and tuk our marshal by the koller of his cote, kinder frindly loike, to take him up to that little back-rume in the choorch called the konfesshunel to trate him to sum of that kig, when the marshal, jist thinkin', I suppose, it wuz sumbody els an' not the praste at all, jist let dhrive wid his fisht and hit the praste square in the face and niver made a mark (another mirakel); but that marshal's arrum jist wilted down loike a broken kornshtalk on a hot da in Jooly (another mirakel). But the praste jist tuk his hand an' sed to it, "Be hole!" an' it wuz hole (another mirakel).

An' thin we jist wint up to the skule house, which wuz bilt fur the sisters' skule an' wuz jist dun; and, wud u believe it, Mr. Bennett, if thare wuzn't two more prastes dedicatin' the skule house wid a dance. Wun of thim had a fiddel an' he turned it over on its back an' scraped its belly with the bo, an' holy muther what moosic! And thin kommenced the dancin' an' the drinkin' an' the foolin', an' ivery wunst in awhile the praste Dig Oya wud take sum of his frinds to the konfesshunal to hear thare konfesshun, an' tha wud kum out lookin' very mutch plazed an' smackin' thare lips as tho tha had bin kissin' his big to by wa of penance (but I guess tha wasn't, fur I was thare mesel, an' I am pritty shure it was sumthin' else).

I remimber wunst whin I was in the konfesshunal alone wid the praste I made boold to ax him in konfidence how he performed those mirakels, an' he sez, sez he, "Sure an' what bizness hav u wid sich things? But seein' as ye are a spayshal frind of mine, I will tell ye pervided ye will not tell it to the members." I promised, an' he sez, sez he: "It was all bosh. The danged fools don't no goose eggs from turtle-dove's. An' if I should jist tell them thare mother was a naygur tha wud think it was so." An' I think he was about rite, don't u?

About this time the table was spread fur the feast, an' as mesel an' Biddy (that's me wife, Mistress O'Shaughnessy) hed brot sum good things to put on the table, I thot there wud be no objecshuns to us eatin' them, but the Kommittee had arranged otherwise, an' I found I must pa a qwarter fur each of us. It didn't go down jist rite, so I axed the praste, an' he sed that tha didn't charge fur the dinner. It was jist a prisint to the praste, which made it all rite, an' I presiated him wid two qwarters, an' was allowed to eat my dinner. But I'm sure it's no mirakel to me anymore whare the choorch gits so much money.

And now, Mishter Bennett, if yer don't want to be shtruck wid a mirakel, u must jist print this in sum langwidge that the mimbers will not understand. Perhaps English will do jist as well as any. Trooly yours,

MICHAEL O'SHAUGHNESSY.

Giv us a Leader.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The idea of a leader may not be agreeable to the true Liberal who is opposed to any authority and wants to do his own thinking, but soldiers need a general, and if the hundreds of thousands of scattered reformers wish to achieve anything, they must hav some headquarters; some executiv power; a banner around which they may gather when called upon to do their duty.

Greenbackers, Liberals, and Socialists differ on a great many points. On many leading questions, however, they undoubtedly agree, and there is no reason why they should not unite. The Socialists, in fact, although they are very radical in their principles and very anxious to avoid contamination, hav tried their best toward the formation of a new political party which should be Liberal enough to comprise the three named elements in one broad fold. They attended both the Liberal and the Greenback-Labor Conventions, argued their point, and succeeded in having several of their principal issues accepted, but the Greenbackers fabricated a platform that does not giv satisfaction anywhere, and the Liberals hav disappeared entirely.

We need a man now who will not talk as nicely as Mr. Ingersoll, and do more; who will not waste his time in ridiculing the childish traditions of a half barbaric people and in "exposing" falsehoods that no reasonable being believes in. We need a man who will not deliver poetical prose in order to move the hands of his audience, but who will stir their brains and excite them to action.

One thing is sure and indisputable: so long as the great masses hav to toil for miserable wages, living in filthy tenement houses and subjected to the arbitrariness of heartless employers; so long as the laborer is only a commodity, the price of which is regulated by demand and supply; so long as the dignity of man is not fully established, just so long will superstition rule, and no amount of rhetoric will abolish it.

Liberals, therefore, are bound to support every movement the tendency of which is the amelioration of the laborer's condition; and if such a movement does not exist yet, they ought to inaugurate it.

Is there any want of good material for the foundation of a new party? Are there not millions of the best men and women who feel the necessity of a radical change? All it needs is to enlist the sympathy of the people, and this can be done only by proving that we ourselvs hav sympathy for them.

Giv us a leader, therefore, who will unite Greenbackers, Liberals, Socialists, and all noble men and women. Such a man does exist, no doubt, but he will not be found in the ranks of brilliant lecturers.

"Let us hav a change!" exclaims the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and then he proposes to support the Democrats. As though that would produce a change! As though the Southern aristocrats and Northern demagogs could ever be willing to do anything for the people! We want a change, yes, but not from one party to the other. We want an entirely new party, and we want a leader.

LIBERAL SOCIALIST.

SIX hundred foundlings annually is New York's contribution toward furnishing heaven with angels and country medical colleges with "material."

Right vs. Quality.

"The Journal asks that the discussion of woman suffrage shall be broad and comprehensiv; that instead of seeking unholy alliances with every mob of office-seekers styling themselves a political convention, its advocates shall turn their energies to the upbuilding of an educational movement which will properly prepare both sexes for the object sought."—R.-P. Journal of July 10th.

All Pharisees, from time immemorial, dainty from habitual instinct, delay justice. They claim that "we are the guardians of the common people, and when we are ready to confer certain privileges upon those beneath us, we will so announce our purpose. Quality, not birthright, not principles, is the pivot on which human rights rest and turn." So says, virtually, the Journal, a paper professedly Liberal, and professedly unstained and unstainable, so much so that it has to announce it to giv everybody assurance of the fact. The idea is, women can hav the ballot when the Journal has educated them for it.

A little bit of history is in point, years ago. The editor in question is too juvenile to remember it. Garrison and a few others demanded the unconditional emancipation of the Southern slaves. The proposition was shocking. "They are not qualified for liberty," was the general cry in all the churches and legislatures of the land. "Let us first turn our energies to the upbuilding of an educational movement that will prepare the slaves for the object sought."

The little band of Abolitionists gave no heed to this delectable scheme, but struck direct blows on the Pharisaical poltroons, and battered a hole in the old citadel of slavery, and then it tumbled down with a crash. Emancipated, the blacks by the aid of good friends immediately commenced educating themselvs, and not one of those high functionaries lifted a finger in their support. Now they are citizens, represented in legislation and in all departments of our secular life. So much for liberty and growth, without first putting the serfs through the Journal mill for qualification.

Women of America do not labor under the disadvantages under which the blacks suffered. They are already educated. It is an insult to them to imply that they are not qualified for citizenship. The way to qualify, if anything be lacking, is to throw them upon their resources and responsibilities, and abide the results. They hav been waiting these twenty years, waiting at the doors of legislation, asking admission, and everlastingly the Journal men retort:

"Oh, you are not qualified like us! Let us first turn our energies to the upbuilding of an educational movement which will prepare both sexes for the object sought."

Glenbeulah, Wis., July 12, 1880. J. O. BARRETT.

Iowa Notes.

The Liberal League of Northern Iowa is prospering finely. It is continually adding to its already large membership, and scattering the seeds of truth far and wide.

The Sioux City & Pacific Railroad will carry passengers for one and one-fifth fare. A reduction of rates can be secured upon the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern if enough attendance is guaranteed to warrant the company in cutting down the fare. Friends along the line of that road will do well to communicate with me at once.

The Marshalltown Convention will be a memorable one in the history of Iowa Liberalism. The true men and women of the state are announcing to me their intention of being present and helping to usher in the grander era of humanity. Many who should be awake are in the deadly sleep of lethargy and indifference, but enough are up and doing to work a revolution. The cause does not languish, and every day adds earnest recruits to the army of freedom.

I hav had the good fortune of meeting that gallant veteran in the cause of Freethought and justice, D. R. Burt, of East Dubuque, formerly Dunleith, Ill., and of being royally entertained in his hospitable home. With faculties undimmed and earnestness unabated, crowned with the glory of his seventy-seven well-spent years, brother Burt still labors for humanity. THE TRUTH SEEKER and its martyr editor hav no more enthusiastic, loyal friend than D. R. Burt.

For an earnest, successful worker, commend me to Bro. H. Gilmore, of Farley, Dubuque county. With one such man in every township in the state, five years would witness the complete triumph of Freethought—the utter and eternal separation of church and state. Friend Gilmore and those who hav joined hands with him in the noble cause of mental emancipation hav not been content to remain upon the defensiv. They hav assumed the offensiv, and compelled the church to be silent or speak the truth. Papers and tracts are scattered broadcast, yet with discriminating care. The circulation of the Freethought journals is increased all possible. THE TRUTH SEEKER, Seymour Times, and Liberal lectures are kept for sale at the news stand; the gate-posts and bulletin-boards are covered with "Truth Seeker Leaflets," and the county papers are gradually being forced to open their columns to the free discussion of religious dogmas and questions of state related to religion. I hav learned many lessons in the work of Freethought and secular propagandism from Mr. Gilmore and his very able lieutenants.

At the state convention we must discuss and mature plans for the purely secular education of our children. It is worse than folly to permit them to be indoctrinated with the dogmas of unnaturalism and then spend the best years and energies of our lives in pulling up the noxious weeds thus planted. This is the most important question of all before us. E. C. WALKER.

Norway, Iowa.

Letters from Friends.

PRINCETON, MASS., July 19, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Liberalism and the R publican party are two horses going in opposit directions. How long will Col. Ingersoll continue to try to ride them both?

I am delighted with your editorial in last TRUTH SEEKER. The Republican party is responsible for the existence and enforcement of the infamous Comstock legislation which now imposes on these United States a virulent, irrepressible, and malicious censorship of the press. I hope you will continue to pursue the line of action you hav entered on with such brave and timely vigor. Yours ever,

E. H. HEYWOOD.

---

PORTSMOUTH, O., July 19, 1880.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: What a glorious name! What an amount of meaning in those two little words, "truth seeking." Seek after the truth, and the truth shall make you free. I was myself once a misguided being, who, like many others, had tried to liv a moral, temperate life, and thought it impossible to do so without belonging to some church; and once in the church I deemed it one of the great essentials to Christian steadfastness to study the scriptures, and, thanks to some power outside of myself, I was so guided that the more I sought after evidences of Christianity the more truth forced itself upon me, and verily the truth did make me free.

Not long since I happened to ride in a railway car partially filled with Methodist preachers, deacons, and hypocrits generally, and the whole conversation seemed to be Bob Ingersoll. One of them made the remark that his lecturing and their preaching only showed the difference in darkness and light. It reminded me that I had never heard a preacher before confine himself more to the truth.

We hav a Methodist preacher here who has for the past few weeks made himself quite conspicuous by abusing Infidels and Spiritualists. I understand that he and a few of his flock intend going with an excursion to Niagara Falls this week, and as I am booked for the same trip, and as they know me to be the most uncompromising Infidel in the city, it is my intention to make a note of what is said during the journey.

When I return I will remit a small amount for tracts, etc., with which to enlighten this heathen community. Meanwhile I remain, respectfully, W. A. FAZE.

---

BOSTON, July 18, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your contributors seem very lavish in their advice about whom to vote for in the coming election. They cast the blame on the party—the administration. I dissent. It is the cowardly tool of ecclesiastical dictum aside from political party. Vote for a man (or a woman, if she is to be the power behind the throne) who believes in the Constitution, who is not false to his oath; a man who has honor, who has the courage and manliness to do right; a man who is Infidel to a bloody, persecuting Christianity; a man who will liberate their victims. If one of the candidates is human, hence humane, like Jefferson and Lincoln, Infidel though they were, giv that man your vote. This government was founded by Infidels, and we find it safe only in their hands. We must keep it there. Should the Infidels fall to the level of Christians, and persecute such as differ from them, then they will hav become of one blood, and we must seek another redeemer—some modern Jesus, Luther, or Paine. What we want is a man, not a party or sectarian tool.

Liberals, vote for a man that will keep one spot on God's green earth free, where man can love his brother man and Christian hate shall cease. Yours for the love of right.

JOSEPH L. SPINNER.

---

GLEN HALL, PA.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: I hav been very much exercised in regard to the proper action to be taken by the Liberals in the political movement. I had a hope, however, that they would nominate R. G. Ingersoll for President and some one of similar faith and reliability for Vice-President. There are thousands of Liberals in the United States that want to vote for men that will guarantee to Liberals their rights, as the Liberals are identified with the different political parties, and as they hav no way of learning the Liberal views of the different candidates. We are not qualified or prepared to vote. We may take Liberal papers and advocate all the Liberal views that are necessary to make a good and consistent citizen, and then assist to elect men to office who will reverse every principle we hav been laboring to establish. We hav an example of this in R. B. Hayes. It has been a source of sad regret for me to know that I cast my vote for a man so void of every principle of justice and right.

In your paper of the 17th inst. R. G. Ingersoll thinks Mr. Garfield can be relied on; and you think Gen. Hancock preferable. Opinions from this source hav a tendency to confound and mislead the many who hav little or no opportunity to learn facts in the matter. Now, we Liberals demand the nominees to giv us an individual pledge to extend the rights to Liberals which we may require, and if they will not giv us this assurance of our rights, then let us giv them our positiv pledge that we will not support them. But we must not be left without the privilege of voting. Giv us a man of our own nomination. I had hoped the Greenbackers and Liberals would unite; we would then hav been a power to be feared and felt. Yours truly,

RICHARD J. LAMBORN.

---

PORTLANDVILLE, N. Y., July 19, 1880.

TO THE FRATERNITY OF LIBERALISM, My Dear Friends: Will you hav the kindness to allow me to intrude upon your attention just for a few moments, in vindication of a vital question? I am but little more than a stranger to you, and, comparativly, I am but an infant in the ranks of Liberalism; but I am not a stranger to those great and noble principles which you advocate, nor an infant in the cause of the liberty of men and their emancipation from ecclesiastical power. No, far from it; my whole heart and soul are in the work.

I was deeply grieved to see the clash of feeling expressed by our Liberal friends in THE TRUTH SEEKER of last week, and that, too, over those two old and corrupt parties. My friends, would it not be well for us to stop right here and ask ourselvs what we are doing? Heaven forbid that we should contemplate to hazard our liberties, and the great cause of freedom in which we are so earnestly engaged, in disputing over those two old and corrupt carcasses. Our liberties are at stake. Let us act wisely and harmoniously, or we shall lose them. The great beast, with her ecclesiastical eye, is watching this move with the deepest interest. I say, my friends, let us act prudently. True, when I speak I represent but one, but my interest is for many. I think I can see what is in the near future, and it arouses my utmost energy for mankind. We would gladly evade the difficulty that must follow our efforts, but it is vain to hope for peace. He that thinks that he shall enjoy the full liberty of person and conscience (which the great giver of nature intended for man) without making a sacrifice to procure it will soon understand his mistake

The great question before the people of to-day is this, Which shall predominate, science or superstition, liberty or bigotry? We, as scientists, do not seek to predominate over the superstitious or bigoted; but it is the superstitious and bigoted that seek to predominate over us and compel us to bow before their altar. We are acting on the defensiv; they on the offensiv. We seek to protect our personal rights and liberties; they to invade and oppress them. Which of the two is right? We are right, and the right shall conquer. Then, knowing that we are in the right, let us make everything else bend to its purpose. Let us join hands, never to sever un il our liberties rest upon a foundation never to be removed by superstition or ecclesiastical power.

Now, my friends, how shall we proceed to defend our rights, and secure them against the invasion of superstition, bigotry, and ecclesiastical power? The most important of all things is union. Where there is union there is strength. Ten men, well armed and fortified, may defeat a hundred of an attacking foe; but let them disunite and scatter, and two or three men may capture and destroy them all. If we, as a body of Liberals, firmly unite, and sympathize with each other's movements, we will become a power, effectual to defend and sustain our cause against powerful odds, never to be conquered.

Here then is the importance of union.

But our issues are distinct from and independent of either Republican, Democrat, or Greenback parties, and must be kept distinct or they will amount to but little or nothing. If we join hands and go solid for any of the three parties mentioned, we will become a power which each and all of the parties will respect, and will endeavor to show us favor. But we can never rest on a secure basis until our party becomes predominant. But let us make the best of the present situation. Let us hold a convention, and hav a free expression of all Liberals, and agree upon some candidate already in the field, and if we cannot agree to do this let us hav an independent one of our own. We could not elect our candidate, but we would be laying the basis of a party which would, in the course of time, come into power, and at the same time all other parties would endeavor to court our favor by conforming their platform to our views in order to gain our support. Yes, let us by all means hold a convention and act harmoniously and giv our ballot in one solid lump. This done, the ecclesiastical power will begin to shake. But just as sure as we scatter, running for this candidate or the other one, we will hav serious cause to regret our mistake.

I, for one, am willing to conform my choice to the will of the majority of Liberals, and will go with them heart and hand. But I will do all I can to convince them of the impropriety of supporting any candidate on the Republican ticket in her present state of bigotry and corruption. We hav nothing personal against Mr. Garfield, but we consider our liberties safer, at this present time, under the control of a Democratic administration. I venture to say that three-fourths of our worst enemies are concealed in the Republican party, and are watching and hoping for opportunities to subdue us through their party power.

A word or so in defense of our noble friend D. M. Bennett, and I am through.

I was grieved to see how sharply you were criticised and accused falsely. My dear friends, is there any man that would accuse Mr. Bennett of being partisan, and selling the influence of THE TRUTH SEEKER to the Democratic party? Is there any one that would believe such an unjust thing? Is there any man among us that has suffered more for the cause of liberty and the freedom of conscience than this poor old man? Who can doubt his loyalty and his love for principles of right and justice to mankind? If some of us had been cast in prison and deprived of our liberty, and suffered as he did (not for himself alone, but to support and defend the principles of freedom for you and me to enjoy), I think that we too would not be very partial to the Republican administration which put and kept us there.

I hope, my dear friends, that we will appreciate the suffering endured for our own happiness, and none accuse so faithful a friend of such an unjust act.

And again, has Mr. Bennett not as good a right to express his personal views on politics (notwithstanding he is an editor) as we hav to express ours? Has he not opened his paper to the free access of all, no matter what their views may be, though contrary to his own; all are welcome to a free expression of their personal views. These are all facts and favors which we should appreciate.

True, the editor of a paper may neglect to insert matter written for publication, and he may hav good and various reasons for doing so. This must be left to his own discretion, and we should endeavor to take no offense because of any such omissions—unless they are too numerous and grievous to be overlooked.

Hoping that we all may try to feel right and do right, and allow to others all that we would claim for ourselvs,

I am sincerely, PETER SOULE.

---

BRONSON, MICH., July 24, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Inclosed please find one dollar toward your European trip. As you hav demonstrated your capacity to write profusely several volumes of works, and "letters" besides, we shall look for some interesting epistles from your foreign tour. You hav done just right in declaring for Hancock and English. Your practical good sense has not deserted you in this matter of politics. We want a change in administration. The election of Garfield means Grant in 1884, and after that, imperialism. Yours, J. FRANCIS RUGGLES.

---

LUNENBURG, MASS.

FRIEND BENNETT: I am amazed to see or hear a man 60 years of age, and who has spent eleven months of that period in prison, advise reformers to lift a pennyweight at the wheel of the two parties that hav crushed the life of this young American republic by turn for fifty years past. Compromise with the relics of the old Whig party of '36! make your bed with the old monopoly Democrats under the lead of West Point! The boy of Woodend lost a limb; years afterward, when asked how he lost his leg, he promptly replied, "It was bit off," but declined to state where or when or which shark bit it off. So it is with the reformers of to-day, we had as lief be eaten by the Republican sharks as rent by Democratic claws.

Never be alarmed about throwing away "your vote." That could be done only through neglect to vote. I don't believe the eleven months you passed in prison were thrown away, and as to a change, I desire only a radical change. Until then let the worst clique, if you can tell which, rule. Nothing short of dire suffering will heal the disease of the people; since nothing but rattlesnakes were equal to the salvatiou of the Beaver family, so nothing but dungeons, thumbscrews, and starvation will save the country, yet it will be saved.

Yours against all compromise. Stand on one leg, if it be a wooden one. A. H. WOOD.

---

DETROIT, MICH., July 17, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I received the first volume of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," and "The Crisis," etc., on the 15th all right. Hav not had time to examin its contents to any extent; hav no doubt from what I hav read of it that it is all that it has been recommended to be. I am glad to know that all is right, and I send inclosed one dollar as thanks for your trouble and the expense, for I see the postage is considerable in amount, on the whole package, and I think the man who could and did write so large a book as this first volume, even at intervals, during a year's confinement at labor in prison, has given evidence of a spirit of unflinching perseverance and industry that ought not to go unrewarded, even to please Anthony Comstock, or his nearest of kin, the devil.

Yours truly, JAMES HALE.

---

ITHACA, N. Y., July 17, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav been a reader of your valuable paper over three years. I prize it highly, but when you ask me to take my seat in Belmont's breeches, I say, No, I shall vote for James B. Wheeler; he is the poor man's friend. A large number of your readers will feel the same way. Yours respectfully, JAMES W. BRIDE.

[Our friend probably means to say that he will vote for Gen. Weaver. We know of no presidential candidate in the field by the name of Wheeler.—ED. T. S.]

---

BOSTON, MASS, July 19, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find one dollar toward paying your expenses to the Congress at Brussels. I also indorse your views on the political situation, and shall vote the Democratic ticket. The arguments of the opponents seem not so well taken.

In a letter published by Mr. Green from Col. Ingersoll, on the political situation, he says, "As long as the Democratic party is controled by the Catholics, as long as that party is afraid to pass a resolution that the public moneys shall not be given to sectarian schools, I shall vote some other ticket."

What public moneys are here referred to? I never knew that the United States government paid any money for the public schools, either sectarian or otherwise. Again he says: "Let us see how the candidates are upon these great questions. Let us ask them whether they are in favor of depriving Atheists of the right of testifying in courts, whether they are in favor of the total separation of church and state, and whether they think that a man's civil and political rights should be affected by his religious or irreligious belief."

Now all these might be very proper questions to ask of a candidate for governor of any state, but what has the United States government to do with the separation of church and state? The Constitution does not recognize any church. What has the President to do with my inability to testify in court on account of my religious belief? To draft questions and propose them to the candidates for the presidency seems to me very ill-advised. Yours truly, J. SCHUH.

---

FORT LEE, N. J., July 19, 1880.

BRO. BENNETT: It seems we must hav a little family quarrel. I am in the country, farmers are my neighbors, but I never hear that any one goes grafting on an old stump. That's the very curious thing you try to giv us in your paper—the old rotten stump called Democratic party. How, in the name of all reforms, do you come to the very same conclusion as the organs of the money power—that nothing but an old stump can save the country.

Brother, I hold it a lucky thing for you and all in the family that you hav no money to bet. Who told you that Weaver and Chambers could not carry a single state? Of course, nobody but the combined Republico-Democratic money-power papers.

We hold you as a fighting hero against all swindles, gods, and devils; but for our earthly welfare, you must allow "the boys" to look out for themselvs. The republic of Switzerland, some thirty years ago, dispatched the Jesuits, Germany broke their power, and now France drives them from her soil. And you, good old man, want us to help the Inquisition, Protestant-burner, the great grandmother of all the bigotry and superstition of to-day. You, our best uncle, brother, and leader, what weak moment could bring you to that desperation? Are you not aware that just at present about a dozen different reform parties are going to join hands for the sole purpose to begin with reforms? Of course, any and all parties shall hav a hand in the victory.

Bro. Bennett, for harmony's sake, please don't recommend the old outused horse (Democratic party) ever again.

How, and on what principle, was Lincoln elected? On the stolen idea of Abolitionism. Lincoln's election made 4 000 000 negroes free. Weaver's election will make 40,000,000 white men free; and believe me, brother, Weaver will be President. A. SEMMENDINGER.

---

VINTON, O., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am truly sorry to find you advising your friends to join hands with the Democratic party to secure freedom, not that you hav not a right to giv the advice if you think it best, but it looks to me as ill-advised when we contemplate the history of the Democratic party for the last twenty-five years at least. Where did it stand on the slavery question, when human beings were bought and sold, and when every Northern man was by law converted into a bloodhound; when mobs and violence was the rule instead of the exception? And whenever a rotten egg was thrown it was invariably by a Democrat; or whenever a freedom-loving soul was to be dragged through the streets, Democrats did it.

Where are the assurances of a change? Is it in the last Congress, when Speaker Randall ignored Gen. Weaver's attempt to speak or introduce any measure having for its object a restoration of human rights that they hav been robbed of by the combined efforts of both the old parties?

Did you ever know a party that had outlived its usefulness to reform and turn back from wrong doing and cease to oppress? No. These wrongs can only be righted by the foundation of new parties, which the good and true of both old parties will cluster around. Then why throw the wet blanket over the struggling masses and consign them to the tender mercies of either of the old defunct parties? I cannot think you do it with any hopes of a taste of the flesh-pots of the old Democratic party.

No, no; we cannot trust them, and do not forget it. If we do, in my opinion, we'll never regret it but once, and that will be always. Then let us unite with the new and growing party, whose platform is all right and whose professions are honest. Yours for the right, M. BRANIN.

---

NORTH MADISON, IOWA, July 10, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Having read your editorial on the political situation, the duty of Liberals, etc., and thinking a little mild criticism in order, venture to offer a few thoughts in a kind spirit.

The choice between the two candidates may at first view seem small. The record of both men, as far as they run together, is probably good. In one thing I think you will agree with me, and that is, that General Hancock has had no experience as a statesman, while with General Garfield the case is different, he having had a pretty thorough schooling in Congress. Just what course either man may pursue we cannot now tell, and it may be a little premature for us to judge, especially in the absence of expressed policy.

You say: "We hav tried the Republican party. At first it did well. It was the party of liberty, the friend of the oppressed and downtrodden; it was the savior of the country." It seems to me that the Republican party deserves this amount of praise at least. Now, my friend, can you say as much of the Democratic party? While the Republican party was trying to save the country, what was the Democratic party doing? It seems to me that the Democratic press, and many in the party, were doing about all they could to lay impediments in the way of those who were trying to save the country. In short, I do not think that any political party ever had so bad a record.

You admit that Garfield did some good work in Congress in "checking the onward march of Comstockism." May we not presume what he then and there did to be a fair expression of his convictions?

Again you say, "With Hancock elected, Comstock will be dismissed." This may be only presumptiv. I consider Comstock a very bad man—one who would disgrace any party. In your own case you hav very great reason to feel that individuals in the Republican party hav done you great injustice.

That the Republican party is corrupt is quite probable. But to presume that the Democratic party would be less so is to my mind a mere guess. Certainly they hav not shown themselvs very amiable for the last twenty years. They hav presented to the country no lofty statesmanship, but a truckling policy has been pursued by them.

Again you say, "The Republican party has trampled upon the liberties guaranteed to us in the Constitution." What do you think the Democrats did when they inaugurated the Rebellion? Was there any trampling on the Constitution then?

I think your advice for the Liberals to go with the Democrats is ill-advised and premature. For my own part, I think we need a Liberal party; a party that will recognize the rights of man above the influence of money; one that will insist on adherence to principle rather than policy; a party that will do the right thing though the heavens fall. Such a party might not succeed the first year, but if it grounds itself on true principles and stays there it will succeed. Yours truly, N. HUNT.

---

OTTUMWA, IOWA, June 19, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am glad to know that you are out of the grasp of the infernal Christian Inquisition, and I hope forever. The infamous Christian, lying, perjured hypocrits hav acted fiendishly and diabolically toward you in depriving you of liberty and almost everything for thirteen months. The lying thieves, robbers, and perjured scoundrels hav been bad enough with me also. By their lying and perjury I lost possession of five thousand dollars' worth of real estate for over two years. I hav had the case through all the courts, and every point decided in my favor in the Supreme Court of this state, and the property restored to me; but by a second trial in a childish inferior justice's court, and by Christian lies, perjury, corruption, bribery, and fraud I lost possession again, notwithstanding the paramount decision of the Supreme Court; but by a writ of error already issued and perfected I will get possession without a shadow of doubt, in October next in the Circuit Court of this county and state. But it requires patience and knowledge and money to tear justice from the hands of Christian liars and hypocrits. And so the world wags.

I hav just finished reading your letters or replies to Humphrey, in your great discussion with him, for I think the third time. Some books should be read over fifty times. Ninety-nine out of every hundred should not be read at all. Particularly your last three letters to Humphrey, your "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," your letter to the devil, and your prayer to the same gentleman are terribly damaging and demolishing to poor Humphrey and to every part and vestige of the Bible and Christianity. And I think Humphrey did as well perhaps as any Christian since Bishop Watson, whom he has not been able to and cannot equal. Watson has some sense in his book when he attacks Deism.

He shows that Deism cannot stand the test of reason, logic, or science when he points Paine to a God and matter posterior to its creator, and creating matter out of nothing. The liberty of man in the face of an omniscient, omnipotent God, the existence of evil under a God, even the existence of a God, his providence, and a future state of retribution—to all these difficulties Paine wisely did not attempt to giv any answer, and no one else has ever been able to giv any for him. But alas for poor Humphrey! he has said nothing original, and nothing about Infidels or the Bible, that I recollect, that is true. But he slanders Paine, Jefferson, Franklin, and Ingersoll whenever he can.

I think your attack on the Bible and Christianity calculated to do the most good among the masses of any book since the "Age of Reason." Comparativly those fellows with their origin of species and evolution—which are all true enough in their place—are doing almost nothing to advance, enlighten, and benefit mankind. D'Holbach and Ingersoll kill every part of the Bible and Christianity they touch; for instance, Ingersoll's "Moses," or on the Pentateuch, D'Holbach's "Letters to Eugenia," "Christianity Unveiled," and his "Good Sense," slaying all the religions in the world. But you go over the whole Bible, over the whole Christian field, leaving no stone unturned and no rock unrent. Your Fifty Reasons tear every part and parcel of the Bible and Christianity into tatters, grind them to dust, and scatter the whole infamous religion or superstition to the winds.

I see you are right on the whole Bible and Christianity, and cannot be combated by any man, living or dead. Your book will stand triumphantly against the entire Christian and Jewish world, against all the Humphreys that will liv and die, from now toward the eternal traveling, never-ending time. And by reference to what you say in your lecture on the God of the universe, in reply to De Lara, you understand the law of philosopical necessity; hence you are right and clear on all subjects belonging to religion except that of the soul, which you do not yet pretend to hav solved.

I hav an article, a part of which I published some four years ago, and consider it a complete and the only demonstration yet produced on the subject. As soon as I hav an opportunity and time to copy said article, I will send it to be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. And I presume you will think it is sad egotism and presumption to pretend to hav originated a demonstration on so difficult a question as the soul, that no other Infidel could find out or discover. Nevertheless, whatever is so, is so, and can't be helped. Neither do I pretend to undervalue the strong and almost satisfactory probability produced by the greatest man that ever lived, the immortal Thomas Hobbes, and some of the next greatest, such as Helvetius, Shaftesbury, D'Holbach, Hume, Collins, Voltaire, Cooper, Maudsley, Huxley, Tyndall, Lewes, Greg, and Reade, which is convincing in the highest degree, falling short only of absolute demonstration of the materiality and mortality of the human soul. I only say that no one who understands reasoning will say that their proof about the soul amounts to demonstration; although several of those men hav demonstrated another subject which is equally difficult. I mean philosophical necessity, perhaps the greatest and most important subject in the world, and one the fewest understand. I mean the proof about necessity given by Hobbes, Helvetius, Hume, D'Holbach, Voltaire, Shaftesbury, Lewes, Huxley, and Tyndall.

Hobbes demonstrated necessity in his book, "Tripos," best of any. And he also gives the best and most crushing definition of religion ever given, and I reckon ever will be given by man. If understood and taught, it alone would drive religion from the face of the earth. It is as follows: "Religion is a superstition in fashion, and superstition is a religion out of fashion." This differs widely from B. F. Underwood, who now pretends to think religion a real thing—an entity—man's partly developed condition. He also defines religion to be the kingdom of darkness.

Next thing is to business. It will be impossible for me to pay you my back bill until October next, when I will be sure to get my property back in possession, and then I will square all things up with you. Inclosed please find postal order for one dollar, for which send the paper as directed.

Mr. W. S. Bell was here, and gave three solid, instructiv lectures, giving Christianity and the Bible some powerful and deadly blows, pounding the old superstition heavily and wounding it deeply. I promised Mr. Bell to write an article giving an account of his lectures here, to be published in your paper, but I hav not been able to do so yet on account of sickness and other obstructions and troubles.

Yours truly, JOHN S. WALKER.

---

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., July 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I inclose five dollars (according to agreement) to help defray the expenses of delegates to the Brussels Convention. Yours truly,

HARRY B. SHEARS.

---

SAN JACINTO, IND., July 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find money order for three dollars, for which please send me thy new book, "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." I think I will send for the other volume when I renew my subscription in September. Thee may consider me a life member. I came across THE TRUTH SEEKER last summer while attending the Braden-Jamieson debate, and hav been a faithful and appreciativ reader of it since. Oh, long may it wave! I hope you go to the Brussels Congress, hav a splendid time, and giv us some good reports. We will be glad to welcome our old friend Eugene back to the editorial chair for a few months or more. I am scattering my old papers among my friends in the hope of making new subscribers. Your well wisher and true Liberal friend,

ANNA M. HANNA

---

AUBURN, N. Y., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Should not some proper legal provision be made either by the National Liberal League, by the state Leagues, or by local auxiliary Leagues whereby lecturers, and perhaps others, may be empowered and legally authorized to tie the "knot matrimonial?"

You are aware that Liberals and Spiritualists "marry and are given in marriage," and it seems proper they should hav the "matrimonial blacksmiths" in their own ranks to weld the links in the chain of affection where a union is desired by two loving hearts wounded by Cupid's darts.

Please set the ball in motion in this direction, so some of our people can get the "pin money" or fee that is now mainly given to the orthodox clergy. Yours truly,

J. H. HARTER.

[This is a good suggestion. It would seem to be proper for the National League to commission one person in each auxiliary League to perform the service or ceremony of marriage.—ED. T. S.]

---

BLOOMING GROVE, KAN., July 16, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Having but yesterday returned from a visiting tour of nearly two months among friends and relatives in northern Missouri, I found awaiting my return many letters and papers to answer and read; but of all the papers I receive, the one most dear to my heart is the brave, Liberal, heroic, grand, and peerless old TRUTH SEEKER, D. M. Bennett editor, the old veteran of free thought, free speech, free press, free mails, and liberty for man, woman, and child; that grand old hero who was persecuted, tried, and condemned by Christian bigots to a felon's cell in the Albany penitentiary for thirteen months—for what? For sending an innocent little pamphlet through the mails. For the violation of any law or the commission of any crime? Not a bit of it; but to satiate the thirst for blood that all Christians feel toward those who dare call in question the nonsensical mummery and absurd dogmas of their religion. And now I ask, Can those who profess to be Liberals in this boasted land of liberty lean back upon their dignity and say, "Well, it's not our fight." Brother Liberals, is it not our cause the noble champion of liberty suffered to sustain? If so, let us come to the rescue? Let us hold up the hands of him who has courage enough and ability to wield the pen in favor of the emancipation of the world of mind from the shackles of superstition and ignorance, that blighting curse that enslaves the mind of millions and holds it in abeyance to priestcraft, kingcraft, and many other equally ridiculous and expensiv luxuries. Yes, Bro. Bennett, to you belongs the champion's belt, which you hav fairly won; and for one I will do all my limited means and ability will allow to sustain your paper. Long may it wave! N. C. LANE.

PRATTSBURG, N. Y., July 23, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The fact of being a traveling salesman constantly for ten months in the year and arriving here to-day is why I write you from this place. On my arrival here I entered one of the principal business places, conducted by Mr. George Look, an avowed Freethinker and Liberal, also a subscriber to your paper. Mr. Look had just returned from the post-office with your paper in his hand, and in my presence, on opening it, we saw the heading, "Ho for Brussels!" This at once attracted our attention still further, and on reading the contents discussed the proposition and considered the subject. Mr. Look and myself came to the wise conclusion of what vast importance is the Brussels mission that we Liberals, Infidels, Free Religionists, and Freethinkers could not afford to be represented at the Brussels Congress. After Mr. Look responded by saying, "It is an important thing and should highly interest all Liberals," I, though at the eleventh hour, made the proposition that he and I should at once forward you one dollar each, making two dollars to be added to the Brussels donation. Mr. Look quickly seconded the motion. So please find inclosed the above amount for said purpose, which please acknowledge by making room, if practical, in your next issue, for the publication of this letter.

The reason I ask this is to be satisfied that you are in receipt of this donation before you start for Brussels. I wish we were able to donate more for our great cause, but really it is all we can afford now, but hope to do more in the future by buying books and renewing our subscriptions. We cannot think of leaving our representativs and armor-bearers in the middle of the Atlantic, and trusting to "providence" to bear the other half of the expense. We don't want any "providence" mixed up with this grand undertaking, for should there be, we fear it would turn out a total failure, which would be a victory for the Christians. Let us depend wholly upon ourselvs, and make it a grand success. I hope there will yet be many eleventh-hour donations made before your departure. We wish you all continued good health at Brussels, and hope you will think of us while there. Hoping that you will return home safe and sound, bringing with you the assurances that our great cause has been greatly advanced both in Europe and America, I remain, Yours truly, L. D. GRISWOLD.

---

ALDEN, MINN., July 13, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav lately perused a copy of your paper, loaned me by a friend. I was greatly edified, so much so that I feel that I must hav it for regular perusal. Indeed, I can think of no expenditure of $3 which will be likely to yield me such intense satisfaction and entertainment as the weekly arrival of your paper.

I was sired and bred in the rigid blue-light discipline of New England Presbyterianism, but just as soon as I came to read, reason, and reflect, the abominable utter absurdity of Bible Christianity overwhelmed me. Even at the age of 18, the Bible, which I had been hired to read through again and again by a pious grandmother, showed up, to my thinking, a tissue of most glaring falsehoods, obscenity, lust, murder, and villainy in every form, practiced by the great models of goodness, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Solomon, all the whole lying, treacherous, ignominious hundreds and thousands of Jew impostors, beginning with Cain and ending with Jesus, the latter not particularly heinous except in this monstrous asseveration of divine origin. And what a dastardly act would they attribute to him they called the Almighty, bringing him down from high heaven to this puny earth to overshadow a young woman already plighted in marriage to an honest carpenter man! And upon this so-called immaculate conception the great structure of Christian religion rests. The chronicles admit that Christ was tried and executed as an impostor, but claim it was a voluntary act for redemption of the race. In what rational manner could his execution, voluntary or not, divine or earthly, affect beneficially the millions of unborn human beings, and all others remote from the immediate locality, or even right there? Pshaw! Too utterly preposterous to even require argument or confutation! Of what use is human reason unless exercised in a reasonable way? But it is a fact that all theologians, all ministers of the gospel, nowadays admit that religion cannot be maintained by evidence and argument, but only by blind faith. Old confirmed religionists could not for the world hav their eyes opened and the truth poured in upon their benighted, bigoted minds. But a new and more facil generation is coming on, who will be less and less disposed as time rolls on to swallow the sickening obscene trash of which religion is wrought, without investigating and rejecting that which will not bear the test of truth and common reason. It may take twenty, forty, or sixty years to dissipate the foul myths of the scriptures and overturn the whole spurious, decaying fabric of Christianity, but it is surely doomed. Yours, N. F. JOHNSON.

---

CINCINNATI, O., July 10, 1880.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: Is it lunacy, is it thoughtlessness, or is it hypocrisy that makes so many thousands of people spend thousands and millions of money for the purpose of going to some other world after death? There certainly can be no sense in it, because there is no other world for the people of this world to go to. All die and are buried in this world; some in one way, some in another, and that settles the whole business; and all those who say or think otherwise can prove nothing in their favor. But extinction by death proves everything. There stands the fact clearly before any one. A thousand witnesses can behold a dead corpse going to corruption. How, then, is it possible for such corrupt material to turn up in some other world? Is it not well known that every creature, rich or poor, is laid aside to rot and hid from the sight of their dearest friends? Oh, some say, it is their soul that is in some other world. No soul, spirit, or ghost could be there, for nothing of the kind could exist apart from the body. The mind, or soul, is a part of the material organism, never distinct therefrom, but ever united in life and positivly extinct and oblivious at death. T. WINTER.

---

Kansas Camp-Meeting.

The annual camp-meeting of Spiritualists and Liberals of northern Kansas will be held in a fine grove near Delphos, Ottawa county, Kan., in the Solomon River valley, beginning Aug. 13th and ending Aug. 23d. Everybody is invited to come and get en rapport with the angel world; also to view the finest valley in the West. Free platform, with charity for all sects and creeds. Reduced rates on Kan. Pacific and Mo. Pacific Railroads. D. C. SEYMOUR.

Clyde, Kan., July 18, 1880.

Robert Burns.

I see amid the fields of Avr
A plowman, who, in foul or fair,
Sings at his task.
So clear we know not if it is
The laverock's song we hear or his,
Nor care to ask.

For him the plowing of those fields
A more ethereal harvest yields
Than sheaves of grain;
Songs flush with purple bloom the rye;
The plover's call, the curlew's cry,
Sing in his brain.

Touched by his hand the wayside weed
Becomes a flower; the lowliest reed
Beside the stream
Is clothed with beauty; gorse and grass
And heather, where his footsteps pass,
The brighter seem.

He sings of love, whose flame illumes
The darkness of lone cottage rooms;
He feels the force,
The treacherous undertow and stress,
Of wayward passions, and no less
The keen remorse.

At moments, wrestling with his fate,
His voice is harsh; but not with hate;
The brushwood hung
Above the tavern door lets fall
Its bitter leaf, its drop of gall,
Upon his tongue.

But still the burden of his song
Is love of right, disdain of wrong;
Its master chords
Are Manhood, Freedom, Brotherhood;
Its discords but an interlude
Between the words.

And then to die so young, and leave
Unfinished what he might achieve!
Yet better sure
Is this than wandering up and down,
An old man, in a country town,
Infirm and poor.

For now he haunts his nativ land
As an immortal youth; his hand
Guides every plow;
He sits beside each ingle nook;
His voice is in each rushing brook,
Each rustling bough.

His presence haunts this room to-night,
A form of mingled mist and light,
From that far coast.
Welcome beneath this roof of mine!
Welcome! this vacant chair is thine,
Dear guest and ghost!

—H. W. Longfellow.

Sunrise in California.

BY CHARLES BRADLEY.

Eos crocopeplos ecidnato pasan ep ian.
"The golden morn lit up the whole earth."
—Homer.

"Yonder comes the powerful king of day, Rejoicing in the east." —Thompson.

"Look, love, what crimson streaks
Do lave the severing clouds in yonder east.
Night's candles are burnt out, and proud day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountain-top."
Shakspere.

"Thus sang the uncouth swain to the rocks and rills, While the still morn went out with sandals gray." —Milton.

"Good morning; good morning; good mor-r-r-r-ning." Hutchinson Family.

Scant daylight 'twas when I and Jack
Saw little Jimmy looking back,
While we toiled up the mountain track
As broke the stilly morning.

High mountains, and there boomed a grouse;
'Way down it smoked my old log house.
I cut a fling—nichts com heraus,
As broke the clouded morning.

The little cataract spring was there;
We paused in pathway of the bear
To catch that booming on the air,
As broke the dewy morning.

Cragged Salmon hills were gleaming white,
Sharp Shasta Butte loomed faint in sight—
Vanished the rearward of the night
As broke the golden morning.

Dark on the gulch the shadows lay;
Red on the peaks the sunbeams play;
All splendor came the king of day,
As broke the glorious morning.

From youth I've loved the prairies fair
Where the bees all sing in flowers rare;
But giv to me the mountain bare
When breaks the heavenly morning.

For there in nature vast I see,
Forgetting my mortality,
Beauty in its infinity,
As breaks the stilly morning.

My song is sung, my tale is told;
For all this purple and this gold,
If I don't kill that grouse I'm sold,
All in this dewy morning.

Delilah.

BY ALHAZA.

Loosen thy tresses, O lovely Delilah;
Mild as a dove in thy snowy nest lie:
Let the fringe droop of thy long silken lashes,
Veiling the craft of thy beautiful eye.

Nothing can harm thee; God's servant protects thee;
Then hasten his work, maiden; never mind how.
Two or three lies and a smile full of sweetness
Are as useful at times as a harrow or plow.

Could Samson liv now, among civilized people,
How grandly his locks in their beauty might grow!
No vulgar Jehovah would tempt a sweet maiden
To send a bold hero to darkness and woe,
No angel came near when the dimples were playing,
To grace thy bright cheek and thy beautiful lip;
To say that one thrill that is honest and loving
Givs the purest delight that a mortal can sip.

But the church thinks 'tis right, so go on with your sinning,
And veil the sweet light of your dark, dreamy eye;
Then weave your vile web round some artless Freethinker,
And kiss his bright forehead, and tell him a lie.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

55 Popular Lectures for 25 Cents,

Twelve Radical Essays, including nine of Mrs. Besant's best, for a quarter, all post-paid by mail.

Send stamp for list of
SCIENCE and FREETHOUGHT,
at one-half to nine-tenths discount till Aug. 21st.
Also for list of
CYCLOPEDIAS
at one-third to two-thirds off publishers' prices.
Address A. K. BUTTS, Publisher,
13 Dey Street, New York.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

Epicurus: or, a Few Days in Athens.

Being the Translation of a Greek Mss. discovered in Herculaneum.

BY FRANCES WRIGHT.

Containing a copy of the head of Epicurus.
Price 75 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th street. New York. N.Y.

JUST PUBLISHED!

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

FIFTY CENTS

Will pay for

DR. FOOTE'S HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for the AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED PRONOUNCING POCKET DICTIONARY, containing 30,000 words.

ONE DOLLAR will pay for DR. FOOTE'S

HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for a large center-table book containing the Complete Works of Shakspere! Do not forget to send 25 cents to pay postage or 35 cents if you want it registered. Address

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 E. 28th st., New York city.

The Gods and Religions OF Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. givs a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructive work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.
tJan81.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington Ave. New York, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK are at liberty to CONSULT ITS AUTHOR in person or by mail FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED.
MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY,
129 East 28th Street New York.

DR. KINGET'S NEW BOOK.

"MEDICAL GOOD SENSE"

—AND—

PRIVATE READING FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.

—EMBRACING—

SEXUAL PHILOSOPHY AND PHYSIOLOGICAL MARRIAGE.

Containing over 500 illustrated pages, well bound—price $2. It treats of the nature, causes, treatment of, and prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases. It unfolds some of the deepest mysteries of human nature in the generation and development of life, sexual relationship, marriage, parentage, and offspring, all viewed from a secular standpoint. It fully answers numerous questions, the delicate nature of which prevents thousands of women from asking. Any person sending $1.50 before the day of publication, this fall, will receive a copy, well bound, mailed free. Contents table sent free for stamp.

DR. T. R. KINGET ANNOUNCES

to his Liberal friends and patients throughout the United States and Canadas that he is, as usual, treating

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES,

and positively curing ninety per cent of those pronounced incurable. Having had over thirty years' experience, Dr. K. is meeting with remarkable success in curing obstinate cases of Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Nervous Debility, Impotency in both sexes, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Dysentery, Piles, Diseases of the Skin, Kidneys, Bladder, Genital Organs, and all diseases of women Consultation Free. Address

T. R. KINGET, M. D.,
317 East 14th St., New York.
Questions for Invalids free.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall, this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person. Price 20 cents.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds.
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

Wanted.

To sell a patent right. An improvement on Sewing Machines, A Reacting Electric Sandal, A Health and Life-Preserving Invention, which can be applied to all Sewing Machines without any change in the machines. An entire prevention of the suffering and death caused from operating sewing machines.

Apply to the patentee,
DR. C. A. VON CORT,
THERAPEUTIC HEALTH INSTITUTE,
6'25 168th street, near 3d avenue, N. Y. City.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13'27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages give an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrines, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal League and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Thelogy, Etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

LOVE VENTURES.

A rose tinted record of love in the tropics, with strange and startling adventures thereto belonging. Price, 50 cents.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2 00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 68 pages; price, 25 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

LIGHT cares speak; great ones are dumb.

ONE seldom fails when he knows his own powers.

THE rays of happiness, like those of light, are colorless when unbroken.

THE heart is a book which we ought not to tear in a hurry to get at its contents.

IF rich, be not too joyful in having, too solicitous in keeping, too sorrowful in losing.

GOOD thoughts, like the leaves, giv out a sweet smell if laid up in the jar of memory.

NO INDULGENCE of passion destroys the spiritual nature so much as respectable selfishness.

HUMAN life defined by a line is as uncomfortable as would be the human figure defined by a wire.

WE cannot well afford not to see the geese go over a single spring, and so commence our year regularly.—Thoreau.

THE object of all ambition should be to be happy at home. If we are not happy there we cannot be happy elsewhere.

TEARS are the gift which love bestows upon the memory of the absent, and they will avail to keep the heart from suffocation.

NEVER be too presumptuous. Ponder over this observation; the reason so many people upset and sink in the stream of life is because they put up more sail than they can carry.

THE beginning of hardships is like the first taste of bitter food—it seems for a moment unbearable; yet, if there is nothing else to satisfy your hunger, we take another bite, and find it possible to go on.

CONTENTMENT produces, in some measure, all those effects which the alchemist usually ascribes to what he calls the philosopher's stone, and if it does not bring riches it does the same thing by banishing the desire for them.—Addison.

IT is a little thing to speak a phrase
Of common comfort, which, by daily use,
Has almost lost its sense; yet on the ear
Of him who thought to die unmourned 'twill fall
Like choicest music, fill the glazing eye
With gentle tears, relax the knotted hand
To know the bonds of fellowship again.
—Talfourd.

A MURMURED breath that leaves no visioned trace,
A wave of sound that floats and flies in space;
Yet precious souls are sometimes won for heaven
By low and tender words that earth has given.
If we may do some little good below
By little words whose worth we do not know,
How glad our hearts will be at last to say
We always spoke kind words along life's way!

THE government of the United States has no religion. It is not ir-religious, but non religious. Theists, Atheists, Jews, Christians, Mohammedans, and pagans are equal before the Constitution and the ballot-box. During the Black Friday of Know-nothingism, twenty odd years ago, an attempt was made to institute a religious test of citizenship, but it failed so signally that it will scarcely be repeated.—Hon. G. W. Julian.

IT is easy to talk largely of the abstract dignity of humanity, and to take Socrates or Shakspere for a type of it. One can understand something of spirits such as theirs continuing, because we see they do continue; but really, with the mass of us, one would think the most reasonable, as well as the kindest, thing which could be done would be to put us out. The stars want no snuffing, but I fear, if we are all to be kept burning, whoever has the trimming of us will hav work enough. Not being good enough for heaven, nor bad enough for the other place, we oscillate in the temperate inertia of folly, answering no end whatever, either of god or devil; surely one would think we should be put out.—Froude's "Nemesis of Fate."

THE majority of people do not hav any opinions. They hav simply notions, impressions, sentiments, feelings; they hav prejudices, a desire to see this thing prevail, or that. But how many men are there that, concerning any great problems of the world, hav earned the right to say that they hav an opinion? How many men are there that hav studied the question, that hav weighed opposing claims and probabilities and testimony, so that their opinion is worth the breath it takes to utter it? There are thousands of people who are like looking-glasses; they hav a shadow of whatever happens to be standing before them. They hav an opinion so long as they are talking with some positiv person who believes something, but let that person go away, and it is ready for another track.—Savage.

ALL we see is the result of fixed laws or principles, but these laws are not the work of a designing creator; they are part and portion of the matter itself, and the adaptivness of one thing to another is only a natural result of cause and effect. It is Theists who would produce chance and blind forces. If godism were true then one might see how designs were possible. For trees could then grow with the roots in the air and leaves in the soil, and men walk on their heads, and birds swim in the water as fish do. All the fixed laws of nature could be controverted, and miracle, chaos, and disorder reign where now all is harmony, beauty, and adaptivness. Go down deeper, and find the bed rock of Atheism, and thou wilt see that its foundations are as firm and immovable as are the eternal verities of the universe.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

ONE touch of humor makes the whole world grin.

IT is a mean temperature that don't send a fresh breeze.

RECIPE for making your own eye water.—Stick your own finger in it.

A MAN is like an egg. You can't tell whether or not he is good until he is broke.

"THAT puts a different face on it," as the boy said when the ball struck the clock dial.

"THERE is a woman at the bottom of it," as the man said when his wife fell into the well.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher: "Annie, what must we do to be forgiven?" Annie: "We must sin."

"PATRICK, where's Bridget?" "Indade, ma'am, she's fost asleep watching the bread baking."

DOMESTIC Bliss—Kissing the maid of all work. Domestic Blister—When a man's wife surprises him in the act.

WHEN girls are young they like half a dozen birthdays a year; but as they grow old they don't care to hav even one.

A FAMILIAR instance of color blindness is that of a man taking a brown silk umbrella and leaving a gingham own in its place.

THE young housewife: "What miserable little eggs again! You really must tell them, Jane, to let the hen set on them a little longer."

THE amount of money now in the United States is estimated at $1,104,000,000. When we look at our pocketbook we can hardly believe there is half so much.

BICYCLE spokes are made almost as thin as pipestems, so that the average rider can distinguish them from his legs. It would be dangerous to get them mixed up.

"Do not marry a widower," said an old lady; "a ready-made family is like a plate of cold potatoes." "Oh, I'll soon warm them over," replied the damsel; and she did.

A FAMILY of young ladies who reside in this place are so constantly in the habit of entertaining their company on the front stoop that they hav gained the title of step-sisters.

AN Illinois girl with a breach-of-promis suit testified that it was the usual thing for girls to show their love-letters to fifteen or twenty other girls in order to make them jealous.

JOHNNY says his mother makes a great cry if his little sister goes without her shade hat. She don't want her to get freckled, but doesn't seem to care a bit how much his father tans him.

"TOM," said a girl to her sweetheart, "you hav been paying your distresses to me long enough. It is time you made known your conentions, so as not to keep me in expense any longer."

LIGHT-MINDED young thing in a bathing-suit: "Surely, Aunt Margaret, you're not going to wear your spectacles in the water?" Aunt M.: 'Indeed, I a.. Nothing shall induce me to take off another thing."

"IT looks like the scene of a great battle," remarked a traveler, viewing the work of a recent cyclone at the West. "Yes," said the native, solemnly, and without removing his pipe, "the place was tuk by storm."

IT is said that the deepest gorge in the world has been discovered in Colorado. We always had the impression that the biggest gorge in this country might be witnessed at the railway station where the train stops "five minutes for dinner."

WHEN a man fails to laugh at one of the king of Burmah's jokes he is knocked down and traveled over and strewed about. And it's a great blessing that the king's jokes are always so funny that nobody ever seems able to help laughing at them.

HE appeared to be almost gone. Rolling his eyes toward the partner of his bosom, he gasped, "Bury me 'neath the weeping willow, and plant a single white rose above my head." "Oh, it's no use," she snapped out, "your nose would scorch the roots." He got well.

"You made a fool of me," said an irritated man to his wife, "and that's the way you got me to marry you." "My love," sweetly responded the wife, "you do yourself an injustice. Call yourself a fool if you please, but remember that you are in all respects a self-made man."

A GENTLEMAN took his little girl Julia to a barber-shop one day to hav her hair cut. The barber was a colored individual. The little girl was very quiet, and did not speak. On getting outside the door, she drew a long breath, and said, "Papa, I would not like to hav inks (ink) all over my face."

A DUTCHMAN was relating his marvelous escape from drowning when thirteen of his companions were lost by the upsetting of a boat, and he alone was saved. "And how did you escape their fate?" asked one of the hearers. "I tid not co in te tam pote," was the Dutchman's placid answer.

A TENDER young potato-bug
Sat swinging on a vine,
And sighed unto a maiden bug,
"I pray you will be mine."

Then softly spake the maiden bug,
"I love you fond and true,
But oh, my cruel-hearted Par
Won't let me marry you."

With scorn upon his buggy brow,
With glances cold and keen,
That haughty lover answered her,
"I think your Par-is-green."

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. " | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 0. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 2 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 5 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 1 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 2 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. . Hopps, London. | 5 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 2 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 10 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 1 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 3 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 1 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 5 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 1 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 10 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 2 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 5 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 1 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 3 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 10 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 5 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 2 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 1 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 2 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 1 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 2 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 3 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 5 |
| 120. | The New Age. Bell | 3 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 10 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 2 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 10 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 2 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 10 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 5 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 2 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 5 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 3 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 1 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangels | |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 8 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 2 |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D., | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

FOUNDATION STONES.

A Volume of Sermons
BY GEORGE CHAINEY.
Handsomely bound in Cloth, Price, $1.00.

PAMPHLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Heads and Hearts | 5 cts |
| Iconoclasm | 5 cts |
| Ecclesiastical Lynch-Law | 10 cts |
| All four will be sent post-paid for | $1.00 |
| Card Photographs of Mr. Chainey | 20 cts |
| Cabinet " | 40 cts |

Address G. C. SMITH
129 Main St., Evansville, Ind.

Your sermons stir me like trumpets. Iconoclasm is the best sermon ever delivered in an American pulpit.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Freethinkers' Badge Pin.

The cut shows the design and size of the badge, but not its beauty. The whole badge is intended to signify symbolically that the "world moves," and that "universal mental liberty" is being spread over the world by the "leaves of learning." Price of single badge, solid gold, package registered, and postage paid, $1 50. Club one dozen or more to one address, package registered, and postage paid, $1.35 each. One badge free to getter up of a club. Remit by P. O. order or registered letter. Postage stamps taken for fractional parts of a dollar. Orders filled in the order of their application, within three weeks after they are received. Badges to be had only from the patentee. LUCY L. CHURCHHILL,
West Richfield, Summit Co., Ohio.
Mention this paper.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., May 19, 1879.

MY DEAR MADAM: Your idea of an external and visible sign for the friends of mental liberty, to exhibit to one another on their persons, seems to me very good. In union there is strength, i. e., courage. A quiet, pretty badge, such as you propose, can certainly do no harm. I should like to wear one. But it must be pleasing; for part of our mission is to promote beauty everywhere and in all things. To make the world beautiful, and the human life in it beautiful, are the vast results of liberty. We must do nothing ugly, think nothing ugly, feel nothing ugly, wear nothing ugly.

Very truly yours. JAMES PARTON.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS, April 29, 1880.

DEAR MADAM: I hav received the beautiful badge. Accept my thanks,

Very truly yours, JAMES PARTON.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 32 { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, August 7, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

MOODY is now at Northfield, Mass., enjoying rest on his farm. In the fall he is to labor with the politicians and other sinners of Washington, D. C.

A CONSERVATIVE clergyman in England has chosen to omit the prayer for Parliament since the election, on the ground that "such a lot" are not worth praying for.

SPURGEON'S vast congregation, generally numbering between six and seven thousand people, join in singing hymns without any instrumental accompaniment.

THE crop of doctorates among the clergymen during the past commencement season was large. Eighty ministers received "D.D.," forty-six "LL.D." and twenty "Ph. D."

THE Rev. Mr. Chainey, a Unitarian pastor at Evansville, Indiana, declared his disbelief in a God, and was promptly expelled from the church. This he had expected; but now he has also suffered expulsion from his Masonic lodge.

A FEW city churches whose pastors are absent, and whose treasuries are not overflowing with wealth, economize by holding prayer-meetings instead of having preaching. In most cases these prayer-meetings are sparsely attended.

THE Rev. Ira C. Billman preached a kind of farewell sermon at Jackson, Mich., and his congregation did not at the time know what he meant by it. He deserted his wife to elope with another woman next day, and then his meaning was clear.

THE Mowbray Nitro-Glycerine Works at North Adams, Mass., hav been blown up three times. Of the ten successiv superintendents, eight hav been killed by explosions, one is blind, and the other is now in charge. The utmost care is maintained in the establishment but danger is unavoidable.

THE Rev. Charles A. B. Wilson has met with a disaster at the outset of his ministry. He went to Baltimore to be ordained a clergyman of the African Methodist church, returned to Allegheny to take charge of a church, and within a week was arrested for stealing a watch. He fears that his pulpit usefulness is destroyed.

A CHINAMAN was three days without food in a California wilderness. When found he said he had been abundantly fed by strange beings, who supplied all sorts of delicacies. His imagination had been affected by hunger, as is frequently the case; but his countrymen believe that he has been in the hands of devils, and they are putting him through a purifying course of ceremonies.

THE congregation and Sunday-school of Calvary Chapel at Riverside, N. J., were evicted a few days ago, and their pulpit, pews, and furniture were placed in the road, for a debt of $57 50 owed by them to the church of the Holy Communion. One of the wardens said that the eviction was not so much for the debt as because the members of Calvary associated with the members of other churches in religious work, which the high church people objected to.

MOST of the pastors of fashionable churches are out of town; and more than half of the churches which rank in this class are closed. The pulpits of those which remain open are supplied by clergymen from the country, most of whom are friends or relativs of the absent pastors. This is a pleasant thing for the country brethren, as it givs them a chance to stand before a city congregation, and to put in their pockets the fee which it is customary to pay for such a service.

FUEGO, a volcano of Guatemala, which in times past has been activ and destructiv, has again burst into eruptiv energy. Suddenly one night, and without the usual premonitory rumblings, it shot a huge pillar of flame several hundred feet into the air. Vesuvius, not long ago, began one of its frequent exhibitions of molten lava. Observers of natural phenomena may be inclined to couple these eruptions with the recent earthquakes in the Phillipine Islands by which upward of 300 livs were lost, and with other slighter simultaneous earthshakings, not forgetting the little ones in New Hampshire.

A PECULATING PASTOR.—Rev. Charles Alfred Wilson, a Methodist preacher, of New Baltimore, Ohio, was arrested recently on the charge of larceny preferred by a half-sister, Mrs. Phillips, of 31 Rust street, Pittsburgh, Pa., who insists that the gentleman appropriated a watch and ring belonging to herself. Two pawn tickets were found in his possession, one of them calling for a watch which answers the description of the one stolen from a man named Mills, of Salem, Ohio, two weeks ago.

AND another thing, Gen. Hancock always puts out a kerosene lamp by blowing down the chimney. Now we ask—In all candor—can the American people afford to take the chances on a president who is liable any night to blow himself up with a kerosene lamp? The act would be utterly destructiv of presidential dignity; it would lower us in the esteem of other nations, to say nothing of the entire forfeiture of the insurance. Citizens of the republic, you are warned.—Burlington Hawkeye.

THE Rev. George T. McClelland went from Pittsburgh to Reynoldsville, Pa., to conduct a revival meeting in a Presbyterian church. He was quartered in Elder Kelso's house. The neighbors heard the noise of a fight in the building, and presently the clergyman was chased out by the elder, who kicked him violently at every step. Mr. McClelland subsequently said: "Mrs. Kelso invited me to kiss her, and I did so. Then her husband assailed me. I wish now that I hadn't kissed her."

THE Telegram is really becoming an outspoken Infidel paper, that is, so far as the Telegram can be outspoken on any subject. Yesterday it published an editorial advising every one to take a pledge to totally abstain from religion, and used a headline respecting Tanner which describes him as "ahead of all authentic records." We call to mind a record of a fast for forty days and forty nights, while Tanner had not then covered thirty days. Is it possible that the Telegram intends to characterize that record as unauthentic?—Truth.

A VERY inteligent lady remarked that she seldom rote a letter becaus she did not no how to spel. Thare ar menny thousands of such persons to whom fonetic speling would bring immediate relief. All thay hav to do is to hed a letter "Speling Reform," or something of the sort, and then spel in the most convenient way. It wil make no difference whether thay spel like anybody else or not; for we hav not yet reecht the stage when eny two speling reformers can spel exactly alike. No matter if it does look strange; it cannot be worse than the old speling.—Plowshare.

IN an interview with a reporter, Ex-Senator Simon Cameron declares that if General Hancock is elected there will be an end to all the Indian war swindles. This, coming from a man who has always been prominent in Republican councils, and who may reasonably be supposed to reflect not only the sentiment of a large proportion of the Republicans of Pennsylvania, but the opinions of his son, the present senator, is at least significant. It is worth the consideration of the people of the United States that so old and experienced a statesman as Mr. Cameron makes so important a prediction. If we could get rid of our Indian wars once for all, bread and butter would be cheaper—to begin with.

IN his work, "The New Parliament," just issued, Mr. Saunders classifies the members as follows: Merchants, manufacturers, mine owners, etc., 199; ship owners, 20; lawyers, 128; army, 82; navy, 4; diplomatists, 8; chairman railway companies, 11; journalists, 15; civil and agricultural engineers, 10; bankers, 16; tenant farmers, 5; university professors, 3; brewers and wine merchants, 13; laborers, 2; member Royal Academy (Scotland), 1; medical professors, 5; civil and military tutor, 1; Presbyterian minister, 1; ex-dissenting minister, 1; ex-clergymen Established church, 2; country squires, magistrates, deputy lieutenants, sons of peers, baronets, etc., 125.

A CITIZEN of Orangebury, S. C., fell dead while engaged in prayer at a religious meeting there last month. What a fearful judgment for his impious presumption in attempting to dictate to the Almighty, and while so doing surrounding himself with others bent in the same unholy purpose! What a striking condemnation of prayer-meetings! Our friend, the Commercial Advertiser, which has almost reached its centennial year, attributes the sudden death to the extreme heat, which, it says, probably caused a stroke of apoplexy. We cannot credit this theory. We hav too often heard our theological friends discuss sudden deaths in theaters and such places, and they always attributed them to Providential judaments upon the victim for the sin he was committing in being in such places. If theologians don't understand this thing, who can? It is their business. We are, therefore, reluctantly compelled to believe that in this sad event the Almighty intended to stamp prayer and prayer-meetings with his disapproval in the most solemn form known to him.—Truth.

SPEAKING of Col. Ingersoll, the Washington Republic says: "He keeps away from the barrooms; he givs liberally to all good works, whether Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, or what not; his word is taken by everybody who ever had dealings with him, and nobody who has ever known him would ask for his bond. His house is an ideal Liberty Hall. He has no rules for himself or his family. They all do as they please. He has no time for going to bed or getting up. He sleeps when he is sleepy, eats when he is hungry, and rests when he is tired. A "regular life" he knows nothing about. Every member of his family does exactly as she pleases. He is never without company. His family consists of his wife, "a women without superstition," and two daughters, Eva, aged sixteen, and Maud, aged fifteen. He says his children never did a wrong in their lives, and they never had a secret from their parents. They, too, do exactly as they please. They were never reprimanded or refused a request in their lives.

THE Free Presbytery of Edinburgh appears not to be done with the case of Prof. Robertson Smith, who was called to account for alleged heterodoxy in his articles on the Bible in the "Encyclopedia Britannica." The long and short of the very tedious trial to which Prof. Smith was subjected may be summed up in saying that the verdict was substantially "Not guilty, but don't do it again." The Professor's prosecutors were unmindful of the fact that the Encyclopedia had been published only in part, and that several volumes were yet to appear which might contain other articles from his pen. The appearance of the volume recently issued has added fuel to the smoldering fire, and some of the brethren now want to make it hot for the Professor. His articles on "Haggai" and "Hebrew Literature" are considered open to grave criticisms. Some of the members of the Presbytery consider them just grounds of trial for heresy, and others think such a trial would savor of persecution, and tend to bring ecclesiastical authority into contempt. The College Committee is to examin carefully into Prof. Smith's views, and report in November. For the present the Professor retains his chair in Aberdeen College.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH resides at 20 Circus road, St. John's Wood, over a musical library, where harmoniums and American organs are sold and pianofortes are to be had on the hire system. He occupies only part of the premises, his suite of apartments being on the first floor. His two daughters reside with him, and assist him in editing the National Reformer. These young ladies do not bear much resemblance in feature to their father, whose Atheistic principles they hav thoroughly imbibed. They hav been successful candidates in the recent examinations in the science class in chemistry at South Kensington. As for Mr. Bradlaugh himself, he is a tall, stoutly-built man of 47 years of age. When at home he wears a working-suit of plain gray cloth. He has a square head, and a broad and massiv face. He is clean-shaven. His upper lip is thick and deep. His utterance is clear, measured, and distinct, and when engaged in conversation he uses his eyes with great effect, as if to impress one with the importance of every word he utters. In the large front room over the musical library, the windows of which command a view of a dairy and a public house, Mr. Bradlaugh edits his journal and transacts general business. The room is furnished with two large writing-tables, at one of which he sits and works, his sub-editor sitting at the other. The numerous shelves round the room are well stocked with books, chiefly of reference. A high desk and several chairs complete the furniture, which is of the usual office pattern.—Sun.

Events of the Week.

GLADSTONE, the British Prime Minister, is seriously ill.

THEY had a snowstorm on the Catskill mountains a few days ago.

THE chiefs and head men of the Utes hav signed a treaty of peace at Los Pinos, Col.

A LONG ISLAND deacon was recently fined ten dollars for horsewhipping his servant girl.

FIRES involving a loss of $325,000 occurred last week among some Buffalo planing mills.

KOKOMA, Indiana, was recently surprised by a shower of live fish about the size of minnows.

THE American exhibitors at the Australian International Exhibition received 228 awards.

THE Chilian admiral has notified the foreign ministers to leave Lima, as he intends to bombard that city.

A MAN in Kingston, N. C., was recently sent to jail for thirty days for kissing a lady contrary to her wishes.

THE Rev. T. B. Miller, Dean of the University of Medicine and Surgery in Philadelphia, has been arrested on a charge of forgery.

THE Egyptian obelisk is to be placed in Central Park, and preparations are being made to remove it from the steamer to its new site.

ONE of the witnesses who tried to clear the Rev. Mr. Kalloch, of San Francisco, of the charge of murder, has been convicted of perjury.

THE hostil Apaches who were recently driven from New Mexico into Mexico hav had several conflicts with Mexican troops, in which they were worsted.

THREE mine bosses were killed by death damp in a coal mine at Shenandoah, Pa., a few days ago. Two parties of rescuers were overcome by the damp and taken out unconscious.

TWO men were killed, five seriously injured, and many slightly hurt, by a collision between two Long Island trains on the 31st ult. There were three hundred passengers on the trains at the time.

THE bodies of the twenty men who were drowned in the Hudson River Tunnel last week still remain entombed. A large force of laborers hav been at work night and day, but as yet they hav not succeeded in getting into the tunnel.

ONE day last week a terrific hailstorm visited North Sandwich, Mass. The ground was covered three inches deep with hailstones an inch in diameter. Stone walls were thrown down, and cows, wagons, and boats were carried long distances through the air.

THE long silent volcano of Fuego, in Guatemala, has become activ, emitting a column of fire five hundred feet high. The surrounding country was illuminated for fifty miles, and clouds of dust and ashes are carried by the wind to enormous distances.

OLD man Bender, the notorious Kansas murderer who has evaded justice so long, has at last been captured and positivly identified at Fremont, Neb. The whereabouts of his murderous son and daughter, who helped in his bloody deeds, has been discovered.

THE superintendent of a Sunday-school at New Berlin, N. Y., recently thrashed his father-in-law, an old man of eighty, most brutally. The reason given for the inhuman abuse is that the old man persisted in smoking, in opposition to the wishes of his pious son-in-law.

AN imitation bull-fight in this city, on Saturday last, was presided over by Mr. Bergh, the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The bull-fight, of course, was a farce, as cruelty was not permitted, and cruelty is the essential part of a bull-fight.

DR. TANNER holds out well in his long fast. His looks do not indicate the terrible ordeal he has passed through: and though much weaker than last week, he is still able to take his daily drive through the Park. On Saturday, the 7th, at noon, he will hav completed his forty days without food.

The Godly Women of the Bible.—Continued.

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE 19TH CENTURY.

THE VIRGIN MARY.—CONTINUED.

The purification of the virgin, the presentation of the babe in the temple, and the scene there with Simeon and Anna are too instructive and prophetic to be passed over in silence, yet justice cannot be done this miraculous fiasco in these articles. The boy was circumcised on the eighth day and called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb (Luke ii, 21), and when the days of Mary's purification were accomplished they brought him to Jerusalem. Purification required thirty-three days after circumcision for the birth of a boy, and sixty-six from birth for a girl. It was twice as great a defilement to become the mother of a female child as a male. The learned commentators correct the "best copies" which read "their," declaring "it was the mother only who needed purifying from the legal uncleanness of child-bearing." As if a virgin would need purifying because she had borned God. Oh! oh! According to God's law, Mary was required to offer a lamb for a burnt-offering, and a turtle dove or a young pigeon for a sin offering. What sin had the immaculate conception committed? But she had to offer the sacrifice just the same as though she had become the mother of a common-sized baby-boy of nine pounds instead of being the mother of God. If the mother had no young sheep, she had to bring two doves or two young pigeons, and if this was beyond her means the Lord would let her off with fine flour as a substitute. He was not very particular what, but something he must and would hav (Lev. xii). Joseph and Mary were rather poor, for they brought the doves or pigeons.

As every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord (Luke ii, 23), the virgin presented her babe according to the law, "where herself would be sprinkled by the priest with the blood of her sacrifice." What heathenish mummery and senseless rites for any nation to observe, but how much more reprehensible when indorsed as a part of religious worship ordained by the Christian's God for his peculiar chosen people even though ages since. And a woman the subject of such ceremonies instituted by man under the pretense that God spoke in clouds from Mount Sinai, "Thus saith the Lord."

At the critical moment of the presentation of Jesus, in comes old Simeon, sent there "by the Spirit" with the Holy Ghost ("a living, conscious person") upon him. What a load the old gentleman must have had on his back, especially if this ghost was a large, heavy "person." It had been revealed to him by the Ghost, that he should not die until he had seen the Lord Christ. He knew at once that this boy was the Christ. So, "by the spirit," he seized him in his arms and ran on with a prophecy which the historian could put in his mouth after it was fulfilled. The fun of the whole story is Joseph and Mary marveled at the prophecy just as if Jesus had been a legitimate child, his mother received no angel visit from gentleman Gabriel or promises; neither Joseph in a dream that he was a Holy Ghost boy. Wonderful, that they had so soon forgotten all about the parentage of God! Then Simeon blessed them and made further predictions, which were unrecorded till long after the events took place, if they ever occurred. One passage only in Simeon's address was specially directed to Mary, and as the infallible commentators say "the exact purport of these words is doubtful," they are not worth the space of recording. Mary was very stupid for a mother after having had a child in such an unnatural manner, accompanied with such miraculous predictions as Gabriel made in regard to the child and herself.

At that instant came in Anna, a prophetess, who was of great age, not less than 103 years say the divines, for she had lived with a husband seven years from her virginity, and was then a widow of 84. She lived in the temple and did nothing but fast and pray night and day. Well, she too knew this forty days' baby "was he to whom all Israel looked for redemption in Jerusalem," which was false, for he neither redeemed Israel nor Jerusalem, but became God-forsaken in his dying agonies, being crucified for Sabbath-breaking, blasphemy, and sedition. After they had finished their ceremonies they went home to Nazareth, and thus ends this spirit episode, mentioned by none but Luke.

The next scene is quite impressive, finishing up Luke ii. It is where Jesus at the age of twelve for the first time went with his parents to Jerusalem, as was their custom every year, to the feast of the passover. This young Judean took occasion to remain behind to have a little chat in the temple with the learned doctors of the law. Going one day's journey before missing him, then turning back in search for the truant and finding him the third day thus employed, called forth this rebuke from his mother: "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing." So ignorant were his parents of his true mission, not withstanding all that had occurred, that they understood not his words when he answered: "How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business?" He went home, however, with them, and was subject to them; but Mary remembered all these smart, precocious sayings after he became a great preacher. One would "suppose" that she would have been expecting remarkable exploits of a boy born as never before was any child, and who was conceived by a ghost, even though he had a human mother, and that mother herself. The divines find it convenient to infer that Joseph died soon after this event, for he was never mentioned afterward, "having served the double end of being the protector of our Lord's virgin mother and a parent to Jesus," so they say.

Some additional statements and admissions by these knowing ones are worth copying. "From the time at which our Lord's ministry commenced, St. Mary is withdrawn almost wholly from sight. Four times only is the veil removed, which, not surely without a reason, is thrown over her. These four occasions are: 1. The marriage at Cana of Galilee (John ii, 1); 2. The attempt which she and his brethren made 'to speak with him' (Matt. xii, 46; Mark iii, 21, 31; Luke viii, 19); 3. The crucifixion; 4. The days succeeding the ascension (Acts i, 14). If to these we add the two references to her, the first by her Nazarene fellow-citizens (Matt. xiii, 54, 55; Mark vi, 1–3), the second by a woman in the multitude (Luke xi, 27), we have specified every event known to us in her life. It is noticeable that on every occasion of our Lord's addressing her, or speaking of her, there is a sound of reproof in his words, with the exception of the last words spoken to her from the cross."

That is true, and let the fact be repeated by anti-Bible believers—since Bible believers boast of it as a praiseworthy feat in their son of God—that he ignored his mother. Rev. Justin D. Fulton, D.D., former pastor of Tremont Temple church, Boston, Mass., in his zeal to repudiate Mariolatry (the worship of the Virgin Mary), to prove the idolatry of the Romish church, goes so far in his book, "The True Woman," published in 1869, as to dishonor Mary still worse than did Jesus. It will be remembered, when discovered after a three days' hunt, that Mary said, "Thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing." Hear what the Rev. Fulton says: "When Mary speaks, she ignores the miraculous conception, and calls him the son of Joseph."

Why should she not call Joseph his father? Who should know as well as a mother the fatherhood of her child? Nobody had then thought of any other parentage for the boy, as will be seen hereafter.

Reverend Fulton goes on to say, "Jesus rebuked her by asserting his sonship, and claiming God as father." What if he did? he was not the first twelve year old boy who has rebuked his mother. How did calling God his father assert his sonship? Pray explain, Justin. Did he not command his disciples and all his followers to call God father? Did he mean that they should ignore their earthly father, that no person had a human father who followed him, but were all conceived of the Holy Ghost as was claimed for himself?

Fulton's argument proves too much if it proves anything, and defeats itself. [It will be seen that the ungodly woman is here arguing from a biblical standpoint and as if such a man as Jesus Christ actually lived.]

Questions for Consideration.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: We Liberals of Hamburg, Erie county, N. Y., do respectfully ask you to publish the following, which we quote from an able law journal of May 18, 1880, known as the Central Law Journal, of St. Louis; and we hope that it will be the means of encouraging those who endeavor to imitate nature's forms, either as painters or as carvers, or by any other way:

A. C. STOLTING.

[From the Central Law Journal.]

Will some one be good enough to tell us something about Mr. Anthony Comstock of New York? Who is he? What are his duties and powers? From extracts we find in the newspapers concerning this individual, he seems to be regarded by a certain class of publishers in about the same light that the Russian student of revolutionary ideas regards a member of the czar's police. We learn from these extracts that he claims to be the guardian of the morals of the American nation. We learn likewise that if a work of art happens to be more true to nature that he believes it should be, or if a book or pamphlet contains anything which in his opinion even grown-up people ought not to know, this remarkable person has only to shake his head to hav the offensiv works disappear from public view.

Thus a New York storekeeper was exhibiting in his window a copy of a historical work by a Dutch painter, when Mr. Comstock happening that way nodded his head, and the picture was not.

Still later, we learn, he has looked upon M. Zola's latest novel, and "Nana" is to be read no more by the people of the United States, that is, if the publishers are foolish enough to obey his nod.

There is something ludicrous in this—in the idea that any one man in this country shall decree for its citizens what they shall see and what they shall read. We recommend the publishers of the American edition of "Nana," and all publishers, not to be frightened, and we herewith ten de them a little legal advice for which we shall charge nothing. This is that if Mr. Comstock or any one else undertakes to seize any picture or book, or other article which they may manufacture or sell, upon his own conclusion that it is obscene, indecent, or immoral, let them commence at once an action of trespass against him. He will then find what no one so far, we judge, has attempted to teach him, that a man's property can not be taken from him without due process of law. He will then probably realize the fact that the office of guardian of the public morals is one which is beset with difficulties, and which is hardly worth holding.

We commenced these remarks with three questions and we will conclnde them with two more: Is there in this republic such an officer as a public censor, clothed with dictatorial powers, and not responsible to the people? Is this Mr. Comstock the same person who has more than once been charged by publishers with seeking to obtain money from them by blackmail? If any one can answer these queries we shall be obliged to him.

[From the N. Y. Tribune.]

A Talk with Bradlaugh.

To the Editor of the Tribune, SIR: I had finished my dinner and was toying with a useful but ungraceful British spoon while listening to Mr. John McCullough's criticisms on English acting. It was half-past seven o'clock, and the front door bell rang violently. "Who do you suppose that is?" I asked. "I hav not the remotest idea," replied the popular American tragedian. "Guess." "I am not good at guessing." "Try. Who is the most talked about man in England?" "The Prince of Wales?" I shook my head. "Well, if not the Prince of Wales, it must be Bradlaugh." "Right." While the American tragedian had been guessing the bell had been ringing more and more ferociously. Seizing his hat, which the ideal handmaiden of the period had carefully placed upon a wet table, the gladiator strode from the room, cleared the stair at a bound and opened the inhospitable door. "Why," exclaimed Mr. Bradlaugh, as his great Beecher-like face and figure entered, "it's more difficult getting into your lodgings than into the House of Commons, from which, by the way, I can only be absent an hour and ten minutes." There was no time to be lost, so we immediately plunged in medias res. I had not seen Mr. Bradlaugh for several years. He had much to tell, and at last touched upon his election to Parliament and the actions which hav been brought against him.

"Two actions," he said "hav already been brought against me, and now a third is threatened. These actions are brought under the Parliamentary Oaths Act of 1866, which makes it an offense to sit and vote without having taken and subscribed the oath of allegiance. Another section of the same act provides that every person for the time being permitted by law to make a solemn declaration or affirmation in lieu of an oath, may make an affirmation in lieu of the oath provided by the act, and that in such case the declaration or affirmation shall hav the same value as the oath; that is to say, if I am really a person under the Parliamentary Oaths Act of 1866 entitled to affirm, then the affirmation I took on Friday morning, July 2d, is as good as an oath in law, and I am not liable for any penalty. I think the first action will come to grief, because it was begun too hurriedly. The rapidity with which the writ was served upon me makes me believe that it was actually issued before I had taken my seat in the House. In the second action the solicitor is likely to come to grief, he having had the impudence to serve me with the writ in the lobby of the House—aye, on the very door-mat of the House itself—and has thus committed a contempt of our ancient privileges."

"Pray, what do you call ancient privileges?"

"Why, for example, a member of Parliament is practically free from civil, but not from criminal arrest. He cannot be forced to serve on juries. He has a right to a clear way to the House of Commons. Formerly he could not be arrested for debt. Now, no one can. But to return. I shall, if possible, endeavor to hav all proceedings against me suspended until one action is tried, or ask for a consolidation of all the actions. The ground of action is that the acts under which I hav been permitted to affirm, in courts of law, only apply to witnesses. These acts are the Evidence Amendment Acts, passed in 1869 and '70, in consequence of a very heavy litigation I had with a man named De Rin, who owed me several hundred pounds. Having no legal defense, he objected to my giving evidence because I was an Atheist. Fighting him through all the courts for three years I beat him. He then became bankrupt, and I lost in debt and costs £1,500. This, with other similar things, made me a poor man."

"Do these acts only apply to witnesses?"

"Yes, and undoubtedly it was never dreamed that a member of Parliament would take advantage of them. My contention is that the Parliamentary Oaths Act gives the right to every person entitled to affirm in lieu of an oath anywhere, to affirm in lieu of an oath in the House of Commons. Those who oppose me say: 'Even admitting your claim, you are not entitled to affirm in Parliament, because under the Evidence Amendment Acts the presiding judge has to be satisfied that the oath will not be binding on your conscience. Nothing of this sort has happened in the House of Commons, therefore you are not protected by the acts.'

"My reply is that, supposing the argument to be correct, the Tories hav been fools enough to provide us with a good defense. The second select Parliamentary committee reported that I ought not to be allowed to take the oath, as, in their opinion, that oath would not be binding on my conscience. Sir Hardinge Gifford, by his motion, which he succeeded in carrying, got the House to order that I should neither be allowed to take the oath nor to affirm. A part of Sir Hardinge Gifford's resolution relating to affirmation has been rescinded in point of fact, though not in point of form, so that at present there stands unrevoked the order of the House that I must not swear. This order has been intimated to me by the Speaker, who has refused to allow me to swear, such refusal being based on the judgment of the select committee that the oath had no binding effect on my conscience. By their own desire to shut me out of the House of Commons the Tories hav furnished me with the legal answer to the legal objection. Are they not considerate? These actions cannot be tried before November; meanwhile, I shall keep on sitting, and voting as often as I can, the penalty being £500 a time. Judge of the expense of this luxury when I tell you that on this day's orders are thirty private bills on each of which there is one vote, and thirty-four public bills on some of which there will be twelve votes, so that at £500 a vote I shall hav a tolerably expensiv day's voting! £32,000!"

Here Mr. Bradlaugh laughed heartily, having in former years been indebted to the government several million of pounds, for daring to issue The National Reformer, and yet been none the worse for it. Continuing the conversation, he said: "With a view in all probability to embarass me, one action is brought in the Queen's Bench Division, and the second is brought in the Common Pleas Division; hence it is quite possible, though hardly probable, that we may hav Lord Chief Justice Cockburn deciding one way and Lord Chief Justice Coleridge deciding another. Thus shall be exemplified the glorious uncertainty of the law. If the decision be against me I shall carry the case to the House of Lords. By that time I hope to hav broken the hearts and purses of one and all of the Tory plaintiffs."

"But surely, Mr. Bradlaugh, the House of Lords will decide against you. Being a more conservativ body it will giv you less support than the House of Commons."

"You are right in your second statement, but wrong in your first. The House of Lords, en masse, would assuredly oppose me; but you forget that it is the few law lords, most of whom are retired chancellors, that decide law appeals. Time was when all the lords voted in law cases, but they hav refrained from doing so since the famous case of Daniel O'Connell came before them, thirty-five years ago. When O'Connell and several others were found guilty of treason in Dublin, the case was carried on error to the Lords as ultimate court of appeal. The prejudice against O'Connell then was as strong as it is now against me, and many lords came to the House intending to vote for confirmation of the verdict without reference to law. A leading member of their body imploring them not to allow party prejudice to determin a legal decision, the lords walked out of the House, refrained from voting, and the judgment against O'Connell was reversed. Since then only law peers hav voted on law cases in the House of Lords."

"Suppose, Mr. Bradlaugh, the House of Lords should make you the exception which is said to prove the rule?" To this question the member for Northampton preserved a grim but eloquent silence. He looked unutterable things; speech deserted him until asked whether the opposition to his entering Parliament did not cause him some sleepless nights.

"No. I lie awake only when uncertain of what I am going to do. I slept on the night of my arrest. I lay awake on the night of my release, as it was entirely unexpected. I never dreamed of so short a struggle, and therefore had made no preparations for it. Of course my excessiv egotism helps me a great deal. Judging from my past, I feel that I am a match for them."

Previously, Mr. P. A. Taylor, M.P., had told me that Mr. Bradlaugh, when addressing the House of Commons, had preserved a wonderful self-control, though speaking with an eloquence that "withered the House" and extorted from cool reporters the exclamation, "Here is a second Bright and Gladstone!" Curious to know what Mr. Bradlaugh's sensations were on this historic occasion, I asked him. "Why should I hav been agitated? I was not in the wrong. Remember my life, and remember that I hav gone through far worse ordeals. I confess, however, that I was touched when, in going out of the House, Mr. Taylor and several others shook hands with me. Kindness moves me far more than anything else, and I very nearly broke down completely when, in the lobby, Mrs. Ernestine L. Rose kissed me. It is quite possible for an Atheist to hav feelings and to tell the truth; therefore believe me when I assure you it is utterly false that I went out of my way or made any fuss in the House on the occasion of my demand to affirm. The fuss was made by my antagonists. The facts are given in the second Parliamentary committee's report, and I hav been deliberately misrepresented. As to the oath, I did not say a word in the House."

"Only a year ago, Mr. Bradlaugh, when society was deeply engaged in discussing Mr. Labouchere in connection with several amusing law suits which he has since gained, I said to a party of Tories, 'What fun it would be to see Mr. Labouchere and Mr. Bradlaugh in the House of Commons. There are two men who would make Parliamentary debates worth reading, and I predict that such things will come to pass.' The Tories cried, 'Never!' and were greatly shocked. I little dreamed that my prediction would so soon be fulfilled, and that you two Bogies would represent the same town. What do you think of your colleague?"

"I hav found him one of the most straightforward, honorable gentlemen I ever met in my life. I met him with prejudices against him. I never had seen him until the election at Northampton, and while, of course, as my colleague, I should hav expected him to hav claimed a fair representation of Northampton, he has done much more than I either expected or had a right to ask. He has fought for me just as one intelligent friend ought to fight for another, and his perfect tact has made my battle far easier than it otherwise would hav been. A weaker man than he would hav been constantly apologizing for my unpopular views on religion and other subjects. Mr. Labouchere has recognized my right to hold my own opinions, and has refused to allow them to be a matter of debate. I shall never forget the manliness of his attitude. He is a man of great resource, doing and saying the right thing at the right time."

"Some years ago, if I am not mistaken, Mr. Bradlaugh, the present Prime Minister helped to defeat your election. What do you think of him now?"

"I think he stands out in this country full head and shoulders above everybody else. He is the only statesman we've got among a varied assortment of small pottery manufacturers."

"There are persons who call him mad."

"Lunatics think everybody mad but themselves."

"And some call him a man of quirks."

"So's Bismarck."

"Do you compare Liberal Gladstone with Bismarck?"

"No; if I were German or lived in Germany, Bismarck would either hang me or ——"

"Well, why don't you finish your sentence?"

Mr. Bradlaugh laughed, and added, "I'd hate Bismarck, or overthrow him." Perhaps it is just as well for the great Chancellor's peace of mind that the Kaiser has one turbulent subject the less.

"Where do you find time to edit The National Reformer?" I inquired, after we had rambled up and down the universe.

"I don't. Mrs. Besant does most of the work, and well she does it. The World states that my daughters assist me in editing the paper. This is incorrect. I think all women should be employed, so my daughters do the summary of news, amounting to about two columns every week, for which I pay them a regular salary."

By this time the clock hands pointed to 8:40 o'clock. The hour and ten minutes had elapsed, the obnoxious M. P. was wanted by the Liberal "whip," and after inviting me to his lecture on John Wilkes, to be given three nights afterward at South Place chapel, Finsbury, the scene of M. D. Conway's clever preaching, Mr. Bradlaugh rushed down stairs, jumped into a hansom and drove off to St. Stephens'. Just before the door shut, I asked Mr. Bradlaugh whether he could not sum up the House of Commons in an epigrammatic sentence. He retorted laughingly, "The House of Commons is hardly big enough to go into one!"

Last evening I drove three miles into the city to hear Mr. Bradlaugh lecture on John Wilkes. Although I arrived three-quarters of an hour before the exercises began the chapel was crowded with well-behaved workingmen—a fact which made me recall the statement of one of the cleverest men in the present British Cabinet. "Bradlaugh," he said several years ago, "is the only man in England who has a following." And this led me to remember Bradlaugh's once saying that people had only to try to collect an audience to discover its difficulty. He has no such difficulty. The applause which greeted his appearance testified to his popularity among a class unknown at dinner parties, yet not to be despised by those who want votes. Mr. Bradlaugh's address on Wilkes was always effectiv, often humorous, and at times attained heights of impassioned eloquence that made the chapel resound with tremendous applause. It was extemporaneous, as are all of his addresses; it was strung upon that thread of satire which is one of his most powerful weapons. The subject lent itself to the issues of the day, and every reference to the speaker's position excited an enthusiastic response. "There was very little to attract in Wilkes' private history," said Bradlaugh, "but we should remember how unfriendly history was to him. Judge him by myself. Take the literature of the past few weeks, for example, and write my history by it. Will it be truthful? Some of the artists who hav drawn my portrait hav not flattered me." "The right to rule," he declared, "is a sovereign right, and the people are sovereign," a dogma that received frantic approval. Referring to the Whigs and Tories of a hundred years ago, Mr. Bradlaugh said that the Whigs believed the right to rule was a sovereign right, limited to a few Whig families. "The Tory doctrin was one of divine right, very mad but very consistent. You may pity them as belonging to an order of things we are fast growing out of, and our children will wonder that it could ever hav existed. I hav always maintained that our form of government can at any moment be changed by Parliamentary means. Parliament has the right whenever it likes to put a lever under the throne and pitch it over." This announcement was rapturously applauded.

"The House of Commons," said Mr. Bradlaugh, "is higher than the people. It is the delegate of the nation to be used for, never against it. How would the House act with another Wilkes? The day has gone by for a repetition of last century. Public opinion has grown. The House of Commons is an assembly of which we may be fairly proud, but if the day comes when the House sets itself against the nation, then if there be no Wilkes, the intelligence of the nation will stand, as Wilkes did, to defend the cause of liberty." My imperfect report of a few salient sentences givs but a poor idea of Mr. Bradlaugh's sense and eloquence. The Americans with me were as deeply impressed as were the sons of toil before and behind them, and those who fancy that Charles Bradlaugh is a big fish only when in the company of minnows, know little the man who is destined to play a leading part in the future politics of England. If he would spike one of his enemy's guns, he should cease to drop his h's. Let him pick them up, and, as an orator, he will command even the approbation of Tories.

KATE FIELD.

London, July 12, 1880.

WATER, when it becomes steam, is expanded 1,700 times its original bulk.

Humanity the Only True Religion.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Is there in nature anything more beautiful to behold than all her glory, with her mountains and dales, flowers, landscapes, and so forth? And when we begin to study man, with all his construction, how beautiful a study! therefore man is the only true study of human progress. How wonderful it is to know your fellow-beings by their looks! Not that alone, but to advance in this glorious science. But the question arises, Is every human being equal alike? To which I answer, That depends on how one is constructed. One has more of the moral nature in him. The thief is not compared with the one that is true to his fellow-men, nor is the bigot or hypocrit compared with those men who are true to nature. Again, some say that those people who go to church are the only good people. How do you make that out? Is there anything in humanity that is true to itself to be condemned? I deny it. This wretched doctrin! What would you think of a Christian that goes to church every Sunday twice, that cheats, lies, slanders? Would you not think him one of the worst of humankind?

Any man that loves his child, his wife, does the very thing that makes home joyful, is, in my estimation, the only true Christian. His religious views do not make him better; 'tis his qualities one must look at—his principles. The mind makes the man.

But again, some say we must believe in a certain book because the most of them do. Well, if that's true, perhaps you must. Well, I say if a man must believe in a thing, then it's a mighty poor believe. There are certainly more ignorant than intelligent to be found, but therefore the ignorant are not be condemned for it. Man should not always believe what he sees in print. He should judge; he should reason. Reason is everything, it is the key to knowledge. If I read a book and don't believe in it, then I ought to say so, and so I will; but some say if you don't believe in a certain book you will be damned for it. What for? for my honest opinions? Well, if there is a God that would damn one for his honest thoughts, then I say, Go on. You're welcome. I will hav my opinion, and if he has given me reason to think, why I surely can't for my life see that he can make it a crime, to punish me forever.

Supposing a father takes his son to a tailor and makes him a present of a suit of clothes, why should that father punish his child for putting them on after he givs them to him? The people are beginning to think, to reason for themselvs. I don't want any one to do my thinking; then why should I go to a church to hear a man trying to stuff down my throat what he himself knows not to be true? What little brains I possess I want to make better use of. I say humanity is the only true religion. Make your fellow-creatures happy, love your child, bring it up to true manhood, and then God cannot afford to damn such a man.

JULIUS WAGNER.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Concerning the Iowa Convention.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The Sioux City & Pacific Railroad will sell return tickets for one-fifth the regular rates to all who pay full fare over that line going to the Convention.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road will giv the same reduction to all parties who pay full fare to Mason City. At Mason City the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul connects with the Iowa Central for Marshalltown. The latter road will sell return tickets for one-third usual rates to all who pay full fare going. These reductions will be of especial benefit to our northern Iowa friends. The Secretary of the Convention will issue certificates to all applying for them who hav attended the Convention, entitling them to these reduced rates.

The Boardman House terms for Conventions are two dollars per day, unless two occupy the same bed, when they will be accomodated for $1 50 per day. The Boardman is near the Opera House, where the Convention will be held.

The best arrangements possible will be made with the other hotels, and the facts heralded through our papers or furnished to visitors upon their arrival in the city.

Bro. O. A. Phelps will be with us and help to make the grandest convention ever held in the West. Friend Phelps also desires to make arrangements for lectures in Iowa for the two weeks or more preceding the meeting. Address him at Box 991, Kansas City, Mo.

Last but by no means least, T. C. Leland is coming. There are thousands of Liberals in the West who want to see the irrepressible "special correspondent" of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Leland, Parry, Phelps, Jamieson, Lake, Clark, all stars of the first magnitude. Don't neglect this opportunity of listening to some of the best speakers in the Liberal ranks. Come and bring your friends with you. Let us organize Iowa and reach hands of fraternal greeting to our sister states. We must go to work in earnest, and begin at the foundation. Educate the children. This is our especial work. The Liberal campaign is no holiday parade. It means stern work, but very agreeable work to all those not born constitutionally tired and mentally indolent.

Address me at Norway, Benton county, Iowa.

Shall I meet you at Marshalltown?

E. C. WALKER.

W. F. Jamieson's Appointments.

Lectured at Monmouth, Illinois, July 25th. Announced for July 28th and August 1st; Marshalltown, Iowa, Liberal Convention, August 27th, 28th; Kirksville, Missouri, Aug. 29th, 30th, and 31st. He declines all Eastern calls for the coming year. Will receive engagements in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Nebraska, and Missouri. Address 172 and 174 Clark street, Chicago, Illinois.

CANNONS were first used at the siege of Alzerizas in 1781.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1880.

What Objections to Christianity?

REPLY TO MR. MAIR'S FOURTH LETTER.

MR. G. M. MAIR, Dear Sir: As I will have time, before taking steamer for Europe, to make some reply to your fourth letter, I will avail myself of the opportunity of doing so, though I may not have time to hunt up and quote authorities as much as might be desirable. If I continue my remarks at considerable length, you will have ample time to reply during my absence.

You seem the most displeased because I suppose that Jesus was begotten by the process by which every other being who has had birth and existence was begotten, and appear shocked because I infer that what I regard as the mythical character of his divine parentage was brought about in a similar way to the analogous feats by Jove and other heathen deities. While I wish to treat your religious views with the same deference as those of a believer in Brahmanism, Buddhism, or Mohammedanism, you must not expect I can regard the absurd legend of a spirit, an invisible god, or a ghost begetting an offspring upon the person of a human female with the same awe and veneration which you do, and you must permit me to look at it in a practical, common sense light. I regard the whole story as a crude, bungling absurdity, wholly impossible in fact, and wholly devoid of delicacy, as it is of truth or probability. Unfortunately this Christian myth rests upon the very slimmest possible testimony. We have the narratives, or what purport to be the narratives, of four persons who give to the world all the facts, or what purport to be facts, relative to the reputed founder of Christianity. What then do we see? If Jesus was begotten by the Eternal Father, the "God self-existent, incorporeal, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent, immutable Creator, Upholder and Ruler of everything," upon the person of the young Jewess named Mary, to be an incarnate God, a Savior, for the salvation of the world, a propitiation of the anger of God, an atonement for the sins of the world, it was the most remarkable event that ever took place in the world, and should have been related with the most exact particularity, and each narrator should have described the process carefully and minutely, especially as the eternal happiness or misery of countless millions of the human race depends upon whether they believe it or not.

What are the facts in the matter? Two of the narrators say not a word about it, and pay no more attention to it than if there was not a word of truth in it, or that it was not of the slightest consequence; whereas the other two allude to it in the most unsatisfactory manner, and disagree widely with each other. Matthew rests his version of the affair upon a dream which he asserts Joseph had, while Luke bases it upon a vision which he states Mary had. You can hardly deny that dreams and visions are of an extremely unreliable character and afford the poorest proof in the world upon which to found any theory, system, or belief. This is the case when the dream is known to have been dreamed and the vision known to have been seen, which conditions, in this Jesus story, are wholly lacking. Joseph does not tell us that he dreamed a dream, nor does Mary tell us she had a vision. What authority had Matthew for saying that sixty years, or a hundred and sixty years before, Joseph had a dream? And what authority had Luke for saying that Mary, a part of a century, or more than a century before, had a vision, and that an angel spoke to her and told her what the Holy Ghost, or the Highest, was going to do to her? Neither of these worthies make the slightest pretension to having had a revelation in the matter, or that they wrote by inspiration. They simply tell their stories as we used to repeat the nursery story of Jack the Giant Killer when we were young. The incongruities and improbabilities of the story are quite as great as those of little Jack.

Matthew tells us how when Mary was espoused to Joseph, and before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost; whereupon Joseph thought to put her away, and probably would have done so had he not dreamed the matter out, and thus learned that the Holy Ghost was the author of what had been done while he was away. There are several features of this story very far from being clear and intelligible, and some of them may be mentioned. We are not told who found Mary to be with child. We are not told how it was found to be of the Holy Ghost. We are not told what are the distinguishing features or symptoms exhibited by a young woman when pregnant by the Holy Ghost, not exhibited when the child is of other paternity. We are not told what tests were employed in arriving at the decision. No certificate of physician or midwife is given. We are not informed how it was known that Joseph and Mary had not "come together," nor if he had not come there that some other tangible, real person had not done so in his place. The fact that somebody said, two, three, or four generations after the event occurred, that Joseph had a dream that satisfied him that the matter was all right is not wholly satisfactory to incredulous people like the Infidels of the present day. You may be perfectly convinced of the truth of the story, but I am not. You may believe Matthew's yarn, but I do not. There is not the slightest proof that a word of it is true, nor could the person who wrote it possibly know whether it was true.

If an old man in the present day should marry a young girl, and after a few months she should be found pregnant, and he should insist that he was not the father of the unborn babe, but that he had had a dream which explained it all—that a ghost was the father of the child, people would not believe a word of it. You, with all the faith you have, and which you count a virtue, would not believe it. It could not be true. And if some credulous people even did believe it, that would not make it true. Falsehood never becomes truth because it is believed. No, Mr. Mair, a claim of such a conception, of such a parentage, would not be believed now though the girl herself, her husband, and all her connections swore to it before a dozen magistrates. I insist that the story is no more probable, no more possible, to be true of a girl eighteen hundred and eighty years ago, than now. The laws of nature have not changed a particle in that time. If it is impossible to-day for a female to be impregnated by a ghost, or without coming in contact with a person of the male sex, it was equally as impossible eighteen hundred and eighty years ago. If it could be done then, it can now; and I insist that we have no grounds—no right—to believe that something occurred eighteen hundred years ago which can not take place to-day. But even if it did occur then, we have no proof of it whatever. If Joseph dreamed it took place, that would by no means prove it. We have no authority that his dreams were reliable, or that they should be taken as evidence in a matter of such immense consequence as the salvation of the world.

We not only do not know that Joseph had a dream about his wife's pregnancy but we do not know that Matthew said he had. If Matthew had said so, it would by no means amount to proof. Matthew had no more means of knowing what Joseph dreamed than I have of knowing what you dream. If long after you were dead I should write what you dreamed sixty years before, what would it amount to? Could it possibly prove an impossible occurrence? Could a miracle be established on such testimony? No, of course not. It would not amount to anything. But in this Jesus story we have not even as much as that. We have not the word of Matthew that Joseph had a dream. It was not Matthew who said Joseph dreamed. I will be able to show you further along that Matthew is not the author of the gospel in the New Testament which goes by his name. In the first place he does not say he was the author of it. Nobody else in connection with the gospel says he was the author of it. There is not the slightest proof that it was known to have an existence till the last half of the second century—more than one hundred and fifty years after Joseph's apocryphal dream.

When mention is made by the early Christian writers of a legend, called a gospel, which was by Matthew, it was one written in Hebrew, while there is no proof that the one in the New Testament named after Matthew was ever known in Hebrew. It was in Greek, and could not have been written by Matthew who was a Hebrew. It is evidently a compilation made up from legends and the stories of two or more persons, put together in a clumsy and imperfect manner, and was not written by Matthew or any one who was an eye-witness of the events narrated, or who knew anything of the matters detailed. It was in all probability compiled and fixed up in the after part of the second century by some interested priest or designing person, and is no more proof that Mary was impregnated by a ghost, or even that Joseph dreamed she was, than the idle tale that a short distance above the earth is another country occupied by giants, is proved by the story of Jack and his bean-stalk. One is just about as reliable as the other.

You get no more proof from Luke than you do from Matthew. He only relates the account of the vision which he ascribes to Mary, and does not confirm the story about Joseph's dream. There is not the slightest proof that Luke attached any importance to the dream story. He does not notice it at all. If that dream established the manner of Mary's pregnancy why did he not allude to it? The fact that he did not proves conclusively that he either knew nothing about it, or did not consider it of the slightest value. But his story is equally frivolous and unworthy of belief. He was not present when Mary had a vision, and could not possibly know anything about it. He could not know what Gabriel said, or whether what he predicted ever took place. He makes no claim to writing by inspiration, or that he had a revelation. When he sets out at the beginning of his story he explicitly says, "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word, it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto them in order, most excellent Theophilus," thus showing that he wrote of himself and without divine aid, and simply wrote those things that were matters of common rumor. What he said of Mary's vision, he must have drawn from his own imagination, or committed to writing the vague rumors and legends that were then in existence. As he did not see the angel, as he did not hear what he said, nor what Mary said, as he did not see the Holy Ghost or the Highest, as he knew nothing about what took place between them, he is not a competent witness touching those events he pretends to relate, and would not be so considered in any court in the civilized world. It matters not what he says the angel said or what Mary said, what the Holy Ghost was to do or Mary was to do, it is all hearsay or fiction, and is not entitled to the slightest consideration.

And further, there are slight grounds for believing that Luke wrote the account ascribed to him, or that it was written in the first century. There is no account that Luke's gospel was known in the first century or before the latter part of the second. The probabilities are that he did not write a word of it. If he did write it he attempted to narrate many things which he was not a witness of and knew nothing about. So that all that is attributed to Luke is a rumor of a rumor, a recital of legends and traditions. Such a narrative of a vision—in itself possessing the very slightest value—is not entitled to confidence or belief. So if Luke did write it, it amounts to very little, and if he did not write it, it amounts to still less.

Thus the whole structure upon which you base the salvation of the world, and the hope of escape from eternal torture in hell for billions and trillions of human beings, rests upon the baseless fabric of a dream and the groundless claims of a vision, unsupported by the least bit of evidence in the world. If the story of the miraculous conception of young Mary is true, it is of the greatest importance that the world should know it, and if Mark and John were commissioned to write the truth about the entry of Jesus into the world, they were either derelict in their duty or they did not regard the legend as true or worth repeating. As John is supposed to have been more intimate with Jesus than either of the other three evangelists, better acquainted with his true inwardness than Luke or Matthew, and as he has nothing to say about the wonderful affair of Jesus being begotten by a ghost, he evidently had never heard anything about that godly proceeding, or he thought it was best to have nothing to say about it. It was the same with Mark. He was either ignorant of that overshadowing affair, or did not believe it was true. It is clear he was less in the dream and vision line than Matthew and Luke. On any other grounds it is extremely difficult to account for the silence of Mark and John. They noticed several unimportant events, the same as did the other two, but in not breathing a word about the marvelous paternity of Jesus they clearly prove they did not believe it.

It seems to annoy you to have me suppose for a moment, admitting that Jesus was begotten by Jehovah, the Holy Ghost, or the Highest, that it was done by the same process by which every other case of the kind has been performed. I can hardly understand this. If you admit that Jehovah is the author of the mode of procreation that has ever been in use, that there is no other mode known, and perhaps none other possible, and you insist that he wished to beget a son with a human mother, there is no good grounds for claiming that he condemned his own plan and adopted some other. You have no authority, in the dream or vision story, to come to any such conclusion. There is not a word said or a hint given that the same process was not used in begetting Jesus that was employed in begetting Abraham, Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, Solomon and everybody else that ever lived. It matters little whether the idea of Jehovah's begetting a child in the same way that every child has been begotten since the morning of time is shocking to your sensibilities or not; you have no good grounds for being shocked that God should make use of his own law, or adopt his own universal plan; and I repeat, you have not the slightest grounds for speaking disparagingly of it. Until you can show that a human being was ever begotten without the presence of passion, you have no grounds for claiming that Jesus was so begotten. If there is a divine institution in existence, it must be the perpetuation of the human race, and the bringing into existence, new individualities—new persons, new souls. It is extremely questionable whether you are justified in condemning this grand plan, or even in insinuating that Jehovah would be wrong in adopting it and making use of it; and until you can tell us explicitly how it was done, you have no authority to declare how it was not done.

I, of course, do not wish to be unnecessarily irreverent, or to treat with levity that which you regard as solemn, and very sacred, and I trust you will have the same regard for my views, but I cannot deny that I feel no more veneration for Jehovah than I do for Brahma, Ormuzd, Osiris, Jove, Allah, and several others of those big gods. In fact I think I can show that his reputed record is less respectable than theirs, and that he is much less amiable in temper and deportment. If the account the Bible gives of him can be relied upon he was formerly greatly subject to outbursts of passionate anger and ebullitions of vengeance. There is every reason to believe he abounded in passion and vehemency, so if he decided to beget a son I assert you have not the slightest grounds for claiming that passion had nothing to do with it. I can see no more impropriety in supposing that Jehovah was a passionate deity than Vishnu or Jove.

You also again object to Jesus' being called a demigod. It is not easy for me to see that you do this with good reason. Demigod means half-god. If Jesus had a god for a father, he must have been half a god. He certainly derived about half his nature and existence from his mother. She must have sustained him through the months of gestation and for perhaps the same period after his birth. Of course then he was half human. I have heard Christian clergymen ever since I was a child expatiating on Jesus' human nature and his divine nature. It is clear, then, that if he was part god, he was a demigod, and that would seem to be honor enough. There have been a very limited number of demigods who have had a real existence, and it must be regarded as an honor to be a genuine, simon-pure demigod.

I will not deny that you have a perfect right to form your own opinions as to the nature and origin of Jesus, as well as of the mode by which he came into existence, and I claim the same right for myself. Your right may be considered somewhat akin to the party who was once viewing a large painting of Daniel in the lions' den. The painting was not a first-class execution, and the party had some doubt as to the identity of the figures, and meekly inquired of the exhibitor which was Daniel and which the lions. The brief reply was, "Oh, you pays your money, and you takes your choice." So let you and I agree to allow each other to get our money's worth the best way we can and arrive at our own conclusions. If you wish to regard Jesus as all God, I give my consent; and if I am forced to the conclusion that he was not at all God, you will be equally complaisant; and should either of us wish to compromise the matter and agree that he was half and half, a demigod, let us not have any unfriendliness about it. In leaving the subject, however, I will remark that if we accept the story and the theory of the divine paternity of Jesus, we must conclude that father and mother were equally interested in the process. By God's choosing an earthly female to be the mother of his son, he must have adopted his own natural mode of producing a son. Had he wished to perform an astounding miracle, he would have produced this son without the agency or co-operation of a woman at all. He might, perhaps, have brought him direct from heaven, already begotten, already grown up, and ready for business. In that way there would have been far less grounds for supposing that passion, on the part of either father or mother, had aught to do with the transaction, and far less reasons for doubting the whole story.

I beg to assure you that I was aware Sakia Muni was one of the names of Buddha, or that Gautama was another. These were really his names, while Buddha was his title, or office, as the Savior, the Christ, the Messiah, the Redeemer, the Anointed, etc., are applied to Jesus. I am also aware that Alcides was a name applied to Hercules. There were several by that name. The same with Thammuz, Atys, Quirinius, and others of the old mythical divinities and demi-divinities; nearly all of them had more than one name, and in this way possibly they "counterfeited" Jesus, who lived a thousand years later and had some twenty names. Yes, all the gods and demigods had more than one name, and conflicting traditions exist in reference to them. I will not pretend to be responsible for the unity of their names, nor the unity of the tales and pretensions connected with them. Though two names are used for each, it does not follow that it is "slovenly" (you must be fond of that word, as you use it two or three times). If all the names applied to Jehovah, Jesus, etc., were used, it might appear "slovenly" to some, but it would hardly be a proper term, perhaps, to apply to the catalogue. If in speaking of Jesus I should sometimes say Christ, the Redeemer, the Messiah, the Anointed, Emanuel, the Prince of Peace, the Sun of Righteousness, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Wonderful, Counselor, the Bridegroom, the Lamb of God, the Captain of our Salvation, Son of God, or the Son of Man, would you deem it specially "slovenly?" In copying the names from any given writer, it is probably well to take the same names he uses, whether it is Sakia Muni or Buddha, Alcides or Hercules, Thammuz or Adonis, and so on. For our argument, also, it matters very little whether all the saviors which the world has believed in were crucified or not, or whether the mothers of them were all virgins or not. As I remarked in my last letter, there are certainly enough of them; you can throw out fully half and still have enough left.

The first proposition I attempt to prove is that the idea of virgin and child was not original with Christianity, that the belief of God having a son by an earthly female was not first devised by Christians, and that the dogmas, rites, sacraments, and ceremonies as held to and used by Christians were believed in and used by pagans hundreds of years before. If I have not yet proved this, I trust I will be able to do so before we are done with the subject.

It does not follow that because I have introduced the names of some forty saviors or demigods, in which some portions of the inhabitants of the world have believed, I must prove that they all had a real existence, or that there are no discrepancies or disagreements in the stories pertaining to them. It does not follow, either, that because I mentioned the names of some sixteen saviors who were believed to have been crucified I should absolutely prove that all were crucified. If I show that a part of them—even four, three, two, or one—were believed to have been crucified hundreds of years before the time of Jesus, I have accomplished what I undertook—I have proved my first proposition. I am not required to give the genealogy, history, and all the traditions of each of these myths. It would be too tedious and voluminous for our purpose. Neither is it necessary to go into a full examination of the old oriental religions with a view to tracing the resemblances or parallelisms between them and Christianity. If the dogmas and superstitions of the latter are shown to have had a place in the former, it is all sufficient. If, however, you wish to enter into an examination of the ancient oriental religions, I will not object, but will suggest that the same will occupy much space and time. Remember, I am not a champion or defender of any system of religion. I have not undertaken to prove that the old systems were perfect or better than the new. I have not undertaken to prove that they were not full of faults and absurdities. I regard all religions as human productions, and think there is no system that has been adopted that has not borrowed more or less from the older systems. Christianity is certainly no exception to this rule.

That the myth of Virgin and Child was held thousands of years ago in many of the pagan systems, I will particularly refer you to Inman's "Ancient Faiths," volume i, pp. 33, 59, 74, 98–105, 159, 399, 531, and 579; volume ii, pp. 254, 257, 397, etc. On the subject of the Celestial Virgin, in chapter viii, volume i, he says: "With the triune male deity we find a single female associated. She is called by various names, and many are the epithets she bears. She is called 'The Virgin,' conceiving and bringing forth from her own inherent power. Now she is wife of Bel Nimrod, now of Asshur, and now of Nin. Then she is the Mother of all the Gods, the Lady, the Queen. Her names are innumerable. She is Multa, Mulita, or Mylitta, or Enuta, Bilta, or Bilta Nipruta, Ishtar, or the bright, pure being; sometimes Ri, Alitta, Elissa, Beltis, Asboreth, Astarte, Saruka, or Sara, Nuna, Asurah. The same great being is recognized elsewhere as Athor, Dea, Syria, Artemis, Aphrodite, Tanith, Tanat, Rhea, Demeter, Ceres, Diana, Minerva, Juno, Venus, Isis, Cybele, Seneb, or Sehen, Venus, Urania, Ge, Hera. As Anaitis she is 'The Mother of the Child,' reproduced again as Isis and Horus, Devaki with Christna, and Aurora with Memmon. [He gives cuts representing the Virgin and Child, or Mother and Child, as taken from the different nationalities.] In modern times she reappears as the Virgin Mary and her Son. There was Ishtar of Nineveh, and Ishtar of Arabela, just as there are now Marie de Loretto and Marie de la Garde. She was the Queen of Fecundity, of Fertility; Queen of the Lands; the Beginning of Heaven and Earth; Queen of all the Gods; Goddess of War and Battle; the Holder of the Scepter; the Beginning of the Beginning; the One Great Queen; the Queen of the Spheres; the Virgo of the Zodiac: the Celestial Virgin; Time, in whose Womb all things are Born. She figures in many ways, and especially as a nude woman carrying a babe in her arms, a group which, if draped, would pass current to-day as 'the Virgin and Child' in any Roman Catholic country."

These ideas were common in the theologies or mythologies of ancient nations, many centuries before the Christian era.

In commenting on the ancient myth of Virgin and Child in another place, he says: "The Roman church, that repertory of ancient heathen belief, rites, ceremonies, dogmas, and practices, has recently adopted the idea that the Virgin Mary was born as immaculate as her son, so that now two virgins are striving for pre-eminence amongst the faithful—the mother and grandmother of God." This same idea was taught in Hindoo mythology three thousand years ago. Lakmy, the mother of Devaki, who bore Christna, was also held to be a virgin. This we get from Sir William Jones, who, I grant you, was a Christian. He translated and reproduced in full the story of the god Christna, his miraculous conception, his virgin mother and grandmother, and all the rest of it. Under the term Hemdan, "the pleasant one," the Persian Artemis, the learned Dr. Inman says, "I am now perfectly convinced that the Virgin with the Child of modern Christianity is the same individual as Artemis, Astarte, Isis, Tanith, Milcom, etc." Again, he says, "The worship of the Virgin Mary is identical with the adoration of Ishtar." In his Vocabulary, under the term Mary, he says: "If there were any other evidence required to prove the identity of the modern Virgin and Child with the Ishtar of Babylon, the Ri of Assyria, the Isis of Egypt, the Sara of Hindostan, the Ceres of Greece, and the Venus of Cyprus, we should find it in the style of ornaments which crowd the Romish churches on the continent. Amongst others, the most conspicuous are the sun and moon in conjunction, precisely the same as we see them on the ancient coins of Greece and Babylon, wherein the sun represents the triad of Mahadeva, and the moon his natural consort." He gives also numerous representations of the Virgin and Child as found on cylinders, sculptures, and temples of the ancients of various nationalities, showing a marked resemblance to our modern pictures of Virgin and Child. Under the name Venus, he says: "The form of her worship is now shorn of much of its grossness. Yet we see, in the jargon talked about the Virgin Mary, and in the dedication of nuns to her honor, a Christianized paganism in honor of the celestial goddess. Venus, like Eve, Sara, Isis, and Juno, represents simply the idea of maternity. She is the great mother from whom all creation springs." He then gives the invocation to the goddess from Lucretius, which is very similar to the invocations of the church to the Virgin Mary. It is only necessary to say that Dr. Inman is among the most learned and elaborate writers on the ancient religions of the world.

It is unnecessary to speak further of the Virgin Devaki, in Hindoo theology, being impregnated by the god Vishnu and bearing the god Christna. As that was fully reported by the Christian writer Sir William Jones, you readily accept it. It is also needless to dwell further on the Egyptian Isis being impregnated by the god Osiris and bearing the Savior and redeemer Horus. This myth is so prominent in all the works on ancient Egyptian mythology you will hardly call it in question. That Buddha was held to have been miraculously begotten on the person of a virgin you don't deny. It is also unnecessary to again repeat the long list of demigods and sons of gods by both celestial and terrestrial females; you will not deny that these were believed in many hundreds of years before the dawn of Christianity. Sir Godfrey Higgins, a great investigator on the subject of oriental religions, says, "The belief in the immaculate conception extended to every nation in the world." Again, he says, "The Supreme First Cause was generally believed to overshadow, or, in some other mysterious manner, to impregnate the mother of the God or personage" (Vol. i, p. 378). It was written of Pythagoras that his mother, Pythais, 550 B.C., conceived by a specter or ghost sent by the god Apollos, or the Sun. Malcolm, in his "History of Persia," gives the myth of Zoroaster being miraculously begotten by a divine ray. The mother of Ghengis Khan of Tartary, claimed that she was miraculously impregnated by the sun-god. Yu, the Chinese Savior, or First Monarch, was claimed to have been begotten by a star.

Thus, when it is known that almost every ancient nation had its miraculously-begotten son of God, and generally of a virgin mother, and that some of the nations had several of them, it will be seen that the writer of the gospel ascribed to Matthew had ample data upon which to get up his imperfect dream story of the Holy Ghost and Mary, as well as had the author of Luke for his vision and interview between Gabriel and Mary. But, unfortunately, both those writers completely destroy all they wished to gain by the story of the Virgin Mary and the deific paternity of Jesus, for in giving his genealogy they explicitly make him to be the son of Joseph. If they told the truth in this, their dream and vision stories are not worth a straw. One or the other was certainly untrue; Jesus could not have been the son of both

(Concluded on page 504.)

The Political Situation.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav read with much interest your editorial in The Truth Seeker of July 17th on the present political aspect, and the designating of the party for which you will cast your ballot. I am glad to see you thus frank, and honor you for so brave and fearless an expression of your views. Why not an editor talk right out what he believes on politics, religion, and all other subjects? It is a shame that all editors cannot thus talk to their patrons and still retain their patronage and good will. Are we never to hav full freedom of opinion without condemnation and abuse? How many editors in our country, conductors of public journals, dare to express themselvs fully upon all subjects, and could then retain the patronage of their readers? You can almost count them on your finger-ends. This is a crying shame, and a disgrace to American journalism. On the other hand, an editor is most frequently arbitrary, and will not tolerate opinions from the patrons of his paper if they differ widely from his own. And so you can almost count the editors in this country on your finger-ends who will publish the opinions of their patrons if they differ radically from those of the editors. This is all wrong, both ways. The editor of a public journal and his patrons should be as a school, in which all are trying to learn from one another—neither teacher nor pupils being infallible. If I could see things through the same political spectacles that our worthy editor wears, then of course I should vote for the Democratic party. Unfortunately, perhaps, I do not look through the same political glasses.

We all desire the same end, but in the method for its accomplishment we differ. I was Republican until I began to see the criminal mismanagement of our finances by that party, and the stealings they were committing on every hand, and the legislation they were enacting in favor of the rich as against the honest laboring poor of our country. Mr. Editor, you hav truly said, "The Republican party in its early days did a good work, and maintained the cause of liberty for all; but for the last ten years it has degenerated into a party of rings, back-pay grabbers, thieves, salary-increasers, swindlers, panderers to the church, monopolists, and robbers." Every word of that is true, and a hundred times more could be said of the derelictions of the Republican party. But you say: "As regards the two parties, there is not much difference in their honor and trustworthiness. Both will doubtless do all the stealing they can without being detected." Now, I ask, if your statement is true in regard to the Democratic party, and it undoubtedly is, how much better off will we be if we should vote for that party and elevate it into power? It could doubtless be no worse, as you say, but would it be any better? We all understand how you and others hav suffered at the hands of the Republican party, and our indignation is at a white heat, but would the Democrats do any better? I own I cannot see it in that light. The Democratic party, for the last twenty-five years, has been arrayed against all liberty, progress, humanity, and reform.

You might just as well, in my humble opinion, expect for yourself and other Infidels justice, mercy, and fair-dealing at the hands of the church as from either of the old political parties. You will find that both the old parties are wedded to the church and to mammon, and, like the churches themselvs, they don't care so much for the religion—only for the influence it givs—as they do for the "almighty dollar." The Catholics are going to support Mr. Hancock, to a man, claiming that they hav the best of evidence that Hancock will support their interests, and they certainly ought to, and most certainly do, know their man.

You say that your sympathies are with the Greenbackers, but that they can accomplish nothing by running a separate ticket; and you further say if you had money you would be willing to bet that they would not carry a single state. I am not of the betting kind, but feel quite certain you or anybody else might get several bets of that kind. Yet that would prove nothing. But certainly the prospects of the Greenbackers are far better than ever before.

Again, you say in voting for the Greenbackers that we will throw our votes away, and that every vote so cast will be a half vote for Garfield, Comstock & Co. Now if I thought this was the true statement of the case, I should most certainly not vote for General Weaver, and thus help General Garfield, for that is one of the things I do not want to do. I hav heard a great deal about this thing of throwing votes away in voting for a man who cannot be elected, no difference how honest and capable the candidate may be for such an office. I own I cannot understand it. Perhaps I can get some light on this subject.

It is said that the ballot is an educator; and when we vote we do what? Why, we express an opinion or preference for certain men and measures. Now, Mr. Bennett, when you express your opinion in The Truth Seeker on religion, politics, or morals, and are in the minority, is not that a vote to all intents and purposes, the same as if backed up by a paper ballot? and are you not throwing it away? Why not vote with the church, if you want to be on the winning side? You hav found it "rough sailing" in the minority, but notwithstanding they hav imprisoned and tried every way to crush you, still you hav stood up bravely in your manhood and integrity for mental freedom, and do not intend to vote for the church because it is popular and numerically strong. Then why adopt a different principle in regard to political parties? Why support a political party that is working against the dearest rights and liberties of our people and the upbuilding of humanity any more than to work for the church that is doing the same thing? For my part I can see no difference. I would just as soon ally myself with the church, and hug it to my bosom, with the hope that I would in some mysterious way get my right to mental liberty, as to hope to get my right by hugging to my bosom or voting for either of the old political parties. The church and both the old political parties are a dead weight on all liberty, all justice, all progress, and all humanity, and the sooner we cease hugging these old dead weights to our bosoms the better. As for myself, I expect to be in the minority until the people are educated up to my standpoint. We chafe very much, I know, at the slow progress we seem to be making; but what better can we do than to stick to principle and educate the people as fast as possible, and bide our time till the right shall triumph? For my part, I see no better way. We want our rights very badly, I admit, and we grow impatient; but certainly it would not be wise to look to present success that would only result in future defeat.

Why belong to and work for a political party that is diametrically opposed to all our views, rights, and interests any more than to unite with the church that is crushing our liberties? And how much worse is it to be deprived of our religious liberty than our industrial liberty, which both the old parties are depriving us of?

Just as well be a slave to the church as a slave to mammon. We might as well be without religious liberty as without bread or the chance to earn it. I own I would take the loaf of bread first, and feel that that would sustain me until I could break the other chains that bound me. I would say, First of all, giv our people bread, or a patch of earth from which to raise it, for thousands and tens of thousands are starving to death to-day in this and other countries. Then let us not support parties that deny the people the natural right to the earth, the right to cultivate it, and the right to liv by the fruit of their toil, as our two old parties are doing to-day, crushing the laborer into the earth on every hand, and grinding them beneath the heel of oppression.

The Greenback party is a new party, and one of progress and of growth and Liberal tendencies, and one that we can mold into representativ proportions—representing all our advanced ideas and material interests. Shall we not take hold of it, then, while it is yet as "potter's clay" in the hands of the workers, and make it a success by which we can secure both mental and material liberty?

Brush Creek, Kansas. R. E. LaFetra.

The Postal Laws.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The editorial, "Politics for Liberals," in The Truth Seeker of July 17th charges the Republican party with enacting postal laws that permit espionage of the mails, interfere with freedom of the press, and permit the conviction of innocent men.

The importation of indecent and obscene prints and publications was prohibited in the twenty-eighth section of the act of Congress of August 30, 1842, regulating customs. The Whig party was then in power. This statute was amended in 1857, under a Democratic administration, prohibiting the entry of any package containing obscene articles. The packages were also subject to condemnation by decree of court. This law did not recognize the right of citizens to import obscene books, prints, or engravings. The revenue officers were empowered to search for and seize them. The same provisions are contained in the revised statutes. The Republican party in retaining these provisions stood by the old landmarks, and left with the United States courts the power to adjudge and condemn to destruction all obscene importations.

Is this a violation of the Constitution? Is this one reason why Liberals should ally themselvs with the Bourbons of the Democratic party?

These statutes were the forerunners of the postal laws against mailing obscene publications. Congress deemed whatever was too indecent to be imported was not to be carried in the mails. The mail system had grown in magnitude, and from the carriage of letters and papers it had been extended to permitting books and other parcels to be carried.

The first enactment against obscene publications being mailable is the act of March 3, 1865, which provided: "That no obscene book, pamphlet, picture, print, or other publication of a vulgar or indecent character shall be admitted into the mails of the United States," and imposed a maximum penalty of five hundred dollars fine or one year's imprisonment for knowingly depositing such publications in the mail.

This provision was incorporated in the revised postal law of June 8, 1872, and further amended by the act of March 3, 1873, which extended the scope of this act in regard to articles designed to produce abortion, and increased the limit of the penalties.

The justice of these provisions is to be determined by the right of a government to prohibit the circulation of obscene matter or articles within its limits. If a state can do this without infringing on the inherent rights of free speech and a free press, the United States can do so too. The United States has not passed a general law making it a crime to publish and circulate obscene publications, but has simply declared them to be unimportable and unmailable, and imposed penalties for importing or mailing them.

Mailable matter subject to letter postage, whether obscene or not, is carefully guarded from inspection, search, or seizure. The law makes no difference between the means to be used to detect the sending of an obscene book paying letter postage and the sending of an obscene letter. These amendments of 1873 and 1876 did not confer any new power upon postmasters and special agents over mailable matter. Comstock obtained no increased authority under them to search the mails, either in post-offices or on post routes.

How, then, can it be said that these amendments hav imperiled civil liberty? Anthony Comstock has no legal authority to open a mail bag, detain the United States mail, or any publications which hav gone into the mail, for the purpose of inquiring into the purity or impurity of the mail matter. He is not a postmaster. If he was, his right of examination would be confined, under §§ 3881 and 3882, to matter not charged with letter postage, and to the simple purpose of ascertaining whether there is upon or connected with any such matter anything which would authorize or require the charge of a higher rate of postage thereon. This givs Mr. Comstock no power whatever.

In 1852 Congress authorized custom officers and special agents of the post-office department, "when instructed by the postmaster-general, to make examinations and seizures" on vessels, and to search them for "letters which may be on board or hav been carried or transported contrary to law." It also provided for seizure and condemnation of packages in which letters were concealed. (10 Stat. U. S., pp. 140, 141.)

In the revision of June 8, 1872, the same provisions were extended to all post routes as well as to vessels, as common carriers were prohibited from carrying letters in cars or otherwise on any post route. United States marshals and deputies were also authorized to search for and seize packages containing letters carried contrary to law. (§§ 235, 236, 237, Act, 1872.) Section 299 of the same act provided that the postmaster-general, "by a letter of authorization under his own hand, to be filed among the records of his own department," may empower special agents or officers of the department "to make searches for mailable matter transported in violation of law" (17 Stats. 322).

This section does not authorize them to search post-offices, postal cars, or mail bags for unmailable matter, even though obscene, but to search the depots and vehicles of common carriers for mailable matter conveyed with intent to defraud the revenue.

Anthony Comstock has no jurisdiction over the mails of the United States by virtue of this section. He can hav no inquisitorial power under the laws of the United States. He is reduced to the level of the common detectiv, and must employ their expedients if he attempts to detect the sending of obscene matter through the mails. He is the special agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice. His searches and seizures must be made under the authority of the statutes of New York, which giv to that society one-half of the fines imposed through its instrumentality. All fines imposed under the postal laws of the United States are required to be paid into the Treasury. No premium is offered to informers.

The statute prohibiting sending obscene publications through the mails has been sustained in an opinion written by Judge Field, late a candidate before the Cincinnati Convention, and as ardent an advocate of state rights as any member of his party.

I cannot see that a change of party administration will effect a change in the postal laws. If Comstock is stripped of his power under the state laws, he will be shorn of his power to spy upon the liberty of the press. Repeal the charter of the society he represents, and his prestige is at an end. He will hav the same right and power which belong to any other citizen, and no more.

The Democrats hav had the House in three congresses. They passed the amendatory law of 1876, and hav not only refused to repeal or modify the postal laws, but hav in committee treated contemptuously the hundreds of thousands of citizens who petitioned for amendment or repeal. For nearly four years the post-office department has been administered by the Christian Democrat Judge Key, who has enforced the law according to what may justly be deemed the Democratic plan. To desert the Republican or Greenback parties and support Hancock without question is unwise. It will not protect liberty of the press nor break down Bourbonism in the church or the state.

W. S. Bush.

The Modern Inquisition.

SYNOPSIS OF A LECTURE DELIVERED BY MRS. H. S. LAKE, BEFORE THE LIBERAL SOCIETIES OF CLINTON AND MAQUOKETA, IOWA, ON THE OCCASION OF THE RELEASE OF MR. BENNETT.

I hav thought that it would be unpardonable of me as a public expounder of Liberal thought, and of you as believers, to some extent, in those principles, if I should let the opportunity pass of directing the attention of the community and fixing more firmly in your own minds the fact that we hav here, in this boasted land of freedom, a gigantic system of religious intolerance.

The opportunity of which I speak has arisen out of the fact that within the last three days—i. e., on Thursday, the 29th—a victim of the Young Men's Christian Inquisition was released from a thirteen-months' imprisonment in a Christian penitentiary.

We who hav never been incarcerated in a dungeon, fed upon prison fare, clad in convict garb, and made to march with felons, can hardly realize what this old man has endured during the thirteen months passed, in which he has been shut from the blessed breezes of heaven, separated from friends, and deprived of the privilege of earning an honest livelihood in an occupation eminently agreeable and well adapted to him.

And because he has endured all this for the purpose of enlarging the privileges of his kind, and of augmenting our personal liberty, it is not only fitting and appropriate, but it is eminently our duty, to celebrate his release by informing ourselvs upon the character, influence, and work of the power which imprisoned him, and the objects which are thus sought to be attained.

Its character is like that of its parent, the church; its influence is far-reaching, like hers, and its object is to impose upon the people that system of morals which it holds to be conducive to human welfare, even though that object is secured by torture and tyranny. The better to accomplish its purposes, it has organized a Vice Society, and put into the field an agent who has full power, authorized by the government, to enter the post-office and open the mail, to enter publishing houses, or newspaper offices, or artists' galleries, or dwellings, where he may claim he has reason to believe what he denominates vice exists, and rudely to seize the property, and hurry off the owner to court and to trial. If this is not a Christian Inquisition, pray tell me what it is?

I know that this is done by and under the sanction of law, but I propose to prove to you that the law is unconstitutional. [Here the speaker introduced a summary of Mr. Wakeman's argument against the law.] Methinks if Jefferson, Franklin, Washington, and Paine—all those intrepid founders of a government which was declared as "in no sense founded on the Christian religion"—I say methinks if they could stand on this platform to-night they would denounce, with irresistible fervor, the baseness and tyranny which, under a pretext of serving the cause of purity, has heaped upon us, as a people, a most monstrous and damnable injustice.

The fact is, my friends, if we are to hav a United States censor over the public mails, we may as well shut up our halls and go home, and surrender ourselvs and the community to this merciless Christian Inquisition. But as I take it that this is just exactly what many of us do not intend to do, I may as well proceed to lay before you some further ideas involved in the passage of this postal law. They are ideas which are daily coming before the people in every conceivable form, and which we may as well face and get used to now as at any other time. Has a portion of the community a right to declare what is moral and what is immoral, and force another portion, through its tool, the government, to accept that definition?

Let us look this matter square in the face, through the medium of a few illustrations.

Here is my Jewish friend; he livs, we will say, in Russia—and, by the way, this is no imaginary case—and Russia, with her hand on a saber, says, "Government has a right to declare that you shall not be a Jew!" and so the Jew, to escape punishment, turns hypocrit, abjures Jehovah, and calls himself a Christian. Are you willing to affirm that old Russia is justified in this? Not one of you.

Well, we are, we will say, in Turkey—and there we should be known as Christian Infidel—and Turkey says, "Die, Christian dog, or confess that Allah is God, and Mohammed his prophet!" What then? Shall we renounce our convictions, and call this intolerance justice?

Or we are in Utah, in the palmy days of the saints, and in some lonely spot we encounter the Danites, and they say, "Acknowledge that God is the Lord, and Joe Smith his prophet, or we will speedily put an end to your heresies!" Shall we therefore meekly acquiesce, and call this right and liberty?

Or, twelve years later, we hav become Mormons, and still in Utah; a U. S. marshal, armed with the authority of the United States, says, "God's will, as expressed through Joe Smith, was a lie, and we demand that you abandon your plural wives!" Do you call that justice and liberty?

Or we are in Massachusetts, and we write an essay on marriage, and are told that that institution is an outcome of the Christian religion, and that if we hav and express any heterodox opinions concerning it, we must go to jail. Is this right or justice?

Or we emigrate to California, turn Chinaman, and are told that Joss must depart, and we must abandon our idols. Is this your boasted American liberty?

Nay, friends, this is all monstrous injustice, as terrible and as destructiv to intellectual progress as was the tyranny of George III. to political progress when he demanded the thirteen colonies to pay duty to keep the royal paupers of Great Britain in purple and fine linen. Let us wake up! Surely the spirit of the Revolution is not utterly extinguished; surely we are all ready to brand, with scorn and contempt unutterable, any man, or any woman, who will assist, for one moment, in depriving his fellow, whether white or black, rich or poor, Jew, Mormon, Christian, Spiritualist, Materialist, Socialist, Chinaman, or anybody else, of the rights which he claims for himself.

Friends, we sleep. As Patrick Henry said, "We lie supinely on our backs, while the enemy of liberty binds us hand and foot." He has added to our burdens of taxation by exempting the churches of some other persons' Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; by imposing chaplains upon us; he has enslaved us with Sabbath laws, and demanded that we adopt the Christian code of morality; and lastly he has denied us the use of the mails to transmit our heterodox literature.

But I remember that Wendell Phillips, in a burst of indignation, once said, "It is honorable to break bad laws, and such law-breaking history records and God blesses!" And if we can prove, as I think we hav, that this postal law is a bad law, then D. M. Bennett, instead of being a criminal, is a hero and a martyr.

The crying need of the age is honesty. I don't mean honesty in dollars and cents, though we need an immense increase of that, even; but I mean honesty of thought, honesty of purpose, honest dealing with ourselvs. This is exactly what the Christian Inquisition is determined to prevent. It is determined to protect God from the doubts of Atheists, and men and women from a discussion of their relations to each other.

Do you want to know when the position of an individual or government is weak? It is when he, or it, fears the candid discussion of that position.

As an illustration, look at Russia, with her special police, prohibiting the press and preventing free speech. Look at the horrible state enginery by which she arrests and transports to Siberia and the islands of the sea thousands of her suffering subjects!

Why is this? It is because justice is lacking in the Russian government, and because the people believe there are better systems than those of autocracy, and they are determined to find them out. And I pray they may succeed, though the czar's palace be blown into ten thousand fragments, and the czar—well, let him retire to private life amid his starving peasantry.

Look at France and Germany, with their suppressed journals and condemned political offenders! Well, all these measures are a confession of weakness; they emphasize the fact that they cannot bear the agitation of thought, just as the imprisonment of Mr. Heywood and Mr. Bennett indicate the fact that the Christian Inquisition fears our social system will go down with a free discussion of its merits. But, with the cry, "Every man his own priest," the tide is rising, and setting with tremendous force against orthodox religion, orthodox politics, and orthodox social creeds; and when D. M. Bennett came out of prison, had you listened with your spiritual ears, you would hav heard a sound like many waters—it was the mighty murmur of thousands of souls declaring that inquisition, and assassination even, can not prevent the march of human minds toward truth and liberty.

Disappointed, but Not Discouraged.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: About three weeks since I sent you, through the hands of Bro. Green, an article for The Truth Seeker appealing to the Liberals of the state of Illinois, and, in fact, to all who are interested in seeing the Liberal League movement advance in the state of Illinois, and I hav been very much disappointed at not seeing it appear in either of the past two issues of The Truth Seeker. I sent a similar appeal to Mind and Matter three days later, which appeared in the issue of July 3d, but as yet I hav got to receive my first three-cent stamp to help me in this important work; however, I am not discouraged, and am willing to spend my last three cents for stamps and stationary in order to help along the League movement. But it does seem to me that those Liberals and Freethinkers who are blessed with an abundance of this world's goods might extend to me a little aid in this work. A little from each would make a fund that would enable me to do a good deal for the cause in the state of Illinois.

But in the mean time, as long as the little money I hav or am able to earn holds out, I will send to any one who will address me in regard to the organization of auxiliary Liberal Leagues an application for charter and full instructions how to proceed in order to organize auxiliary Liberal Leagues, and also a copy of the National Liberal League Constitution.

Come, friends of the Liberal cause, let us take hold of this League movement like men and women, and we shall advance the cause of humanity more than can be done in any other way.

Bro. Bennett, I fully indorse your editorial in the issue of July 3d on "The Political Situation." It is right to the point, and should be carefully read and re-read by every reader of your paper.

Many of our Liberal friends will continue to point to the precedent set by the Abolitionist party forty years ago as something that the Liberals of to-day should pattern after. But there is no adequate comparison to be found in the two issues. When the Abolitionist party started there were but two other parties in this country, and they were as firmly set to their separate issues as are the serried ranks of two contending armies, and the antislavery party could gain no encouragement or help from either of them, and they had no alternativ left but to make a separate party founded on better principles than were represented by either of the other great contending parties.

But such is not the case to-day. The Liberal element of our country is receiving recognition from both of the other parties, and by a judicious selection of our candidates for office this fall I verily believe we can accomplish more than the antislavery party did during the first twenty years of its existence. Let us not be governed too much by precedent; it is not always the best thing to do. Truly did Thomas Paine say, in his "Rights of Man," that "every age and generation must be as free to act for itself in all cases as the ages and generations which preceded it." And again he says, "Every generation is and must be competent to all the purposes which its occasions require." This is sound logic, and it never was more applicable than it is at this time in regard to the proper action to be taken by the Liberal voters at the coming fall elections. Let us therefore examin closely the men of the dominant parties (platforms amount to but little in binding men elected to office in these days; they are becoming very much like men of straw, placed in cornfields to scare the birds) and let us select such men as will be most likely to represent our principles. Let the executiv committeeman of each state investigate and ascertain as far as possible who are the best men, and when he has done so let him make this investigation known through the Liberal press, and in this way we can make the Liberal vote tell better at the coming election than we can in any other way. Now, for instance, I know one, the nominee on the Democratic ticket for state treasurer of the state of Illinois. He is a man whom I can recommend, and before the November election occurs I will giv my reasons for recommending him. And in the mean time I will try as far as possible to ascertain the qualifications of all the other nominees for state offices. And to this end I would urgently request all the Liberals of the state of Illinois who are personally acquainted with the different nominees on the state tickets of the different parties to write me as to their qualifications, and more especially as to how they stand as regards the Liberal League platform. Now, Liberals and Freethinkers of these United States, let us be awake to our duty this fall, and coming generations shall rise up to call us blessed.

Yours for truth, justice, and good government,

F. F. Follet,
Ch. Ex. Sub. Com., Ill.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 6.

I think the Freelovers hav taken one extreme and the "Alphaites" the other. I hope to keep the happy mean between the two. Sexual indulgence is, like all other intoxicants, alluring, tempting, and dangerous to trifle with. Touch not, taste not, is the only safe rule. Why must a couple here and a couple there be licensed to cohabit for pleasure and all the rest be debarred. If the practice be healthful, right, and proper, it should be free to all. There should be no starved thousands as there now are. Old maids, bachelors, widows, and widowers—all young unmarried people—sailors and their wives, and all whose occupation demands absence and separation for months and years at a time, are compelled and enforced celibates by law. Animals indulge only for procreation. Is man above or below an animal in this? And parents who liv hygienic lives can only indulge now and then a month or so out of a year. Many women bear children every year, or at least every two years, and allowing a month or two for conception, then she becomes unfit for further indulgence as long as she nurses her child. All through pregnancy and lactation the true hygenic mother must be a celibate, and therefore the husband is compelled to be one or to hav more than one wife. Prevention of conception would remedy this somewhat, but it is unnatural though far better than unwelcome parentage.

Alphaites do not advocate sleeping together for the married. Separate beds are most healthful for every one. Each person should hav a personal bed, bedding, and especially pillow. These are as essential as personal clothes or personal face-towels. The effete cast-off matter of one individual should never be absorbed by another, therefore separate beds as a general rule is demanded as a necessity of personal purity. Pure, true love is not naturally sensual, nor are all Freelovers at the opposit extreme of alphaism. I know many of this class who are practical alphaites. The first Freelovers I became acquainted with were believers in non-sexual intercourse save for procreation. This was twenty years ago. Then I thought it unnatural, ascetic, etc. Now I know they were right, and that abstinence (for pleasure) is the only true, safe, and right rule of action. But with perverted passions and indulged appetites, with ages and ages of abnormal practices, the feelings and desires are no rule or guide. Remember the perpetuation of the species is the one great object of all organized existences. How to grow nobler, better, and higher intelligences is the point. All else should bend to this desired end. We want truth and fact. The doctrin of continence may seem cold, dry, barren, and austere, but if it has right, truth, and good for its finality, we must plead for its acceptance. The belief in beautiful heavens peopled with pure and happy spirits, grand, noble, and powerful gods, and all conceivable joys and blisses surrounding them, was a hard thing to giv up. We hated to set all these aside for the cold, empty nothingness of annihilation of personal identity, but when convinced that truth lay there we cast aside the delusion and accepted the inevitable. There can be no "happy mean" between a right and a wrong, and I take the ground that strict continence save for procreation, the true demand of nature, and the only road to real health and happiness. This alone will prevent misbegotten children and undesired and enforced maternity as well as licensed prostitution in marriage and out of marriage, and the whole enormous train of sexual evils, crimes, and horrors.

Very few hav thought up or read up on this all-important question, and therefore it is that so many are living in wrong and know it not.

Standing on what too long we bore,
With shoulders bent and downcast eyes,
We may discern—unseen before—
A path to higher destinies.—Longfellow.

Elmina Drake Slenker.

Snowville, Va., July 4, 1880.

Sexual Temperance.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, in The Truth Seeker of July 24th, begins an article on sexual intemperance in these words: "You who plead for 'moderate indulgence,' 'a happy medium,' or a 'natural desire,' must remember that every indulgence diverts vital power from the brain, and vital principles from the blood, and continued excesses weaken the whole system, mental and bodily. Also sexual intemperance is the one prolific cause of female diseases and weaknesses, including cancers, tumors, abcesses, etc." Now I think Mrs. Slenker will find that the cause of female diseases and weaknesses of the generativ organs are the result of other causes. Every stomach-full of food diverts vital force for a time, but only to return again with new force for the brain. Why will we never understand that man givs to woman food in every sex act where there is temperance and perfect adaptability. It is a physiological fact that man loses his seed something like once every month, and that too in health. Sexual teetotalism would be no better than what we hav now. But I think temperance and adaptability would bring harmony, and from that condition we soon get health. W. E. Choate, M.D.

Jackson, Mich.

A Massachusetts man—now living, to be sure, but who expects to die—has made a will in which he bequeaths one dollar to each man, woman, and child who attends his funeral.

(Continued from page 501.)

Joseph and the Holy Ghost; and if Matthew and Luke are guilty of falsehood in either case, their testimony is valueless all around. Your particular attention is called to this.

As to the old belief in the crucifixion of saviors and demigods, it seems hardly necessary to occupy a great deal of space about it. To begin with the Hindoo savior, Christna, we have the authority of Sir William Jones that he was fastened to a tree at the time of his death. Moor, in his "Hindoo Pantheon," explicitly states that he was crucified on a cross. Higgins does the same. The French writer, Guigniant, in his "Religion of the Ancients," testifies that he was nailed to a tree. At Mathura, in India, is a rock temple, in the form of a cross, commemorating the death of Christna. It is also inscribed in the rock relating to the death of the Lord and Savior, Christna, who atoned for the sins of the world by "pouring out his blood as a propitiatory offering" while stretched upon the cross. In view of this it is not strange that Wiseman should have said, "Can we be surprised that the enemies of our holy religion should seize upon this legend as containing the original of our gospel history?"

As to Guatama, or Sakia Muni, the Buddha, different accounts come down to us as to the manner of his death; one that he died a natural death of old age, another that he was crucified by an arrow being driven through his body into a tree—the arrow at right angles with the tree, forming the cross. How much importance is to be attached to this account I will not pretend to say. That such a story had currency is, however, true.

That Thammuz, of Syria, was believed to have been crucified I refer you to Ctesais, author of "Persika," believed to have been written 400 B.C. The poet has commemorated his memory in rhyme, thus:

> "Trust, ye saints, your Lord restored,
> Trust ye in your risen Lord,
> For the pains which Thammuz endured
> Our salvation have procured."

I refer you for an account of it to Higgins' "Anacalypsis," vol. i, p. 246.

Wittoba of Telingonese, another savior who was believed to have been crucified, is also described by Higgins, who says, "He is represented in his history with nail-holes in his hands and the soles of his feet."

Iao, of Nepaul, was another crucified savior. For the mention of him see Gorgius, p. 202.

Hesus, the Savior of the Druids, is described by Higgins as having been crucified between two lambs, and this eight hundred years before Jesus.

Quexalcote, the Mexican Savior, according to the "Mexican Antiquities" (vol. vi, p. 166), was represented by the paintings of Codex Borginarius, as nailed to the cross. Two thieves were represented as crucified with him. Other accounts have it that this god was crucified in the heavens, while another still has it that he was represented as hanging, holding a cross in his hands. This is held to have taken place nearly six hundred years before Christianity became a system.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Political.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER. Sir: I wish to giv my views as to who the Liberals shall vote for for president this fall. I am a Liberal Leaguer, a labor-reformer, and a Greenbacker, and I shall be true to my principles and vote for Gen. Weaver. I see that Messrs. Bennett, Wakeman, Leland, Green, and others recommend that we vote for Gen. Hancock. I would like very much to accomodate these brother Liberals, but I can't do it. They tell us we must try and defeat the Republican party this fall, to which I say, Amen. But, gentlemen, how can I giv up my labor-reform and Greenback principles, and vote for the enemies of freedom, justice, and right?

I would ask, in the language of Charles Sumner, who, when asked if he would obey the Fugitive Slave law, inquired, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?"

In 1854, when I came to this country, the two political parties were Know Nothings and Democrats. The Know Nothings were for freeing the slaves and the Democrats were defending the rights of foreigners. I was a little puzzled which party to join, for I believed in the principles of both parties. But I finally concluded to join the Know Nothings. I said, You may deprive me of the franchise, but I must go for liberating the slaves. And so I now conclude, You may deprive me of my religious rights, but I must go for the rights of the laborer and the destruction of the money rings. I can understand how a Liberal and a Republican can agree to vote the Democratic ticket and vice versa. What is the difference between them? they are both hard-money men, they both believe in the national bank swindle All the difference I can see is the Democrats hav not passed the Comstock laws nor put Liberal editors in prison. This reminds me of a definition I once heard given of the difference between rheumatism and the gout, and this is the difference, To put your finger in a vice and screw it up until you could not bear it any longer was defined as rheumatism; and then to giv another screw after that was the gout.

The Democrats would giv us rheumatism, but Republicanism would be another screw after. The Republican party is governed by the orthodox church on religious questions, and would, if it could, put God in the Constitution. In the labor and finance question it is governed by the moneyed men in the party. It is the slave and tool of the national banks. And the Democratic party is but very little better; the moneyed men rule that party too, while the Greenback party is the reform, the labor, and the workingmen's party. I can no more vote for the Republican or Democratic party than William Lloyd Garrison could hav voted for the slavery party in his day.

Let me remind Messrs. Wakeman and Leland that the principles of the political party organized at Cincinnati a year ago by the members of the National Liberal League is almost identical with the Greenback platform, and I repeat that I cannot see how a Liberal and reformer can vote with either of those corrupt parties. I must say that I cannot vote for Hancock, and I will not, and that's an end to it.

Cambridge, Mass. J. S. VERITY.

REPLY.—As our good friend Mr. Verity seems to regard the question of Greenbacks as the most important of all others, we readily admit that he and everybody else should vote just according to their convictions. We do not regard greenbacks as the only or the greatest question before the American people. To us liberty is before greenbacks. We feel that by the party in power liberty in this country has been struck a deadly blow, and that for this that same party should be taught a lesson it will not forget. Power should be taken from its hands for a time. It should understand that the Liberals of this country will every time put the heel of condemnation on any party which attempts in any way to wrongfully deprive the people of their liberties and their rights. This has been outrageously perpetrated in the passage and execution of the Comstock laws, and we think Liberals should not forget it nor disregard it. Love of party should not rise superior to love of liberty and right. Without liberty and the preservation of the guarantees of the Constitution, greenbacks will not prove an unfailing panacea. Liberty and right first, and greenbacks afterwards.

It is not that the Democrats are more lovely than other parties, but it is that a Republican Congress, Republican courts, and a Republican President hav committed a crime against Liberty and against the Liberals of the United States, for which they deserve condign punishment. The Democratic party is perhaps no better than the Republicans, but they are the instrument now within our reach, and the only instrument, with which we can punish and defeat the guilty Republicans. We should not forget the wrongs that hav been done us, and this is the year in which they should be redressed.

Greenbacks are very desirable; we prize them for all they are worth, and often wish we had a larger stock of them. We also believe the Greenback party is the party of reform, but evidences are plentiful that demagogs and broken-down and hungry politicians are rushing into it hoping thereby to come into power again. When the party becomes large enough to carry the country, it is to be feared it will contain as many demagogs, as many dishonest politicians, as the older parties. Political parties, it is to be feared, will always be foul, grasping, office-seeking, and dishonest. To our view, the proper course for us this year is to punish the Republicans for their unfaithfulness and after that to continue in helping on other reforms. In our view Hancock is the only man that can beat the Republicans this year. Weaver cannot do it, and if he should be elected he will hav no power to increase greenbacks. Congress will be the power to attend to finance. Let us first sustain liberty and vindicate our rights, and let money be a secondary consideration.

Ho for Europe Once More!

We did not take steamer for Europe on Saturday, July 31st, as we thought we should do when we made up our last issue. Mr. Rawson was not quite ready to go, and we waited for him. We shall undoubtedly sail on Wednesday, August 4th, and will be in England about the 12th or 13th inst. We shall endeavor to put our time in to the best advantage in seeing what can be seen, besides attending the Brussels International Freethinkers' Congress of August 29th, 30th, and 31st. Letters addressed care Freethought Publishing Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C., England, will undoubtedly reach us.

We shall not for a moment lose our interest in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hope it will be the same with our readers. We trust they will remember that expenses are heavy, and that it takes a good many little sums to meet them. Perhaps a wink is as good as a nod. Let all remittances and inclosures be directed as heretofore to D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth st. We trust that we shall be home again in due time, well fitted for hard work. We shall not forget our readers in our absence, and do not fear that they will forget us.

WE are always glad to distribute sample copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER to those who are likely to become subscribers, and will be grateful to those who send us the names of such probable subscribers; or we will send papers to those who will take an interest in handing or sending them to people who will appreciate them. We hav a large number of last year's papers on hand, which will perhaps answer well for missionary work, and we will cheerfully mail them wherever instructed. We will at all times cast seed upon good soil, trusting the same may take root, grow, and bring forth abundantly. Let the names be sent in for sample copies.

VOLUMES I. and II. of "The Gods and Religions" hav been sent out in pretty large numbers, and so far as heard from every person is fully satisfied with the work. We hav concluded to continue to sell it at $5.00 for two volumes in cloth; $7.00 in leather, red edges; and $8 00 in morocco, gilt edges. The price is very low, and the buyers should be numerous.

MR. H. L. GREEN has sent us one of his splendid posters announcing the five days' mass meeting of Liberals at Hornellsville, beginning September 1st. The bill is gotten up in excellent style, and will doubtless bring hundreds, and perhaps thousands, to the meeting. We are somewhat regretful that we cannot be there and go to Europe also; but according to the law we seem to be governed by, we cannot be on both sides of the Atlantic at the same time. We trust the Hornellsville meeting will be a great success.

WE learn from private sources that Mr. B. F. Underwood is very seriously ill with a severe attack of diptheria. His many friends will learn of his sickness with regret.

THE Liberal, a sixteen-page monthly, edited by G. H. Walser, Lamar, Mo., at $1 per year, is a good paper and ought to be sustained. The same of the Mirror of Progress, in Kansas City, and the Rational Appeal, in Detroit. They are all sprightly, able papers, and ought to liv.

WE hav received "Heads and Hearts," by Rev. George Chainey, of Evansville, Indiana, in tract form. Price 5 cents. Hundreds of them ought to sell. We hav them.

"HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION," by Thomas Paine, is a pamphlet containing letters from Paine never before published, with extracts from "The Crisis." Published by E. Haskell, 711 Sansom street, Philadelphia. Price, 25 cents.

"WHO KILLED MARY STANNARD?" By William Denton. A pamphlet of 36 pages. It is written in Prof. Denton's able style, and is quite interesting. It givs a brief history of the case, with full reports of psychometric examinations by two sensitivs from hair from the murdered girl's head and a piece of the overalls worn by the Rev. H. H. Hayden, who was undoubtedly her murderer. The result of the examination is curious and interesting, and point directly to Hayden as the murderer. Prof. Denton's summing up and closing remarks are specially interesting. Price 15 cents.

FOUNDATION STONES. A series of sermons by the Rev. George Chainey of Evansville, Ind. Containing opinions not held at the present time by Mr. Chainey, these sermons yet impart many valuable truths. Although a Liberal Christian, the author never was a bigot, and consequently this book is better adapted for reading by Liberals than church members, whom it would displease by its broad and charitable renderings of the scriptures. With Mr. Chainey a text was only an excuse for teaching charity in religious matters, and the pulpit with him was never an unassailable castle. This book is a landmark of where a progressiv thinker was two years ago. Where he is now can better be told by his more recent sermons, one of which we shall publish next week. Price of "Foundation Stones" $1 00. Address Rev. George Chainey, Evansville, Ind.

A Liberal Offer.

I hav promised our friend Bennett to dispose of one thousand copies of my debate with the Rev. Dr. Ditzler. I will agree to make a present of one copy to every person who orders two copies. I want the work to hav a wide circulation among Christians if possible, and care nothing about profit in its sale. Inclose one dollar for two books, and I will send the third free. Address 172 Clark street, Chicago, Illinois. W. F. JAMIESON.

The Bright Sunlight of Publicity on the Republican Party.

The following statement was prepared just before the meeting of the Third Annual Congress of the Liberal League at Cincinnati last year. It was widely published in several Liberal papers. It is just as true now as it was then with the added light that another year of Republican rule has thrown upon the statement. On reading it over I cannot see that I can state the reactions and the crimes of the Republican party in any other or better terms. There the facts are, and there they will forever remain historically true, as charged. I ask THE TRUTH SEEKER, and other papers if they will, to republish this statement as work already done, and good as far as it goes as a foundation for continued investigation in the same line:

The National Liberal League was organized with the view, among other purposes, to take political action whenever the necessity for it might arise, and whenever it can do so effectivly. With the growth of our organization, now to more than one hundred local Auxiliary Leagues, with their alliances and influences, it would seem that the National League is strong enough to make itself felt in the politics and parties of the day; and since the aggressions of the church upon the state hav risen to that point of audacious insolence that her partisans hav power to obtain the imprisonment of our editors on charges that are absolutely false, and for offenses that hav in them not the faintest taint of crime, then it would seem that the necessity has come for the contemplated political action.

The League was organized to cast votes—to enlighten, combine, and wheel into line the Liberal vote.

We hav tried petitioning Congress and petitioning the President for a redress of grievances. The right of petition is valuable as a means of expressing opinion and as a persuasiv to rectify wrongs; but the ballot, in the last resort, has creativ power and the right to command that justice shall be done, if it does ruat cælum; that is, ruin somebody's pet and private heaven. The pouring in of petitions from two hundred thousand citizens of the United States, together with from twelve thousand to fifteen thousand letters to the President, asking him to pardon Mr. Bennett, was an astonishment to the government and a surprise even to Liberals. It givs us a little census by which we can estimate our numbers and note the progress of Liberal opinion. The Index petition to Congress for the separation of church and state took a year or more (1877) to gather up the names, and was signed by only ten thousand six hundred and sixty persons. The petition for the repeal or modification of the Comstock law, supported by the combined influence of all the Liberal journals except the Index, obtained in a few weeks seventy thousand signatures.

Now the recent petition for the pardon of Mr. Bennett, ignored by the Index and opposed by two Spiritualist semi-Liberal papers, nevertheless amounted to the magnificent number of two hundred thousand names.

But the prayer of every one of these petitions has been denied. Church and state, united in the ways petitioned against, remain united. The Comstock law is unrepealed. Bennett is in prison at hard labor. The influence of Comstock, backed up by the priests, is stronger with President Hayes than his sentiment of justice—stronger than the petition of two hundred thousand free and Liberal citizens of the United States. What next is to be done? What resources hav we left? What influence can Liberals now bring to bear to obtain an answer to their prayer? Having shied these tufts of grass at the old man in our apple tree who refuses to divide fair and insists on giving all the apples to the goody-goody Christian boys, let us try what virtue there is in a boulder about the size of a ballot. It hath been said, "Knock and it shall be opened unto you." But what if you knock, as we hav done at Bennett's prison, and it don't be opened? Why, let fly the ballot, with the command, "OPEN! or, by the eternal, you shall be knocked out of the offices which the people hav intrusted to you, but which you only abuse and disgrace."

This is a good time to bolt from either of the old parties. They are both torn with dissensions, and there is demoralization among them all. Neither of them hav any principles that they are ready to stand by, and they are all at sea. Their platforms are the work of tricksters, inspired by chance and whim and expediency, to serve the purposes of a campaign—not the dictates of justice, of science, of progress, to be as enduring as truth. Thousands of Democrats are ready to vote with any party who can establish justice and secure the blessings of liberty, honesty, and administrativ ability. Hundreds of thousands of Republicans, belonging to a party once devoted to freedom, are heartily ashamed of the recreancy which has struck their leaders and of the general hopeless condition into which the party has drifted, and are ready for a party of principles and progress—ready for a new deal with higher aims and better capacities. Liberals ought not to remain attached to either of the parties one hour after the principles upon which the republic is founded hav died out of their counsels and find no place in the making or the administration of the laws.

What is needed is a body of voters, half a million of them, say from ten thousand to twenty thousand in each state, organized with thorough effectiv party machinery as soon as possible—a body of voters who will vote solidly and loyally together for a well understood common purpose. That body of voters will need leaders to state that common purpose, to explain the situation as it changes from time to time, and to giv the word of command when the actual tug of war comes. This body of loyal, inflexible, conscience-voters, while in the minority, as they must be for some time, should be used as a whip to crack over the heads of the other parties, making our demands first of one, then of the other; and voting with either as they guarantee compliance with our demands, and then, after election, honestly enact them into laws. Then as soon as we become the majority, of course, we will hav the government; and will conduct it in our own way, which will be for the greatest good of all.

The Liberal League ought to charge itself with just exactly this mission, organize for this special purpose, and carry all this out.

As to the Republican party, who hav had possession of the government for the last twenty years, and who still hold one branch of it, to show how far they hav departed from the principles of the fathers, how far they hav become recreant to human freedom, let facts be submitted to a candid world:

1. In the small hours of a saturnalian Saturday night, March 3, 1873, with all the malignant essence of the priesthood of this country boiled down and concentrated in Anthony Comstock, and he on guard looking out for the priestly interests, and only he asking for the enactment, the Republican Congress, then expiring, passed a law allowing postal agents, and postmasters, and judges and juries of courts to decide what printed matter should be deemed "immoral," "indecent," "obscene," and should, therefore, be denied transportation in the United States mails. Under that law great crimes hav been committed, both against the persons of innocent American citizens, and against freedom of the press.

2. Immediately upon the passage of that law a Republican Postmaster-General appointed Anthony Comstock to the important position of special postal agent, thus putting the enforcement of the law into the hands of the priestly power who procured its enactment; and a Republican administration keeps him in that same position to this day, notwithstanding his demonstrated unfitness to occupy it.

3. In August, 1876, George F. Edmunds, Republican senator from Vermont, in the interest of the "God-in-the-Constitution" party, introduced a fair-seeming amendment to the Constitution, providing against the establishment of any religion by any state, and against the appropriation of money raised by tax for the support of religious schools, but with this provision nullifying the whole amendment: "This article shall not be construed to prohibit the reading of the Bible in any school or institution, and it shall not hav the effect to impair the rights of property already vested." On this proposed amendment, in a Republican Senate, after adoption and recommendation by a Republican judiciary committee, twenty-eight Senators, all Republican, voted for it, and sixteen Senators, all Democratic, voted against it. The amendment thus failed by two votes to obtain the two-thirds majority requisit to pass a constitutional amendment.

4. The priests did not quite succeed in getting their "God in the Constitution," but they did on the Trade Dollar chiefly sent to the "Heathen Chinee," and on the dirty Buzzard Dollars issued by John Sherman to disgust, if possible, the advocates of the remonetization of silver. What right had he or his party to send to the Heathen world the statement, "In God we trust?" Where is the authority for that in the Constitution, or the theory of our government? If they venture upon this assumption, where is the limit of their power in inculcating their theology on our national coins and documents?

5. The United States district-attorneys in New York and in Boston who brought the indictments and prosecuted the suits against Heywood and Bennett under the Comstock law are Republican officers. The New York attorney is a member of Comstock's Vice Society and has made speeches at his meetings.

6. Judges Clark, Clifford, Benedict, Blatchford, and Choate are Republican judges. The two B.'s are members of churches, and probably the C.'s are also.

7. The United States Centennial Commission, appointed by a Republican administration, were a majority, if not all, Republicans; and this Republican Commission ordered the closing of the Centennial Exhibition on Sunday, thus depriving hundreds of thousands of laboring, poor people of the right and privilege of visiting the Exhibition.

8. President Hayes, Republican, after proposing to appoint Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll to the position of United States Minister to Germany, allowed himself to be bulldozed by the clerical party out of making the appointment because Ingersoll is an Infidel.

9. The Republican party, in convention in Ohio to nominate a candidate for governor, to be voted for in October next, rejected Judge Taft and nominated Foster for the controling reason that Judge Taft, when on the bench, had made certain liberal rulings concerning the Bible in the schools which were distasteful to the clerical party.

10. Governor Talbot, a Republican Governor of Massachusetts, signed the petition of the priestly power not to pardon Mr. Bennett. The same bigoted and Republican Governor has just, while this paper is being written, stopped the running of railway trains to Lake Pleasant on Sunday in order to incommode, and, if possible, break up the Spiritualist camp-meeting now going on there. Indeed the general tendency of the Republican party in states and municipalities is to legislate in favor of a rigid puritanic Sunday; to interfere with the people's amusements on that day; to dictate how the people shall spend one-seventh part of their time; to deprive them of the convenience of railroad trains, of public grounds, of exhibitions, concerts of music, libraries, and other innocent diversion which can hav no other tendency than to make and keep the people contented, virtuous, and happy.

11. And now the last crowning act of infamy of this so-called party of freedom is that of its President. With 150,000 names of petitioners then before him, and more pouring in every day, and with thousands of letters, all from perfectly loyal, honorable, and respectable citizens of the United States, asking the pardon of Mr. Bennett, and with piles on piles of proofs that it was a case of sheer persecution with no justice in it, and the President himself conceding that the pamphlet indicted is not obscene and comes not under the meaning and penalty of the Comstock law, he yet refuses to pardon Mr. Bennett, the reason given out to the press being "that he did not like to interfere with the action of the United States Court, and that to pardon Bennett before he had served any part of the sentence would appear like a reflection upon the court in which the trial took place."

In view of all these crimes against liberty, committed by a once true and glorious but now decaying party, because fallen under the poisonous influence of the priesthood, the Liberals of this country, who are or hav been Republicans, hold the Republican party, as we hold an arid, dried-up, worn-out country—to be a first rate party to emigrate from.

In doing this we hav no fear of damage to the republic by bringing the Democratic party again into power. The "sum of all villainies," chattel slavery, being now out of the way, the Democratic party could not prove more recreant than the Republicans hav been to freedom of the press and to general mental liberty; and the vote in the Senate on the Bible amendment shows that they would not. The Democratic party hav learned some useful lessons in their twenty years of minority. The copperhead element is dying out and a Jeffersonian strain of new blood is flowing in. Confront them with an independent, determined, thoroughly organized body of half a million or more of voters, and they will think several times before they will decline to readopt Jeffersonian principles and liv up to them.

Since that list of grievances was catalogued another year of development has still further shown the tendency of the two great parties; steadily toward reaction, as heretofore, on the part of the Republican party, and toward freedom and progress on the part of the Democratic party—just as I predicted last year. In addition to the crimes against liberty committed by the Republican party, then instanced, the past year has developed others. The first of these is that the Republican party hav nominated a strong churchman, ex-clergyman, "Christian statesman," after the pattern of Colfax and Oakes Ames, as their candidate for the Presidency. As one Republican delegate said to another at Chicago immediately after the nomination, "Four more years of psalm-singing in the White House!" And, what is worse, four years more of all that that implies, including Comstockism, Joe Cookism, and the priestly influence generally. Are Liberal Republicans hankering after any more of these "Christian statesmen" to the extent of voting for them and bringing them in as powers either upon the throne, or still more dangerous, behind it?

Second. The "third term," and all that that implies, was only embryonic and not fully hatched, so that we could see all the game qualities of that chicken last year. This year, brooded and fed under the wings of the great Republican party—party of freedom, party that gave liberty to the slave—this foul bird was trotted out a full-fledged rooster just from Shanghai and matched in the pit at Chicago. To be sure he was beaten, but only by a feather. The virus of him still livs and poisons nearly half the Republican party, and is likely to grow and increase and come up again in formidable proportions four years hence. Is a party tainted with that leprosy, indeed, half gone down to the black death of despotism with it; is that the party for Liberals to still foster and keep in power that it may finish its unholy ambitions and make an end of all our liberties four years hence?

On this point some words of Judge Hoadley, temporary Chairman of the Democratic Convention at Cincinnati, are inspired out of the fountain of wisdom and of truth, and Liberals will do well to heed them:

"We hav been spared one great danger. Since the 8th day of June, 1880, it has been certain that the usurper will not be immediately followed by the monarch. But the third term is postponed, not averted, and the real danger is not so much in the third term as in the Republican party, which makes the third term possible. Bonaparte did not crown himself emperor until Bonapartism had corrupted France. When more than three-fifths of any political party invokes a "savior of society," that party is already so poisoned with imperialism that it has become itself a menace to the republic far more formidable than any mischief it professes to fear or any danger it was organized to repel.

"The remedy, gentlemen, for this and for all other ills of state, is in eternal vigilance. This is at once the price and the protector of liberty. This vigilance, already newly quickened among the people from whom you come, continued here and hereafter, is sure to bring victory to the Democratic principle and to the Democratic candidates—a victory so full of hope for the republic that even the 'melancholy days of November' shall be radiant with joy, and on the wings of the strong winds of March shall be wafted blessings."

Here, then, are two important steps toward reaction to be added to the eleven I catalogued last year, and not a single word or deed or vote for freedom to offset and be subtracted to lessen the fearful balance the Republicans hav laid up against the day of judgment for their great promis and small performance since the one praiseworthy act of Emancipation.

Now let us turn for a moment to the Democratic party. Here, as I predicted in my closing paragraph last year, the progress is not only satisfactory, but is really surprising. The candidate, General Hancock, is not only personally satisfactory to Liberals, but he has uttered brave, good words for all the freedoms which we demand, especially the freedom of the press. You hav already published some of them, and I need not quote them—or only the following as a sample of the Liberal whole:

"Woe be to us when it shall come to pass that the power of the magistrate, civil or military, is permitted to deal with the mere opinions or feelings of the people."

"I will maintain that the entire freedom of thought and speech, however acrimoniously indulged, is consistent with the noblest aspirations of man, and the happiest conditions of his race."

"If you deem them constitutional laws and beneficial to the country, you not only hav the right to publish your opinions, but it might be your bounden duty as a citizen to do so. Not less is it the privilege and duty of any and every citizen, wherever residing, to publish his opinions freely and fearlessly on this and every question which he thinks concerns his interest. It is a poor compliment to the merits of a case that its advocates would silence opposition by force; and generally those only who are in the wrong will resort to this ungenerous means."

Then, in addition to these just sentiments, the Democratic platform contains these words, "Separation of church and state for the good of each"—practically the whole of the first plank of the Liberal League platform. What more can we ask as a first step?

Many other considerations arise out of the situation, but these are all I can indicate now. There will be more days in this campaign, and THE TRUTH SEEKER will continue to take a hand.

T. C. LELAND.

Liberal News Items.

THE posters printed by the Courier of Buffalo, New York, to advertise the Freethinkers' Convention, is the finest piece of workmanship of the kind I ever saw. Wherever it is put up it attracts the attention of the whole town. Every friend who sends me an order for one or more of them will hav his or her name registered in my "Lamb's Book of Life."

C. FANNIE ALLYN writes: "I will be present at the Freethinkers' Convention and do my little to help the cause along, till,

"'From Greenland's icy mountains,
From India's coral strand,
To Afric's sunny fountains,'
We claim our brother's hand."

I THANKFULLY acknowledge the following contributions to aid me in the League work for the month ending July 31st, 1880: From George Briggs and S. Block, $4; Samuel Page, $1; O. B. Rollwage, 50 cents; H. T. Wright, 50 cents; L. Rollwage, 50 cents; John W. Cotton, 50 cents; S. C. Wilson, 25 cents; William T. Wilbarn, 50 cents; J. S. Bradley, $3.50; James Seba, $3.50; Charles Baer, $1; P. C. Caryell, 25 cents; John Berry, $1; Susan Reichester, 50 cents; Sarah Conboy, 50 cents; James Brown, $1; Henry Gildemeister, $5; Little Rock (Arkansas) Liberal League, $3; James Bridger, $2; A. H. Pike, $1; Elmina D. Slenker, 25 cents; L. D. Olney, $1; A. Atwood, $1; in all, $30.25.

MISS ELLEN WRIGHT, of Boston, is one of the best impersonators of character in this country. Wherever she has exhibited her wonderful gifts on the stage she has elicited high encomiums from the press. The St. Paul Pioneer-Press said of her after one of her entertainments: "Miss Ellen Wright was greeted by a very large audience last evening, and finely did she entertain them. Her personations of famous actresses were thoroughly artistic and were rendered with great power and faithfulness. The praise of the audience was divided between Lady Macbeth and Ophelia, both of which were exceptionally fine. Of her comic selections, perhaps Sarah Gamp was the best, although the Old Maid made the greatest impression upon her audience." The Liberal public will be gratified to learn that Miss Wright has consented to be present and entertain the Freethinkers at the Hornellsville Convention.

THE second volume of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," by D. M. Bennett, is before me. The last half century has produced many wonderful things, the last being Dr. Tanner's exhibition of living on a water-and-air diet; but to me the most wonderful thing that has come to my knowledge is Mr. Bennett's achievement of writing these two great volumes during his year's imprisonment at Albany. He certainly is the champion writer of the world. And the work is not only great in quantity but in quality. There is not a page among the two thousand but what contains information of value; and it is exactly the information the world is in need of and just the information the church and the priesthood hav always labored to keep from the people. And then another thing is hard to account for—how Mr. Bennett can afford to sell the books so cheap. Possibly because when he wrote them he was boarding at the expense of the state.

H. L. GREEN.

An Open Letter from Elmina to D. Priestly.

FRIEND PRIESTLY: May I say a few words in explanation? Of course I hav never "been there at the very last," but was once so near there that friends were sent for on the supposition that the "very last" was but a few hours off, and the "unknowable" was the one thing I felt no trouble or concern about. That many do feel concern before the "very last" comes is only too true, and for believers in a future it is no marvel they do feel anxious and concerned as to what they shall experience "in the beyond." But I had reference to the very last, when tired, exhausted, and worn-out nature demands, as the highest and holiest boon, rest, and rest only. Some dread and shudder with terrible forebodings at the thought of the last breath. So many say, "I would not be so afraid to die if it were not for that last breath." I tell them few realize the last breaths at all, or feel them, and it is just the same mentally. They sense so little at the very last that they think and care nothing about a future, or even the present, only as it can giv them rest. And extreme old age is often but a second childhood, and "don't care" comes then. The "aspiring, struggling, and suffering" to reach knowledge, happiness, wisdom, etc., are all right enough, but it is here and now. It is along life's present years that we must realize and enjoy the fruits of our labors and aspirations. Of course I reason from the premises that "the body is the whole human being," for it is all I hav any evidence of. I do not care to die only to giv a good feast to worms, and am glad I did not die when I was a "beautiful child," for life has been pleasant to me, and I hope I hav done a little to make it pleasant to others. As to being happy by and by, that is all well enough, but I want people to be happy now, be happy all the time, be happy in preparing for happiness in the years to come, and not waste present opportunities in longing for what may never come. Some work like slaves, and never rest, never take time to enjoy the beauties and blessings of the day, but save all bright and blissful experience they might hav for some coming day, when they shall hav won riches, power, or fame; and when youth, health, and strength are gone, and the heart has lost its bounding elasticity, and the nerves are dull and dead to joy's entrancing thrills, they find too late that for them there is only age, pain, and incapacity left. If there be a future we shall enjoy it none the less because it comes as a glad and unexpected surprise to us. The now and to-day are what we are called upon to improve, enjoy, and make the best of. If a person wishes to believe in spirits, gods, ghosts, fairies, etc., as a means of happiness, I condemn them not. If men spend life's opportunities digging for pots of gold supposed to be buried by Capt. Kidd, they are free to do so. If they prefer dreams and air castles to real tangibilities, they are at liberty to dwell among them and revel in their own imaginings. I am glad to read all that our Spiritual friends giv us of their experiences, and hope that by and by some plan will be hit upon that will solve the mysteries and make them plain and clear. That all the so-called spirit manifestations are humbug and trickery I do not believe, but that they are connected with those who are gone forever is to me more than doubtful. We are what we are of necessity. We believe as we do from force of evidence, and move and think as we are compelled to do by the circumstances of the past and the present.

"We are no other than a moving row
Of magic shadow-shapes that come and go
Round with this sun-illumined lantern held
In midnight by the master of the show.

Impotent pieces of the game he plays
Upon the checker-board of nights and days;
Hither and thither moves and checks and slays,
And one by one back in the closet lays."

Snowville, Va., July 4, 1880. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

The True Policy for Liberals.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been a little amused and a good deal saddened in reading what you and quite a number of other Liberals hav said during the last two weeks in reference to political preferences Each article bears the unmistakable "ear-marks" of the bias of the writer. You hav been persecuted, outrageously wronged. You feel it keenly. This, together with your opposition to the financial schemes of the Republican party, has made you hate that party. I do not blame you. Self preservation is the highest law of our being. The other writers equally show their bias in their articles, as they prefer the Republican, Democratic, or Greenback parties. Much will be said in favor of both old parties, and very much against them in the next three months. I do not think it in the power of either to inaugurate any useful reform calculated to benefit humanity. Organizations are brought into existence to serve the needs of humanity, to carry out and establish certain theories, desires, or wants. When the purposes for which the organization was built up hav been established, that organization seldom, if ever, takes a step forward, or leads in new enterprises, or progresses, but instead it fossilizes, becomes corrupt, sickens, and dies. New ideas, new possibilities, require new organizations to put them into force. New wine, new bottles.

I predict, upon the strength of history, that no great change will ever be effected by either of the old parties in finance, or in relation to human freedom. I now desire to call attention to one fact, viz., you cannot enslave the minds of a people who are free until after they are materially enslaved. I mean, reduce the people from a condition of plenty to that of want, poverty, and it is then a short and easy road to take away their every liberty and right. Victor Hugo said, "Learn to produce wealth and learn to distribute, and you shall hav material grandeur and moral grandeur combined." I hold that to be a self-evident truth.

A people possessed of intelligence and industry will produce wealth; and if they only know how to distribute this wealth, or exchange commodities cheaply and in the interest of the producer, those people will be a materially and morally grand people, and their liberties cannot be taken from them. The people of the United States are and hav been industrious, but they are not intelligent upon the question of distribution: and how? because they hav allowed the two great agents, money and transportation, to pass into the hands of selfish monopolies, who hav and are using these agents to enrich themselvs and to impoverish the producer. All close and thoughtful observers hav watched with anxiety the building up in the last twenty years of a powerful money oligarchy, as well as imperial railroad combinations. What does this portend but history repeating itself? Democratic America to be subsidized to a monarchical money and railroad ring. How does that suit you, Liberals of America? Do you see it?

Individual liberty is a sacred right, and that is just what it would preserve by preserving, or rather restoring, to the people their material rights. Circumstances hav conspired to attract the attention of some of our Liberals—and especially those located in that sink of spoliation, New York—to individual religious liberty, and I would not hav them lose sight of this "God-in-the-Constitution party," but I do not think there is half so much danger to real liberty from that source as from those imperial forces spoken of above.

Mr. Editor, believing, as I do, that our material interests are much more in peril, and consequently through their first destruction would come the overthrow of all our dearest rights, would it not be well to pay more attention to the bread-and-butter question and let alone, for this year at least, the nomination of a Liberal candidate for President. The Republican party, so long in power, must be beaten, broken, disgraced, or the Democratic party signally defeated, before many of our Liberals can individualize themselvs enough to divorce themselvs from their own old party affiliations. I am divorced from the forces that now rule. I hav no relish for "bloody shirt" or "Republican thief." I do not intend to be frightened by the cry of "wolf," especially when the pretended alarmist is carrying the wolf under his own skirt. H. H. MORRISON.

Charleston, Ill., July 18, 1880.

The Misdeeds of Christians.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am surprised than any one in the Liberal ranks should object to the publication in Liberal papers of items recording the evil deeds of priests and pious members of Christian churches. The principal stock in trade of priests consists in their endeavor to convince their dupes that Infidelity and crime are synonymous terms. With an infinit degree of gusto they roll under their tongues and anon hiss through their teeth the word Infidel, expecting thereby to utterly humiliate their opponents. But the world is asking for arguments and solid facts, not base, unfounded assertions and invectivs.

We are told by several thin-skinned individuals among us that we should deal tenderly with the erring shepherds; that their misdeeds should not be published; that it is no argument against Christianity that so many, both shepherd and flock, stray into forbidden pastures. We don't use these items as arguments, or at any rate regard them as of prime importance, but we giv Christians the benefit of doses of their own medicine just to see how they like it and for a warning as well. The secular press all over the country print these items of news, accompanied with scathing comments. Must Liberal papers pass them by as unnecessarily severe and unfit for publication? Is it not their duty rather to show up these wolves in sheep's clothing? I hav often been sick at heart when I hav observed the adulation bestowed on priests, especially such manifestations of it as are exhibited by the gentler sex. The wolves are not slow in taking advantage of the confidence shown by the sheep. If by the publication of the sins of the clergy we can break the power of these wolves, society is benefited thereby.

In the record of crimes committed during the past few years, it has been noticed that the most fiendish, those which required the nerve and brutality of a demon, such as the slow poisoning of a wife or husband, were perpetrated by members of churches. Murders committed in the heat of passion, or while intoxicated, are fearful enough, but what are we to think of the poisoner who, having sworn to love, honor, and cherish his partner all the days of his life, now coolly murders her, as it were, by inches? Standing by the side of his victim from hour to hour, and for weeks, he administers the fatal drug and watches the slow ebbing away of life. When I think of such deeds I experience a deep feeling of humiliation. I must admit that I belong to the genus homo, but I console myself with the reflection that I am not a Christian. W. B. SICKELS.

(From the Iowa State Independent.)

The Intolerance of the Pulpit.

Because the Turners of Des Moines had determined to celebrate the Fourth of July on the fourth, and because they actually did celebrate it on that day instead of the third, they were severely criticised and censured by several of our Des Moines preachers. Well, this is a free country, and they hav a perfect right to find fault with those who believe that a great day like the Fourth of July—the most important anniversary day in the history of the world—should be celebrated on the day it occurs; but in their criticism they should, as good Christians, be more moderate, more charitable, or at least more just. Some of these divines seemed to exhibit none of these qualities—they ranted and tore about in their pulpits, as if they had gone mad. The delightful music of Prof. Robinson's band that led the Turners to the place of the festivities acted upon their ears the same way that a red rag acts upon the eyes of an incensed bull, and they became frantic with rage. The banners that were carried—aye even the banner with stars and stripes that preceded the procession—seemed to them to be the symbol of heretics and moral degeneracy, and they tuned up their lungs and shouted in perfect terror over the audacity of a people that dared to celebrate the Fourth of July on a Sunday.

One of the ministers—we believe it was the Fifth Street Methodist—said he was "sorry that his brother Turners should so desecrate the Sabbath." Now, while we might reply in the same spirit, that we are sorry that our ministerial brother should hav so little patriotism as to want to postpone the celebration of so great a day as the Fourth, we yield to him the right to express his opinion in the manner he did; but when at the Union meeting Sunday evening ministers went so far as to insult the Germans of this country, then we hav cause to object, and if our informant is correct, they did insult them, using language in connection with them that would have been out of place even in a bar-room debate.

Said one of the ministers, and report has it that Rev. D. R. Lucas so far forgot himself, the Germans "should be put down and out!" if they persisted in the desecration of the Sabbath, and violating the laws of God and man in celebrating the national holiday on the fourth.

Never, save in the days of the inquisition, was bigotry and intolerance more strikingly illustrated, and all that is needed is the reintroduction of the rack and the screw.

They will "put us down and out," will they, because we decorate soldiers' graves on Sunday, and because we celebrate the Fourth on Sunday? We will see about that. There were over a thousand adult Americans in Brown's Park on Sunday, and had there been fair weather that day, there would have been four times the number there, all of whom are as good citizens, as liberal, generous, and upright, as any of those whose mission it seems to be to ostracise others because they differ from them in religious matters. These ministers forget that it is not the Germans alone who appreciate the importance of Independence Day, and that they are not the only ones who believe that the day should be observed on its anniversary. There are thousands of Americans, Englishmen, Irishmen, Danes, Swedes, and Norwegians who do not indorse the intolerance of those ministers, and they, too, will hav to be "put down and out."

It seems to us that Rev. Lucas and his confreres hav undertaken a big job, one they cannot very well carry out. And we tell them that these people are not to be intimidated, and declare by the memories of the fathers of the Republic who bled and died for civil and religious liberty, that we are not going to be put down and out, and that we will celebrate all great national holidays on Sunday when they fall on that day. This right we insist upon, Rev. Lucas to the contrary notwithstanding.

Lecture-Field Notes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I left Chicago on the 28th of June to attend the camp-meeting of Liberals at Lansing, Mich. Occurring as it did in the busiest part of the year, and getting well soaked with rain, the number in attendance was very small.

Cephas B. Lynn, the versatil correspondent of the Banner of Light, Boston, was present. Mr. Lynn is one of the most natural and magnetic orators of this country. His services are in good demand, and he rarely fails in securing overflowing houses. He is a gentleman of liberal, practical, common-sense views. It is a delight to listen to him. He never fails to interest and instruct, and the ease with which he sways his audiences is simply magical. Humor, pathos, terse sentences, crisp as the crackling leaves in November—but humanitarian impulses dominate every expression. The living issues are grasped by his intellect and deftly bound in bundles of golden grain of strength-yielding truth. Month after month in Eastern cities hav crowded assemblies, with great profit to themselvs, listened to this young and gifted lecturer. The church would gleefully capture him, but Mr. Lynn in early days of privation stood by the truth as he understood it, and now in his season of prosperity rings out his silver-toned words in behalf of a broad, catholic liberality, and against creeds, sects, dogmas, and superstitions. I hope that he can be induced to labor in the West at the close of his present series of Eastern engagaments. His address is Boston, Mass., care of Banner of Light.

MASON, MICH.

Here reside my sister, her husband, John Lyon, Esq., and the many nieces and nephews. I had thought of spending one whole day to memorize their names. Success only passable. Alice (niece) and Alva (nephew) graduated a year ago at Mason school. Alice is a member of that most useful profession, a schoolma'am. Alva aims to be a lawyer after a four-years' term at Ann Arbor University.

Mr. Lyon is a successful cultivator of bees. Scores of hives yield honey and music all the long summer day. Besides, he has five acres, mostly for berries. Milk, honey, and berries were my portion for a week—a bill of fare fit for the gods.

Brother and sister were anxious that I should deliver a series of lectures at Mason. I called upon the sheriff to obtain the use of the courthouse, the best place in town, but was informed that it could not be used for Liberal lectures; only for temperance. Let us hope that the time is not far distant when Liberals, in hundreds of towns, will quit feeding churches, so that they can hav some means to build and own the best hall in each locality.

HASTINGS, MICH.

I held five meetings here. Hot weather is no impediment to having Liberal lectures. We, however, took advantage of the situation by assembling under the grateful shade of trees in courthouse square. The congregation grew until we had one thousand listeners, counting those who sat under their own vines and fig-trees within earshot. Mine were the first Materialistic lectures ever delivered in Hastings. My reception was certainly very cordial, and on my departure I received an urgent invitation to come again. Dr. Geo. Wood was chiefly instrumental in getting up the lecture course. Hon. D. R. Cook, Chas. Bauer, Chas. E. Trask, J. L. Reed, J. N. Russell, Dr. Burton, James Dunning, Harry Rogers, Melvin Williams, Enoch Andrus, Cleopatra Geschwind, are a few names of the Liberals of Hastings. I giv their addresses in order to help Liberals to become acquainted with one another. A Liberal League was organized here.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

I here called upon my old-time friends of more than a quarter of a century, Dr. E. Woodruff and wife, and was pleasantly entertained by their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Weatherly. I crossed Lake Michigan, landed in Chicago, visited my friends Mr. and Mrs. Wick, and from here I hie away to Monmouth, Ill., to giv a course of lectures. W. F. JAMIESON.

Ten Thousand Gods Wanted at St. Johns, Mich.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Mr. A. L. Butler has been elected a member of the St. Johns School Board in place of Mr. Hurd. And it is possible there may be a change of gods for the school. Therefore I most earnestly desire that every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER will write the Profs. Yntema, Randolph Strickland, O. W. Barker, George H. Stephenson, Charles Grisson, Josiah Upton, and A. L. Butler a letter upon the subject of the gods. Also send either by mail or express a sample god of glass, brass, wood, or tin, or any god that will stir the soul within.

The accompanying letter might be something like the following:

We this day send a sample god for your consideration. Should you contemplate a change of gods for the use of your school, we shall be pleased to receive your order for one got up far superior in size and workmanship to the one we now send. This god keeps no she-bears for killing little children, and we will guarantee that he will answer prayers as effectually as any other god, and he will feed the hungry as well as did your present god feed the ten millions who hav starved to death within the last few years.

Very truly yours, ———

Let every one send at least one god; even a picture of a god will be better than no god. Let there be such a great inpouring of gods as to surprise even the godly.

St Johns, Mich., July 28, 1880 M. BABCOCK.

Theologies.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Religiously born and religiously educated, I hav, in my threescore and twenty-two excursions around the sun, passed through most, or all the current theologies and isms of the period.

Man—as the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher truthfully informs his congregation—begins low down in the scale of being, and is going up.

In his infantil condition, and on each ascending grade, he has, as guiding father and nursing mother, a theology or ism adapted to his mental expansion—all of which, in turn, must be left behind.

Were we in Hottentotdom, at every advance movement, we'd hav a mother to flog.

Some years ago, meeting a fair damsel, whose life, from one year of age, had been in Shakerdom, I said to her, "A———, can you tell me where I shall find God?"

After brief reflection, the fair damsel replied, "'Tis not for me to say where you shall find God. I find God in all the work of his hands—in mountains, valleys, and plains—in oceans, rivers, and rills—in trees, plants, birds, squirrels, and flowers—I find God in my brethren and sisters; of more importance still, I find God in my own soul—a law to direct my every action, word, and thought."

Mentally, I responded amen. PRENTISS.

Slavery and the Political Parties.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It is true, as some of your correspondents charge, that the Democratic party has been the ally of slavery. But let them consider how it happened. The question of slavery never got fairly into politics till 1844, when the Liberty party defeated Henry Clay for President, not merely because he was a slaveholder but because he was not personally opposed to the acquisition of slave territory. What stalwart Republican will now rise and condemn the Free-soilers of 1844 for defeating the Whig candidate even at the expense of a Democratic triumph?

In 1852 both political parties squarely indorsed the Fugitive Slave law. Did not the Abolitionists then do right in throwing away their votes on John P. Hale, even though the result was a Democratic triumph?

So then in 1852 the Democrats obtained the ascendancy and the Whig party began to die.

Then, in 1856, when the Whig party was dead and the party in power had become, nolens volens, the ally of slavery—just as the Whigs would hav been had they gained the ascendancy—the antislavery or Republican party was born, and in 1860 it triumphed. But while it was composed mostly of disgruntled Whigs, it nevertheless derived some of its strongest elements from the Democracy. For it cannot be denied that the original Democratic party was more in sympathy with human liberty than either of its adversaries, the Federal or the Whig party.

Now my earliest affiliation was with the Whigs; but I was not much of a Clay man in 1844, and refused to vote for Taylor in 1848, and for Scott in 1852.

But while I remember that the Democratic party became the ally of slavery, and thereby lost its character, must I forget that the Republican party perpetrated the gigantic crime of stealing the Presidency?

WM. HENRY BURR.

P. S.—I hav no doubt from what I hav read in the first volume of "The Gods," etc., that it will be a useful book of reference. Many of the works from which it is compiled I hav not read and hardly expect to read; but whatever I want to know about the gods of antiquity I presume I can find in your book. I now inclose $5 for which please send me the second volume. W. H. B.

Washington, D. C., July 23, 1880.

Our Hymn Book.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I wish to speak a word in commendation of Eliza Boardman Burns' Liberal Hymn Book. I hav had this little gem of a volume now for some weeks, and the more I read it the better I like it. The poems of standard poets are doubly worth the price of the book. To hav the bold, brave, and truthful utterances of real poets, for Liberalism, is a good help to our cause. And the old hymns adapted to progressiv thought are just what Liberals need for League meetings and all other gatherings where music charms the ear and givs sweet voicings to truth. This book is so small it can be carried in the vest pocket, and yet it contains nearly 150 pages, and all for the small sum of 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, New York city.

Snowville, Va. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Michigan Camp-Meeting.

The Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists hav completed arrangements, and will hold their semi-annual meeting at Lansing, on the Central Fair Grounds, and make it a ten-days' camp-meeting, commencing on Friday, Aug. 20th, and closing on Monday, Aug. 30th. Speakers eminent for talent, the best in the lecture field, will be engaged. The world-renowned medium Henry Slade will be present, also his niece, Miss Agnes L. Slade, who will take part in the exercises as an independent singer. Other singers will also be present, and all speakers and mediums who may wish to attend the meeting will be heartily welcomed. MISS J. R. LANE, Sec.

A Queer Freak of God Almighty.

On the 16th of July God sent rain and hail in large quantities over a strip of territory extending from Fort Amro, N. Y., clear across Vermont to Hanover, N. H. Hailstones weighing a pound were picked up. At Plymouth, Vt., a piece of ice twelve inches long and three inches in diameter was found. From fifteen inches to two feet of water fell, washing out roads, flooding meadows, and carrying away bridges. The hail was thrown by a violent wind, breaking window lights, cutting corn and other crops to pieces, knocking fruit from the trees, and uprooting the largest trees, and blowing down houses. The damage in the various towns along the track is estimated at from twenty to one hundred thousand dollars in each. Thus God wilfully destroyed enough property to build him a finer cathedral than now stands in the state of Vermont, or is ever liable to stand there. It would keep a good smart minister preaching for fifty thousand years. The Baptists at West Pawlet are trying to rebuild their church, recently destroyed by fire, with no insurance. As the members are almost all farmers, and their crops are pretty well knocked to pieces, they don't feel very plucky about "shelling out" to build a house for a God who don't care any more for them than that. They don't seem to want him to settle in this vicinity.

If the hail had destroyed the Infidels' crops, and skipped over the Baptists', they could hav easily accounted for it. But to see it all swept down is indeed hard to account for. The ministers havn't thanked God for it. One shook his head and said, "It's nothing to what you will get if you don't reform." Had it been a storm of doughnuts, potatoes, and lumber for the new church, instead of hail, and communion wine instead of rain, we should never hav heard the last about "his infinit love and mercy on us poor worms of the dust." Just how long it will be before these superstitious Christians will find out that God don't care a snap more for them than for anybody else, and that he is no respecter of persons, is not known. They ought to see that people out of the church fare just as well as those in it, and that God Almighty never heard a prayer, and don't know there is such an organization as the Christian church; that he works by laws that he cannot himself change, and never does anything outside of those laws. * * *

Obituary.

Died, in Adrian, Michigan, on the 5th of July, after a protracted illness, Edwin Comstock, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. He was born in Niagara county, New York, and came with his mother and his family to Michigan in 1829, and to Adrian in 1840. In 1845 he married Emeline Brown, and commenced a mercantil business, which he continued to near the close of his life. He was among the foremost men of Michigan in the reforms of his time, and assisted in organizing the State Antislavery Society in this city in 1852. Both himself and wife ever gave generously of their time, talents, money, and hospitality to carrying forward that great and benevolent enterprise till the last bondsman was set free and the chattel slavery system was no more. The cause of temperance, too, shared largely in their sympathy, and had no more devout supporters than they, as well by example as by precept. And since Southern slavery was abolished they hav expended all the aids and influences given to that object so long in the cause of woman's social, civil, and political enfranchisement.

Mr. Comstock became early an ardent admirer and supporter of THE TRUTH SEEKER. His subscription was always paid in advance. Nor did he ever fail to bear testimony to the fidelity with which it and its editor-in-chief sustained and defended the principles of Liberal thought.

He was often deeply affected, even to tears, at the cruel course of Bundy, Abbot, Benjamin F. Underwood, and other professed Liberals toward him, as well after as before his deliverance from the Christian bastile at Albany, where religious bigotry, hate, spleen, and spite had so illegally, as well as unjustly, incarcerated him, and gloated over his terrible sufferings while he so patiently endured them.

But our faithful friend Comstock has now gone from human sight, and we can most appropriately say, as of another in an age gone by:

"A worthy man has sunk to rest.
To rise, or sleep, as heaven deems best.
The friend of man, the friend of truth,
The friend of age, the guide of youth.
For hearts like his with virtue warmed,
For heads like his, so well inform·d.
If there's another life, he livs in bliss;
If there is not, he made the best of this."

Adrian, Mich., July 18, 1880. S. D. MOORE.

Correction.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Please allow me to say that the word promised should be substituted for "prominent" in the notice of Mr. Bennett's book on "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," July 17th, so as to read, "The significant truth underlying these general statements is in condemnation of the common policy of relying upon the prison punishments of time, and the promised torments of eternity for the suppression of original thought," etc. (Second column).

Do me the further kindness to exchange S for L, toward the close of the same notice, that I may giv credit where credit is due, and that your readers may become better acquainted with Jules Soury, the author of some of the conclusions reached in the article of July 17th.

One more, and this the last. Insert but after the word nothing in the notice of July 24th, so as to make it read, "Here, as elsewhere, the assumption of a 'providential intervention' must pass for nothing but an attempt to reduce the number of the gods," etc. (first column), and oblige your co-worker and well-wisher, J. H. W. TOOHEY.

Prof. P. O. Hudson,

The balladist and composer, termed the "Sankey of Liberalism," can be engaged to sing for all Liberal or Spiritual meetings. He will be at the state Convention at Hornellsville this year. His address is 144 Grand River Avenue, Detroit, Michigan. His terms will be reasonable.

ABOUT forty years ago Mr. John L. Stephens published two works on Central America and Southern Mexico. So eager was the public to obtain information in regard to numerous ruins of ancient cities which he described that, though each of the works comprised two expensiv volumes, ten editions of the first work were sold within three months, and the success of the second was quite as remarkable. Other travelers, American and European, hav visited the ruins and hav written deeply interesting volumes in regard to their immense architectural monuments, their elaborate decorations, their singular, uninterpreted bas-reliefs and hieroglyphic tablets, but as yet no light has been thrown upon the origin of the people who built these cities. All the knowledge we can ever expect to obtain of the history of these people must be drawn from the ruins. Recently a well-equipped expedition has been dispatched to Central America, charged with the work of systematically searching for everything that may tend to place within the domain of history the facts connected with a people whose career must hav been one of the most interesting in the general development of the world's civilization. The founders of these cities were our predecessors on this continent; their peculiar civilization and their esthetic development are of the highest interest as regards the question of the origin of man himself; their history is, in fact, the first chapter of the general history of the American continent. Though we are not the lineal descendants of these builders of cities that must hav rivaled even Babylon and Nineveh in some of their architectural features, the results of their culture hav been left to our safe keeping, and from these results it is evidently our duty, as far as possible, to gather the materials for filling up the unwritten first chapter of our own history. A full account of the explorations of the party comprising the expedition is to be published from month to month in the North American Review, with illustrations of the most important objects discovered. The August number of the Review contains an article by the editor introductory to the series, entitled "Ruined Cities of Central America." Other articles in the same number of the Review are "The Law of Newspaper Libel," by John Proffat; "The Census Laws," by Charles F. Johnson; "Nullity of the Emancipation Edict," by Richard H. Dana; "Principles of Taxation," by Prof. Simon Newcomb; "Prince Bismarck as a Friend of America and as a Statesman," by Moritz Busch; and "Recent Literature," by Charles T. Congdon.

THE axiom of our government that "all men are born free and equal" is true only so far as privileges are concerned, for it is sufficiently evident to require no argument that all are not born equal in mental and physical endowments.—Foote's Health Monthly.

Letters from Friends.

MOCKESON, TENN., June 7, 1880

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I am glad you are peppering God's ignorant children with common sense. I hope it will make them smart enough to be honest and civil. Sir Jas. Mackintosh says, "Morality admits no discoveries." And Buckle says, on page 132, vol. i, "History of Civilization:" "There is no instance on record of an ignorant man who, having good intentions and supreme power to enforce them, has not done far more evil than good. And whenever the intentions hav been very eager and the power very extensiv, the evil has been enormous. But if you can diminish the sincerity of that man, if you can mix some alloy with his motivs, you will likewise diminish the sins which he works. If he is selfish as well as ignorant, it will often happen that you can play off his vice against his ignorance, and by exciting his fears restrain his mischief. If, however, he has no fear, if he is entirely unselfish, if his sole object is the good of others, if he pursues that object with enthusiasm, upon a large scale and with disinterested zeal, then it is that you hav no check upon him; you hav no means of preventing the calamities which, in an ignorant age, an ignorant man will be sure to inflict. How entirely this is verified by experience we may see in studying the history of religious persecution."

I think the above illustrates the position of your and our persecutors, "ignorant and selfish." If we cannot educate them we may the masses of the people, for they desire to hav the truth and use it. I am a Spiritualist, and must manage to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER with the Banner of Light and Mind and Matter. The truth shall make us free. We ought to unite and vote for an honest man for president.

Yours truly, J. K. DEORTH.

---

MT. PLEASANT, IOWA, July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I like your paper. I like your political article in your issue of the 17th. I was a Republican until I saw the party was fast becoming the religious party of the country. I am now voting so as to prevent the ministerial and Young Men's Christian Associations from controlling our president and our Congress. Here is the vital, the life and death point between freedom and superstition. Our present salvation is in a change of administration, and don't you forget it if you wouldn't make a serious blunder. Garfield and Weaver are both preachers. We hav no reason to believe that Hancock will be controlled by superstitious influences. Yours truly, ANDREW GOAN.

---

THRIVING DAKOTA.

VOLGA, DAK., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The outside world has very vague ideas about Dakota and the Black Hills. Hav you any objections to my telling your readers something about it? The great difficulty is that THE TRUTH SEEKER, broad as is the field that it covers, is not large enough to hold all I could say. It would take a volume to giv you an idea of the vastness, the resources, and the growth of this wonderful region.

Dakota is an empire of 153,000 square miles—larger than all the New England states, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware combined, and in all its vast area there is not an acre that is not rich in resources, agricultural and mineral and pastural. Within her borders are the most exhaustless gold mines, the grandest wheat fields, and millions of acres of the finest pasture lands upon the face of the globe. What do you think of a valley that yields eight hundred bushels of potatoes and eighty bushels of oats to the acre? hemmed in by solid golden hills whose summits kiss the sky. Think of wheat farms, Dalrymple's near Jargo, that last year produced 500,000 bushels of wheat—enough to load 1,500 cars, making a train fifteen miles long—clearing above all expenses $85,000 as the profits of one year's crop. Think of the farms like Grandin's, forty miles north of Bismarck, in the valley of the Red River, who owns and runs a line of steamboats and barges to ship the harvest of his own farm, has his own elevators, and may take a notion any time to build his own railroad to Lake Superior. Think of cities like Bismarck, Fargo, Sioux Falls, and Deadwood, from the savage nothingness of five years ago changed into all the bustling activity, wealth, and luxury of prosperous metropolitan cities, with immense wholesale and retail stores, banks, theaters, hotels, and daily papers that would be a credit to any region of a century's growth. All this in a region that ignorant geographers only a few years ago set down as a frigid wilderness destined to remain forever annihilated, and you can hav a faint idea of Dakota. I hav done some talking for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but money is scarce until after harvest, when I think you can expect some new subscribers, also orders for books, for the people are a wide-awake progressiv class, and where I hav circulated your paper, are eyes to read. Yours,

SARAH KELLOGG.

---

CLEVELAND, O., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As you are so busy I will only write a postal card. Your work is herculean; hav wondered how you can accomplish so much. Generous! you are the soul of generosity. I nor no other Liberal can compensate you for what you hav done for us. True, the year of your imprisonment did make an effort to save the mark, There had been no merit otherwise. Now that I did it, do not offer compensation. All thanks to you just the same. I saw all such magnanimity in your face. I do nothing for orthodoxy, besides I hav not paid for THE TRUTH SEEKER as I should. Hav practiced great economy since a widow, but in a year hope to swing my matters in better shape. Am called a good financier. Before I die hope to do something to aid our cause by donation to editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Such is my ambition. I wish to put myself on record for truth, brotherly love. The book, "Gods of Ancient and Modern Times," meets the demand so long felt. Every writer, speaker, worker in the Liberal ranks should possess themselves of a copy. How could you collect and produce so much while in prison? Truly the angels do aid you. This prison child of yours is dear to my heart. Your suffering, like death, sanctified it! So great is my regard for it, fear superstition may sink in the same. You know I hav decided convictions, and had I health, pen nor tongue should falter nor rest while life remains. Oh, the need of earnest workers! When one is in earnest they carry conviction and conquest in their march. O, for more "Rev. Chaineys." My good brother, may spirits of light, great wisdom guide you until we meet in the better land.

Yours in love, GRACE L. PARKHURST.

---

MONMOUTH, ILL., July 28, 1880.

T. C. LELAND, Dear Sir: TRUTH SEEKER of July 24th, "Good for Greene," splendid. I say good for that heathen Chinee, Tee Cee Lee. May he be preserved from forty-horse-power fasts always. Worlds without end, or thereabouts. Your fellow-heathen, W. F. JAMIESON.

---

BELOIT, July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I noticed a letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER, No. 29, of Col. Ingersoll's political situation. While his views are very good in regard to asking those questions, all is right. But he says he understands that Gen. Garfield is a Christian. If that is a fact, we as Liberals want to be careful how we take their word, for, I understand that President Hayes promised the Colonel that D. M. Bennett should be released, but his word did not prove true. Now I am no party man. I am ready to vote for any man that will come the nearest to supporting the National Liberal League Constitution, and I do know that when I was circulating a petition for the release of D. M. Bennett a number of Catholics did sign the petition and not one of any other church denomination could I get to sign it. I am no Catholic, but I would as soon take their word as any other religious denomination, and I would not giv one cent for the word of any of them. If we can get no better assurance than their word, we had better vote for Robert G. Ingersoll or D. M. Bennett, for we know that D. M. Bennett has been tried, not in the fiery furnace, but in the Albany Penitentiary. Let every Liberal be sure that he don't vote for a damnationist.

Yours wholly for Liberal views, JAMES BRIDGER.

---

RICHFORD, VT., July 15, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: We hav had one hundred years of Federal and Republican, Whig and Democratic, politics, and four hundred years of Catholic and Protestant Christianity; and now men in office are such that we must pay five times our legal postage, and get a post-office order to send two dollars across the state, or hav it stolen.

My folks are controversialists, and I wish they were more definit.

1. (Gen. i.) "God created the skies and the earth." A simple affirmation. I wish some one would giv one particle of good evidence to prove it true; furnish some good evidence that such a character as the Jewish Jahveh-Elohim ever had a real existence.

2. (Gen. ii.) Good evidence to prove that Jahveh-Elohim, or Lord God, did make a garden man-trap, baited with woman and apples, and a devil to attend the trap.

3 Good evidence to prove that the literal eating of forbidden fruit caused all children to be born sinners so depraved that God had to make an endless hell of fire and brimstone to put nine-tenths of mankind into after we are dead?

4. Prove that God did hate man more than all other creatures — before there were any priests—creature, or thing!

5. Furnish good evidence that any living thing ever had knowledge or consciousness after it was really dead!

We offer fifty dollars for good evidence to prove the above assertions. We will not take Bible texts as proof of any real thing, because the Bible says God is a spirit, God is fire, God is truth, God is love, God is loving to every man, and his tender mercies are over all his works. The Bible says the dead know not anything. I am not going to prove by it that they do know anything when dead. Spiritualists do not prove they do by the Bible.

Crime stalks abroad; we all hav fears;
It rages like a storm;
They've preached their hell a thousand years,
And still there's no reform.

J. NOYES.

---

PESCADERO, CAL., July 12, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Perhaps you think at times you should hear from me. So it is, but I hav no money yet. Don't be alarmed, I soon will hav money. The paper must and shall be paid for as soon as I get the wherewith.

As I am writing, please allow me a little space to say a few words about the Bible plan of salvation, as set forth by Christian theology. It is said to be an eternal plan, and that it was planned by an eternal "God." Can any man or woman conceive of a plan as old as its planner, or an invention as old as its inventor? Is it not impossible for such a thing to be as an eternal plan, since all plans must hav been preceded by a planner? To my mind, the dogma of everlasting salvation, as well as that of everlasting perdition, with the would-be glorious and beautiful plan which precedes them, and which must of necessity itself be preceded, is all a myth, and, let me ask, where is the beauty in it? I hav heard it said in times of yore,

"There is music in the drum,
And there is music in the kettles;
There is music in the knife and fork
With which you eat your victuals."

By a similar conception of things, we may say,

There is beauty in a snake,
And there is beauty in a spider;
There is beauty in a big mouth,
Because it opens wider;
There is a beauty in a tadpole,
And there is beauty in a frog;
There is beauty in a turtle
That sits upon a log.

To be frank and honest, I must say that it is only by such conceptions as these that I can see any beauty whatever in this would-be great, grand, harmonious, beautiful plan of salvation which hangs mainly upon the single hinge of faith, "He who believeth shall be saved; he who believeth not shall be damned." Just as if men and women could believe just as they pleased; as if there could be any virtue in trying to believe that which is repugnant to reason!

WM. WORLEY.

---

CLYDE, KAN., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your article on the political situation in your issue of June 17th is keen as a rapier and pointed as a gladiator's steel, and hits the Republican party betwixt wind and water. Ring the tocsin bell loud and long, until every Liberal in America shall awake and count one in the loyal army for freedom. Let no Liberal vote for Garfield. The Republican government has planted its iron heel on the neck of our worthy chief, has placed him in bondage vile, has placed an espionage upon the mails. These things are insults to the cause we love, and savor of popery and kingcraft. Yes, "giv us a new deal." But Liberals must not for a moment go back to Democracy. That would be jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. Let us hav a new party that will scorn Tammany rings, "bar'ls" of money, national banks, bloated bondholders, railroad kings, male suffrage, God in the Constitution—a party that will advocate and carry out the grand principles that Paine, Jefferson, Franklin, and hosts of others now living hav advocated. Let us, in the name of humanity and truth, unite and form a solid front, and carry the war into every town and hamlet, and use our paper bullets where they will wound the enemy in a vital part. Yes, Bro. Bennett, with your arrest the war becomes inevitable, and, in the language of the immortal Patrick Henry, "Our chains are being forged." Their clanking might hav been heard during the past year in the Albany penitentiary. Every gale that sweeps over our beloved country brings to our ears mutterings of the coming storm. But if we can not bring out a new party then let us all unite with the Greenbackers. It is certainly far in advance of old conservativ Democracy or renegade Republicanism. Let us begin to build up the Liberal temple now. Like a band of loving brothers let us work together. Yours, D. C. SEYMOUR.

---

BURTON, July 30, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: On a cursory examination of the two volumes of your new book, I apprehend they will prove of inestimable value to the scholar, thinker, and searcher after truth, as it has fruited on life's fair tree, struggling up the battling centuries. Simple compilation of two such magnificent volumes is a task. Selecting, arranging, and fitting into the theme on hand requires great effort. I think no penitentiary of this country ever bore such fruit May they prove two powerful battering rams to demolish the walls of superstition, light the torch of truth and freedom, and make flush the pocket of D. M. Bennett. For the accomplishment of this object find inclosed six dollars, amount of bill for books. Very respectfully, D. HIGBIE, M.D.

---

GLENBEULAH, WIS., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Two numbers of your paper hav just been received, and here is a little to support it. Glancing over its live pages, I notice it is no "pent up Utica," nor bigoted slogan, knocking every man down who differs.

Reading your lengthy editorial "Politics for Liberals," I can readily comprehend why you are so in earnest, uttering words that burn with the fire of resolution. He who has served under chains can well appreciate human liberty. "The greatest of all are the principles of free speech, free press, and free mails." That's splendid; has the right ring. It means change, as you say. Though some of us may see a plank underneath that, the two together make a stronger platform. But a word of difference as to the means to be used. You advise Liberals to vote the Democratic ticket—Hancock and English—averring that while your sympathies are with the Greenbackers, "they can accomplish nothing by running a separate ticket."

Why, sir, do you not hear the rumble of voices coming up from the toiling millions all over the country, demanding redress, retrenchment, reform? There's a power behind the Republican throne or the Democratic chair. The oppressed millions in workshops, in fields, in stores, in canals, in ship-yards, in all departments of labor, are uniting in solid phalanx to make the "change" a sweeping one, a change that shall abolish tyrannical systems of finance and jurisprudence, a change that shall giv industry leadership to the freedom so long sought. It seems to me that "availability" is not the question of the hour, it is justice. "Not strong enough in numbers to win," is that the idea that should animate the hearts of freemen? A party that had a thousand delegates at its national convention is strong enough to push a re-vamped monarchy to the wall.

"The battle," says Patrick Henry, "is not to the strong alone, but to the vigilant, the activ, the brave." The Greenback movement in our country is the same wave-line, though differently named, that is sweeping over Europe, through Ireland, France, Germany, Russia, round the world. Who accelerates it is the new Abolitionist of 1880. Success, involving protection to free speech, free press, and free mails, does not depend so much on availability as men often argue. Real victory is always moral, educed by agitation. Look into history and note how minorities, composed of best minds, hav ruled after all. What we want is an expression of the wronged, the injured, the persecuted, the ostracized, the enslaved, against anointed tyrannies. Can the expressionless voice through either of the old parties, whose whole sentiment is unquestionably oppressiv? The olden adage is a good one, and ever applicable, "Put not new wine into old bottles." J. O. BARRETT.

---

DRAVOSBURGH, PA., July 24, 1880.

I am a German minister, and I think you will not receive many letters from clergymen. Although of course in many things I am of another opinion than you are, nevertheless I want that paper, as I am learning a good deal from it. I of all things try to learn both sides. Of course I am a Free-thinker and a Rationalist in the original meaning of those words. I am against all suppression, from whatsoever side it may come. I hav myself endured many wrongs from Christian hypocrits, and I am sure now that the people outside of the churches are in no way worse generally than the church members are.

I hav left the sects, and I minister now to an independent congregation. Especially I like your present discussion in the paper with Mr. Mair, as both sides are given, and the truth seeker can better learn the truth in that way.

I am very glad that you came out frankly against such men as Comstock and against their manner of working. Your prison experience and your free public confession of your fault concerning those much-spoken-of letters made you dear to my heart. I hav suffered heavier wrongs from church-members than that woman suffered from you—if she indeed suffered in any way—but never one of my Christian enemies confessed his sin or asked forgivness. I esteem you more than such holy people.

Finally, I would like to see a specimen copy of the daily Truth, and as I do not know the address of that paper, I would be thankful if you would be so kind as to procure me one copy.

You are free to publish my letter if you will correct my very imperfect English. I seldom write or speak in that language, and I hav learned it only by reading.

Yours for truth and right, L. G. HILMER.

---

JEWELL CITY, KAN., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: After reading R. G. Ingersoll's letter in your paper of July 17th, in which he advises that questions be drafted and proposed to the candidates for President and Vice-President so that we may know how they stand on the great question of mental, moral, and civil liberty, in order to be able to vote intelligently and for our greatest interests, I feel impelled to say, as one of the outspoken Liberals of the noble state of Kansas, that I heartily indorse what he says, and hope that measures may be adopted at once to gain the desired information. I do not feel like trusting to the Democratic party, who hav always been hand in hand with the Catholics, and they, we know, are among the greatest foes to civil and religious liberty, and are doing all they can to undermine and break down our glorious free school system. What has the Democratic party done in the past that would encourage us to trust it for the future? On the other hand, it is equally true that the Republican party has advocated and insisted on the fullest and grandest liberty. It is true that for some time the party has been to some extent lately ruled and governed by a lot of bigots, but I hope and believe that their opinions and actions hav not been indorsed by the majority of the Republican party, and that all that will be necessary for us to do in order to obtain the rights which we believe and know we are entitled to under the glorious free Constitution is to arise in our might and help elect to the highest office in the command of the people those men who truly favor free speech and a free press.

Yours for right, E. L. McCLUNG.

---

CROSSWICKS, N. J, July 21, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed thee will please find a five dollar United States note on the Little Falls National Bank, which thee will accept to aid thee in defraying thy expenses to the Brussels Congress. Thee will please acknowledge by postal on receipt by return mail.

With best wishes for thy safe return home, very truly thy friend for free speech, free press, and free mails,

CAROLINE S. ELLIS.

---

LEXINGTON, KY., July 15 1880.

MR EDITOR: When a man's character and actions are undergoing vivisection, those who take delight in performing the operation little think of the comments passed upon themselvs—the revelation they make of their own sordid natures, incapable as they are of appreciating the good done now, in the midst of tribulation, by the world's great saviors.

Like the meanest of the Jews, they reject the treasure for which their souls hav been longing, their swinish faculties not being able to detect the value of a jewel when it is that under their very noses Such would rend you, while you were opening for them the very gates of bliss.

They will parade before you a long tirade upon the virtues of Savonarola (Scribner; August number), when, had they lived in the day of the great reformer, they would hav been the first to insult and hunt him down.

Such are the indications of a common, second-rate constitution of mind. Such persons will devote every thought, energy, and passion of their being to the pleasant task of maintaining in splendor the integrity of their own interests. It may be the circulation of a magazine and their own personal popularity. To effect this object every precious weight of science must be laid aside, every dew drop of nature dashed away, and each spark of Promethean fire extinguished, if these should chance to offend orthodox or other desirable readers.

A man may edit a splendid periodical, and yet the thought will never pass through his thick skull that there is use or beauty in secularizing the human intellect (D. M. Bennett's enterprise), giving the divine powers of man a chance (unencumbered by the slime of sectarian beliefs) to roam through the holy labyrinths of nature's works, every faculty thrilling with joy, every hope and resolution attuned to associations which breathe of purity, philanthropy, industry, and progress.

Dr. Holland knows that the human intellect is dwarfed, distorted, chained down, and degraded by the poisonous influence of prejudice, oppression, poverty, misery, and despair, but were we to depend upon him as a moral engine for the eradication of evil, we might be waiting till the judgment day for a bright streak in the heaven of success.

But D. M. Bennett has decided otherwise. In spite of imperfections in the character of Freethinkers, their zealous efforts should be seconded in every useful work by those who pretend to hav the good of the human race at heart. The first steps of the great reformer are over burning coals. Maligned, misrepresented, maltreated, and persecuted, he pursues his devious and fiery way. Love sustains him. Holy peace of mind is his reward. Accusers, will you do and dare as much? Respectfully, ALHAZA.

---

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., July 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I send you P. O. order for ten dollars, five of which are for your new book, and five to chip in toward your trip to Brussels. I say, Go, by all means, because the Liberals of America will be represented by a true man, who is a genuin type of Infidelity. I am pleased to see that the difference between yourself and Mr. Underwood has been amicably adjusted. I believe the contributions will continue to flow in after your return from Brussels. I certainly will giv as much after as before your trip, and I think you will in time receive enough to fully defray your expenses of the trip.

Truly yours, J. W. WEED.

---

MONTAGUE, TEXAS. July 20, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed find P. O. order for two dollars, for which please send me the second volume on the gods and religions. I am much pleased with the first volume, but I can't keep it at home long enough to read it through. THE TRUTH SEEKER comes every week full of rich things. I would be glad to help you on your foreign tour, but I hav recently bought a mill here, and hav all I can manage for the present. I will work out of this tight place in a few months, when I will want more books.

Yours truly, GEO. W. CARPENTER.

---

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 27, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Permit me to subscribe myself as one of the many friends whose thoughts and good wishes will follow thee during thy voyage and journeyings to a foreign clime, on a mission of both doing and receiving good. Inclosed I hand you ten dollars to help defray your expenses. While waiting and hoping for thy safe return, the incidents and experiences of thy every wakeful hour will be interesting to us, the readers of the indispensable TRUTH SEEKER, whose name is a lesson by itself. Your assured ROCHESTER FRIEND.

---

BARRE, MASS., July 27, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: The second volume of "The Gods" was received last week all safe and sound. I am delighted with the latter part of the work, the only portion I hav read, on Christianity, Essenism, the Apostolic Fathers, Church Corruptions and Persecutions, Heretics and Heresies, etc. Yourself as frontispiece surprised me. I could never hav believed it you but for the fact—so changed and unlike you. But how young and bright you look—not much like a convict, I assure you, however much you may hav felt like one. Your prison garb becomes you well, and as while in it you produced the two valuable volumes of "The Gods," consisting of nearly 1,800 pages, you may well feel proud of the costume. Hoping you will hav a pleasant trip to Europe, an interesting and useful Congress, and return with good health and with renewed energy and power, I am very consistently and conscientiously your friend and well-wisher, ELLA E. GIBSON.

---

VICTORIA, B. C., July 14 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I commenced subscribing for your paper the first year of its publication, from Cawker City, Kan., from whence I removed to Seattle, W. T. About two years ago I left for Alaska, and in the interval I lost the opportunity of renewing my subscription. As I am now settled here, and as I intend to renew, I here inclose you five dollars, for which please giv me credit. Hoping soon to see your welcome paper, and that you may long continue its publication, I remain, Yours respectfully, W. HUSEN.

---

MCLEAN, ILL., July 26, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT. Dear Sir: Inclosed please find ten dollars for Brussels expenses. Hoping you will hav a pleasant trip, and do the cause good, I remain, Yours with respect. MRS. LOUSIA POST.

---

LONG LAKE. MINN., July 20, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read your article in the issue of July 31, entitled, "The Political Situation," and though I hav no doubt of the honesty of your motivs in advising Liberals to act with the Democratic party, I seriously question the use of their doing so. If the Liberals would hold themselves aloof as a body of political mercenaries, to vote, independent of other considerations, for the party who promises them the most, they would only earn the contempt of all parties. While I know that the Republican party favors church and other hated monopolies, I hav every reason to distrust the Democratic party, whose policy, like Paul's, has been, "All things to all men," with a hard money plank in one state, and a soft money plank in another, just as they thought they could catch votes, a party composed of fiercely antagonistic elements, held together by their leaders in the hope of dividing among themselves ere long the plunder and spoils of political victory. I cannot conceive how the Liberal vote of the country can hav any weight with the Democratic party. It is not to the Liberals they are looking for victory next election, but to John Kelly and Tammany, for. talk as they like, every intelligent Democrat knows that John Kelly, if he chooses, can appoint a political funeral for them next November, and furnish the presidential corpse. As to their platforms, the Republicans are decidedly ahead in their promises to Liberals in proposing that constitutional amendment in regard to schools. But how can we trust either of them, knowing their antecedents? It is true the Democrats opposed some legislativ measures that the church attempted, but I think it was owing more to the fact of their being introduced under Republican auspices than to patriotic and Liberal motivs. If as you admit there is a deep underlying principle sustained and advocated by the Greenback party, why shut our eyes to it, why use the coward's argument that it can't succeed this time? How under heaven can any reform succeed if Liberals and reformers withhold their support, because it is opposed by a far more powerful enemy? "Absolute right is the highest expediency." This should be the Liberal's motto in politics as well as in anything else. I notice of my Liberal acquaintances that a large majority of them are Greenbackers. A man who is clear of unreasonable prejudice in religion is apt to be so in politics, and is generally too intelligent to be lashed into the old party traces by the senseless cries of "state rights" and "rebel brigadiers," on one side, and "troops at the polls" and "centralization" on the other. JOS. H. LYDIARD.

---

OTISCO, MICH., July 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I rejoice that you still liv to enjoy the free atmosphere of liberty. I am a young Infidel and a constant reader of your paper, which is, in my judgment, the best paper published on this side of the world. I regret to see so much inharmony and contention in the ranks of Liberalism. There has been altogether too much powder wasted in our own camp. The indications of the times apparently show us that we need the united workings and co-operation of every Freethinker in the land. Would to heaven, then, that the Liberalists would forever cease that bilious howl in our own camp. And yet, when Bundy, Abbot, Comstock, and others of that stripe undertake to crush you, I conclude that you are justified, when they tread on your toes too hard, to just turn a backward somersault at them, and with trip-hammer blows of logic, not only pay them back in their own coin, but make a world's exhibition of them. Young America will stand by you even though high-cultured saints censure you.

Fraternally yours, FRANK J. LUICK.

---

CENTRE BELPRE, O., July 15, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am sorry I put you to so much trouble in calling your attention to the verb see, in your answer to "Inquirer," and am also sorry that you supposed I did so critically. With Webster Unabridged before me I could not hav supposed you misused the word. The object I had in view was to call you out in an essay on that faculty of the soul, mind, intellect, brain, spirit, or whatever else it may be, if anything, by which we see, perceive, or take cognizance of, the qualities of goodness, love, wisdom, amiableness, etc, as well as all other virtues and views of ourselvs and fellow-beings. To my mind, essays on this and kindred subjects are of the first importance, and that you hav some good ideas on these subjects I am fain to believe.

I was first induced to take THE TRUTH SEEKER by reading your essays on matter, motion, life. Now, every man has his peculiar field of thought, providing he thinks at all, and mine has much of it been in the psychological, though I hav also tried to comprehend Nature as far as I could in her various departments. And the more I hav studied her the more I hav become convinced, that, absurd as it may appear, she is the father, mother, sister, and brother, parent and offspring, or, in other words, she is the all in all. She is the whole, of which all things are but parts, and in her ample bosom are contained all powers and capacities, finite and infinit, or by any other name by which they may be called. And whatever others may think about spending time on these subjects I hav nothing to say. To me, time is well spent if I hav learned ever so little. I seek knowledge for its own sake, because to me it is more precious than gold. I study nature more than books. I read books to learn what other men hav thought, and when they drop a golden idea I try to pick it up and put it in my casket, and call it mine.

Now, I should be glad to hear from you and your contributors on these subjects. I don't expect you to print a paper on purpose for my reading. Not one in a thousand would take it, for I am desperately ultra, and that is the reason I don't write, for few would care to read, and if I ask a question I am apt to do it in such an awkward manner that persons think I mean no good. And when I think how much you hav been cuffed and kicked about and misunderstood, I don't wonder you are sore from head to foot, for if I had passed through what you hav, I would be more full of boils than ever Job was, and crosser than any man with the gout, and don't believe I could be civil or amiable to my best friends.

If I thought you would take time and room to print them, I would like to show up the other side of cant versus criticism; for, absurd as Spiritualism and Spiritualists may be, the errors and absurdities are not all on their side, and others assert a great many things which they may find as difficult of proof, if put to the test, as any absurdity in Spiritualism. In my experience it is much easier to blow about absurdities than to discover and establish facts. Still in search of truth, B G. LEONARD M.D.

REPLY.—We evidently mistook the purport of our friend's remarks. We will cheerfully giv any crude views we may entertain and our reasons for entertaining them. As to the mind or intellect, we regard it as wholly the result of intricate material organization, and that it can only be perpetuated by the organization being perpetuated. If we are to be favored with a continued existence after death, we can only possess consciousness by possessing an organization capable of producing consciousness. On this basis, and with the demonstration before us that consciousness and intelligence hav an existence outside of and disconnected with what are called crude physical organizations, we hav felt compelled to adopt the theory that this is our rudimentary stage of existence, and that after this form of life is over, we, in harmony with the economy of the universe, enter upon another and more ethereal form, but still material and organized quite as perfectly as in our present life. How many such changes or evolutions may be in the future for us of course is unknown, but that the universe is capable of doing all this and much more, we readily concede.

We think our friend quite correct in the praise he bestows upon Nature or the universe. It is truly the parent of all existences, the cause of all phenomena and all forms of life. It is indeed the all, the whole, and outside of it there is absolutely nothing. All forces and powers reside within the universe, as do all substance and all forms of life. Without it there is nothing, not even space, for the universe extends wherever space is, and both extend forever without stop or limit.

Our friend is evidently one who thinks, and we will be glad to hear from him again. Any question he wishes to propound to us we will answer according to such ability as we hav.—ED. T. S.

---

ANGOLA, IND., July 24. 1880.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: I hav now in my possession both books written by you while in prison. I hav as yet read but little in them, but I know they are interesting and instructiv. I see by my last TRUTH SEEKER the difficulty between yourself and Mr. Underwood is now settled, and I sincerely hope THE TRUTH SEEKER in the future will be devoted wholly to the work of defending human rights. I hope all matters between our editors and lecturers and their lady friends can be settled in the future without the aid of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

And so you are to sail for Brussels the 4th. Joy go with you and may peace and prosperity be yours. I hav just been reading "Politics for Liberals" in the last week's paper. I am only a woman, and of course hav no vote and perhaps no influence, but like most woman I like to put in a word now and then and in the present case I hope it may hav some effect. I want to say to every voter that claims to be Liberal, read that article closely, look well to all the acts of oppression that hav been committed in the last eight years by the party in power, and use your influence with every voter of your acquaintance in favor of a change. My sympathies were always with the Republican party until Mrs. Woodhull was arrested, her business broken up, and herself and sister cast into Ludlow Street Jail for doing what had always been done by other editors since my remembrance, and has been done since by the very man that arrested her, and that too within a year, the only difference being, the man she published the scandal about was a pet priest of the orthodox stamp.

Friends of freedom, lay aside your party prejudices, look to principles, and determin in your own minds to look thoroughly into this matter between this and election day, and cast your votes understandingly. The very fact of Mr. Heywood's and Mr. Bennett's imprisonment for asserting their rights as American citizens, being under a Republican regime, should be sufficient cause for every Liberal to vote against the Republican party. If the Democratic party wins and do no better, then unite and oust them, but how they can do worse is difficult to imagine. S. J. MINER.

---

[From the Banner of Light.]

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY. By F. E. Aspinwall, M. D. New York: D. M. Bennett, publisher, 141 Eighth st.

A work intended mainly as a chart for the use of practical phrenologists. It explains the first principles of the science, and will be found useful to students and all desiring to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology in a short time. It is the best book of the kind we hav seen, inasmuch as a great deal of information is given in a few words. The author appears to know just what one wishes, and gives it, with no verbose flourishes.

---

From the Liberal and Scientific Publishing House of D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth street, New York, we hav the following: "Pocket Theology." By Voltaire. Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. A collection of short, pithy, and rather satirical definitions of theological words and expressions. "The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate," between Professor W. F. Jamieson, of Chicago, Ill., and Rev. Jacob Ditzler, D D., of Kentucky. An official report of a debate at Kirksville, Mo., continuing for nine evenings, upon the special inspiration of the Bible and the compartiv tendencies of Infidelity and the Christian religion. "The Clergyman's Victims," A Radical romance, By Mrs. J. E. Ball.

Her Last Letter.

'Tis but a line, a hurried scrawl,
And little seem the words to say,
Yet hold me in reproachful thrall:
"You quarreled with me yesterday;
To-morrow you'll be sad."

Ay, "you'll be sad," the words are few,
And yet they pierce my soul with pain;
Ay, "you'll be sad," the words are true;
They haunt me with prophetic strain:
"To-morrow you'll be sad."

We quarreled, and for what? a word,
A foolish speech that jarred the ear,
And thus in wrath our pulses stirred;
Then came her letter, "Dear, my dear,
To-morrow you'll be sad."

Few words! half mirth, and half regret,
The last her hand should ever write—
Sad words! learned long ago, and yet
Fresh with new pain to ear and sight:
"To-morrow you'll be sad."

—Lady Blanche Lindsay in June Macmillan's

Woman.

BY CHARLES BRADLEY.

"O woman, in our hours of ease,
Inconstant coy, and hard to please.
And variable as is the shade,
By the light, quiv'ring aspen made,
When doubt and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou."—Scott.

The full-blown beauty of the flower
Crowneth the summer's prime,
The sweetness of the twilight hour
Is not yet known in rhyme.

Veiled by incalculable space,
Cometh a twinkling star;
What hope, what messages of grace,
It bears to earth so far!

Tied to the shrieking storm-torn shroud,
High o'er the plunging bark,
The sailor, through the rifted cloud,
Catches that trembling spark.

"'Tis shining on my home," he cries,
And sees the seas no more.
His eyes are wi h his heart, which flies
Beyond the ocean's roar.

As angel flowers, as twilight hours,
As stars that watch in heaven,
To bless, to save when sorrow lowers,
Is woman's influence given.

Rhymes for the Times.

BY ELMINA D. SLENKER.

"Oh, believe or be damned!" is what Christians all teach;
They alone hav the truth and God's holy word preach.
They are saved from all sins by prayer, faith, and grace;
At the right hand of God they hav chosen their place;
They work for his glory, seek from hell souls to save,
All else they deem worthless on this side of the grave.
Thus labor is wasted, precious time thrown away,
On dreams that are baseless, on myths worn and gray.
But the "Infidel" true, firm, and loyal doth stand
On a plane that is higher, more noble, and grand,
He follows the spirit and lists to its teachings,
Caring only for right, despising the preachings
Of pious ones holy, who talk, with long faces,
Of high heavens, deep hells, and like mythical places;
Despising and hating pure joys and sweet pleasures,
Happy homes here on earth overflowing with treasures
Of blissful contentment and peace, hope, and love.
Sacrificing them all for air-castles above.
Where, with wings at their backs, and crowned like a king,
For ages and ages, hosannas they'll sing;
Nor pity the billions who, in hell's deep abyss,
Suffer anguish and torment in sight of their bliss.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify he public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and ou rageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are publi-hed by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

50 Scientific Lectures for 25 Cents,

by Profs. Huxley, Tyndall, Roscoe, and others. Twelve Radical Essays, including nine of Mrs. Besant's best, for a quarter, all post-paid by mail.

Send stamp for list of
SCIENCE and FREETHOUGHT,
at one-half to nine-tenths discount till Aug. 21st.
Also for list of
CYCLOPEDIAS
at one-third to two-thirds off publishers' prices.
Address A. K. BUTTS, Publisher,
13 Dey Street, New York.

UPPLYSNINGENS TIDEHVART

(AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT).

A SWEDISH WEEKLY,

Devoted to the culture of Freethought, to the investigation of the religious systems of our times, and to the discussion of religious and social questions in general.

The only Swedish religio-philosophical publication in America.

TERMS PER YEAR . . . . $2.00

Exchange is desired with any other papers in any language.

ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Meeker Co., Minn.

For sale, in the Swedish language:
A BETTER RELIGION.
BY FRANZ HERMAN WISTRAND,
Editor of the Truth Teller,
Lake Constance, Buffalo Post-Office,
Wright Co. Minnesota.
Published by ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Minn.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer. | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, 40
Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, 40

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

The Church and Education, 5
On the Religious Education of Children, 5
Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. 10

Sold at this office.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO
ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.
BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.
12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

Epicurus: or, a Few Days in Athens.

Being the Translation of a Greek Mss. discovered in Herculaneum.

BY FRANCES WRIGHT.

Containing a copy of the head of Epicurus.
Price 75 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th street, New York, N.Y.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

FIFTY CENTS

Will pay for

DR. FOOTE'S HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for the AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED PRONOUNCING POCKET DICTIONARY, containing 30,000 words.

ONE DOLLAR will pay for DR. FOOTE'S
HEALTH MONTHLY
For one year and for a large center-table book containing the Complete Works of Shakespere! Do not forget to send 25 cents to pay postage or 35 cents if you want it registered. Address
MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 E. 28th st., New York city.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructive work. In cloth, $3 per vol, the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.
tJan81.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE of 120 Lexington Ave. New York, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK are at liberty to CONSULT ITS AUTHOR in person or by mail FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED.
MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY,
129 East 28th Street New York.

DR. KINGET'S NEW BOOK.

"MEDICAL GOOD SENSE"

—AND—

PRIVATE READING FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.

—EMBRACING—

SEXUAL PHILOSOPHY AND PHYSIOLOGICAL MARRIAGE.

Containing over 500 illustrated pages, well bound—price $2. It treats of the nature, causes, treatment of, and prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases. It unfolds some of the deepest mysteries of human nature in the generation and development of life, sexual relationship, marriage, parentage, and offspring, all viewed from a secular standpoint. It fully answers numerous questions, the delicate nature of which prevents thousands of women from asking. Any person sending $1.50 before the day of publication, this fall, will receive a copy, well bound, mailed free. Contents table sent free for stamp.

DR. T. R. KINGET ANNOUNCES

to his Liberal friends and patients throughout the United States and Canadas that he is, as usual, treating

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES,

and positively curing ninety per cent of those pronounced incurable. Having had over thirty years' experience, Dr. K. is meeting with remarkable success in curing obstinate cases of Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Nervous Debility, Impotency in both sexes, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Dysentery, Piles, Diseases of the Skin, Kidneys, Bladder, Genital Organs, and all diseases of women. Consultation Free. Address
T. R. KINGET, M. D.,
317 East 14th St., New York.
Questions for Invalids free.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall, this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person. Price 20 cents.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds.
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

THE
CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

THE
Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.
D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address
DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13t27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, searching definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1879. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrines, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

---

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

---

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

---

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

---

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

---

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

---

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

---

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

---

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviorsor None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

---

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

---

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

---

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Thelogy, Etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

---

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

---

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

---

LOVE VENTURES.

A rose tinted record of love in the tropics, with strange and startling adventures thereto belonging. Price, 50 cents.

---

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

---

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

---

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

---

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

---

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

---

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

---

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SOHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

---

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

---

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

---

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents.

---

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.), $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between PROF. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

NERI said you were good-for-nothing vermin; but what then? An ass may bray a good while before he shakes the stars down.—George Eliot.

'Tis very true, my sovereign king,
My chiel may well be doubted;
But facts are chiels that winna ding,
And darna be disputed. —Burns.

TO FIND people who believe their religion as a person believes that fire will burn his hand when thrust into it, we must seek them in those oriental countries where Europeans do not yet predominate, or in the European world where it is still universally Catholic.—J. S. Mill.

I FULLY coincide with Jacolliot that the only true spirit of tolerance consists in our conscientious toleration of each other's intolerance. I dare avow, with the German philosophers, that as far as opinions and not motivs—principles and not men—I neither am tolerant nor wish to be regarded as such.—S. T. Coleridge.

YOU hav no right to tolerate a false opinion in me. I hav no right to tolerate a false opinion in you. Not, please remember, that you hav any power to use, any right to use, force to prevent my holding or uttering my ideas: but that no quarter, no mercy, should anywhere be shown to falsehood in thought any more than in speech.—M. J. Savage.

IF there should be a flood of immorality attendant on the break-up of the old beliefs in our time, the blame would rest, not with the conscientious antagonists of these beliefs, but with their despairing advocates, who hav endeavored to save their tottering creed by wildly shrieking that it is the sole foundation of the moral law.—J. W. Chadwick.

THOSE who think their religion true will not fear the approach of light, but will be heartily glad to welcome every new truth, being satisfied that truth cannot oppose truth, but that every addition of fact must help to confirm or illustrate what was known before. Those who are uncertain of their position, or of their ability to prove what they profess and desire to retain, are the first to oppose the advance of science. But we must disregard man's thoughts, and think only of nature's truths.—H. G. Atkinson.

THE new faith rests frankly and composedly upon the doctrins of evolution. . . It therefore, discards miracles; rejects everything like supernatural interposition, considers as obsolete the popular theory of revelation. It has no inspired books distinguished in character and contents from the world's best literature. It expects no infallible word from any quarter. It reads no books with absolute or entire reverence such as no other literature can receive.—O. B. Frothingham.

PROBABILITY, however high, though a sufficient ground for our practical decision, is not a sufficient ground for our religious faith and feelings. Butler has imported the rules of worldly prudence into a sphere where they hav no place. We may wisely stake our worldly interests on a probable, or even, if the prize be great, on a merely possible event; but we cannot worship and commune with a being on a probability, even of ten thousand to one, that he is God.—Goldwin Smith.

O MY dear Kepler! how I wish that we could hav one hearty laugh together! Here at Padua is the principal professor of philosophy, whom I hav repeatedly and urgently requested to look at the moon and planets through my glass, which he now tenaciously refuses to do. Why are you not here? What shouts of laughter we should hav at this glorious folly! And to hear the professors of philosophy at Pisa laboring before the grand duke with logical arguments, as if with magical incantations to charm the new planets out of the sky!—Galileo.

TO BUY in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest; to be on good terms with the controllers of public opinion and the patrons of influence; to be cautious and complaisant; o vote on the winning side and belong to the dominant party; to join the fashionable church, profess the popular creed, echo the prevailing opinions of men and things, glide skilfully through the mazes of controversy, giving no offense to either party in the dispute, is a first principle in this philosophy of common sense. It is wisdom—but wisdom of the serpent kind.—O. B. Frothingham.

To appear respectable in the eyes of the world, how many are there who attend church, say grace, and stick for the Sabbath; and who, if necessary, would change their religion! And yet, if all would be truthful and sincere, we should be saved from much of this fearfully demoralizing hypocrisy and cant; and there would soon be an end to persecution and the reign of terror. . . No wise man will desire that any one thing be true in preference to another; nor that nature should stand still for his special gratification; and when he is in error he will be most thankful for correction and receive the news as gladly as if he had discovered a new truth.—H. G. Atkinson.

A MAN is really bound in prudence to do what, upon the whole, appears, according to the best of his judgment, to be for his happiness or what he certainly knows to be so. Nay further, in questions of great consequence, a reasonable man will think it concerns him to remark lower probabilities and presumptions than these; such as amount to no more than showing one side of a question to be as supposable and credible as the other; nay, such as but amount to much less than even this. For numberless instances might be mentioned respecting the common pursuits of life, where a man would be thought, in a liberal sense, distracted who would not act, and with great application too, not only upon an even chance, but upon much less and when the probability or chance was greatly against his succeeding.—Butler's Analogy.

Odds and Ends.

A MULE is no physician, but he well understands the art of heeling.

HAVING asked his girl for a kiss as a tonic, she replied that there was such a thing as being too tonic.

GRACE (whispering)—"What lovely boots your partner's got, Mary!" Mary (ditto)—"Yes; unfortunately he shines at the wrong end."

THE passion for antiquities is on the increase, but old ladies are not appreciated more highly than ever. Neither are mothers-in-law.

A MAN has invented a chair that can be adjusted to eight hundred different positions. It is designed for a boy to sit in when he goes to church.

NOTHING will please a girl so much as the information that a rival who is trying to rob her of her young man has got a pimple coming on her nose.

YOUNG Fred, a bashful yet persistent swain,
Was very much in love with Mary Jane.
One night she told him in her tenderest tone,
"It is not good for man to liv alone."
Said Fred, "Just so, you darling little elf;
I'v often thought of that same thing myself."
Then said the lass, while Fred was all agog,
"You'd better buy yourself a terrier dog."

THEY were playing a game they call eucher. She held both bowers and the king and two aces of another suit, but she was a novice at the game. A young man who was teaching her looked at her cards and warmly exclaimed, "What a lovely hand!" She looked him straight in the eye and murmured, "You may hav it if you want it." All the rest of the evening he wondered if he was the victim of a leap-year proposal.

AN indignant tenant and a rather negligent landlord were overheard in the following conversation the other morning:

Tenant (indignantly)—"My chimney smokes."

Landlord—"What does it smoke?"

Tenant (more indignantly)—"It smokes everything."

Landlord—"Has it tried cubebs?"

Tenant—"Cubebs!"

Landlord—"Yes. Giv it cubebs. The chimney has probably got the catarrh, and smoking cubebs will clear the passage."

A BAD BOY INDEED.—One of the little lambs picked up in the streets of New York by Whitelaw Reid and sent West to find a home was adopted by a Detroit family about two months ago, and ere this is published Mr. Reid has received a big postal card announcing that his dear lamb has gone West to fight Indians, and that he needn't mind about sending on another to take his place. The New York lamb was thirteen years old. He said so at the depot on his arrival, and half an hour later he reiterated the statement at the house, and added: "And if you don't believe it, then call me a liar. That's the sort of spring-gun I am, and don't you forget it." They didn't forget it. He gave them no chance to. He ate with his fingers, wiped his mouth on his sleeve, and told the family before supper was over that he didn't come West to hav his hair combed or his face washed as a regular business. On the first evening he slipped out, had three fights, and stole a dog: and when hunted up he was about to take his beer in a saloon. The family expected to wrestle with the boy for a while, and they didn't sit down on him until it became a painful necessity. During his first week he stole five dollars in money, a gold chain, a revolver, and a pair of earrings, and he got drunk twice. When reasoned with and asked to do better, he took a fresh chew of tobacco, and replied: "Oh, you Michigan folks are too soft! If a feller can't hav a good time, what's the use of being an orphan?" On Monday of the second week he sold the family dog to a stranger for a quarter, threw the saw and ax into the alley, and when locked up in a closet he tore a Sunday coat to pieces. It was thought best to hav a policeman talk to him, and one was called in. He put on his fiercest look, and lectured the lamb for fifteen minutes, but as soon as he stopped for breath the young sinner replied: "Now, see here, old buttons, you are wasting time. I know my little gait, I do; and if you think I'v come to a village like this to be bluffed by anybody, you'v missed your train." He was taken to Sunday-school by the hand. He hadn't been there half an hour when he was taken out by the collar. He seemed anxious to punch the head of every good little boy within half a mile; and he told the teacher of his class that when she could stuff Moses in the bulrushes down him it would be after she had bleached out her freckles. They gave him a Sunday-school book to fit his case, but he fitted it to a crack in the sidewalk on his way home. When moral suasion had no effect on the wicked youth his guardian tried the rod. He was bigger than the boy, and he walloped him, but within three hours two of the nuts were taken off his buggy and thrown away. There was a second seance in the woodshed, and before dark a window-glass worth eight dollars was broken.

That orphan was faithfully and duly and persistently wrestled with. He was coaxed and flattered. He was licked and reasoned with. Ambition, gratitude, fear, and avarice were alike appealed to in turn, but as he was the first day, so he was the last. A few days ago he was told that he would be sent to the Reform School at Lansing if there was any further trouble with him. That night he stole five dollars of the cook, a butcher-knife from the pantry, a pie from the sideboard, and departed the house, leaving on his bed a note as follows: "This town ar no place fur a N. York orfun. I'm going out on the planes to fite Injuns. It will be useless to foller me, for I can't be took Alive."

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. " | |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 6 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 0. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 2 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 5 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 1 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 2 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. Hopps, London. | 5 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 2 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 10 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 1 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 3 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 1 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 6 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 1 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 10 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 2 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 5 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 1 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 2 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Sapphro. | 10 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 5 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 2 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 1 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 2 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 1 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 2 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 3 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 5 |
| 120. | The New Age. Bell | 3 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 10 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 2 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Naymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangeli | |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 8 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 2 |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholomew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, MD. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D., | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium, | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

Wanted.

A widow of thirty-two would like to correspond with an educated Liberal-minded gentleman. Address SINCERITY, care of TRUTH SEEKER office. 4'32

To the Benevolent.

A young married woman, with a child, who has been abandoned by a graceless Christian husband because she entertains Liberal views, wishes to obtain an honorable position as housekeeper, or in some other useful capacity, to support herself and child. Address, STEADFAST, TRUTH SEEKER office. 2'32

Was Christ a God?

Conclusions Drawn from Apostolic Writings.

BY F. MENSIGA.

CONTENTS.—Questionable Dogmas, Superstition and Religion, the Appearance of Christ, the Life of Christ, Comments and Explanations of Jude, James, John, Peter, Paul (all his epistles), Acts, the Four Gospels, Revelations, a Summary, Erroneous Theories of Deity, Heaven, Devil, Hell, the Author's Intuitions, Evolution of Life. A work of strength and merit.

An octavo volume of 253 pages. Price, $1.50. Sold at this office.

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100,00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5 00; improved, $10,00. Address SAM, H. PRESTON, t132 209 West 34th st., New York.

GODSEND TO THE SEX

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

Vol. 7. No. 33. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, August 14, 1880. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A CARD has been distributed in our streets headed, "Two Roads," and conveying the information that the broad road leads to death, misery, hell, while the narrow road leads to life, happiness, and heaven. One of them recently came into the hands of a wicked wag who indorsed upon it, "Since this card was printed both roads hav been consolidated."

AT the rate of June immigration thus far, 50,000 will be received at Castle Garden during the month. That will make 150,000 for the quarter year comprising April, May, and June. Taking in Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other ports for the same period, we may expect a total of 200,000 for the quarter. Nearly all these immigrants are sturdy and vigorous; they will increase and multiply. This westward procession of the people of Europe is one of the imposing spectacles and political portents of our day.

THE Jesuit schools in France hav broken up for the holidays, and it is understood that when they reopen in October they will hav nominally or really changed hands. The London Times says that they will still be the property of the ecclesiastics; they will be conducted in the same spirit, and some, at least, of the teachers will be the same, but the schools will be the property of secular priests or of one of the recognized orders. The question whether these transfers are colorable or real promises some legal skirmishing, unless, indeed, the government resigns itself to the virtual failure of its decrees which, though first enforced against the non-teaching Jesuits, were mainly directed against the Jesuit schools.

THE Times says: "The religious outlook in New England to-day is far from being hopeful; the drift is plainly enough toward Freethought." If this is not an Irish bull it is a blood relation to one. How would it read to say the political outlook is far from being hopeful; the drift is plainly enough toward Freethought; or, the scientific outlook is barren; the drift is toward investigation? There is a great deal of nonsense about the use of the expression "Freethought" in respect to religious matters; but when we come to dissect it and find that it means only the habit of thinking upon religious topics with the same freedom and within the same limits that we think upon other subjects, it is not such a terrible word after all.

THE microscope shows a variation in the thickness of human hair from the 1-250 to the 1 600 part of an inch; but, notwithstanding such fineness, it is a massiv cable in comparison with some other fibers. Thus the thread of the silkworm is many times finer, being from the 1-1700 to the 1-2000 of an inch. This, however, is nothing to the slenderness of the spider's thread, which has been found in some instances to be no more than 1-30,000 of an inch in diameter. The fibers yielded by the vegetable kingdom are also of astonishing minuteness. Thus every fiber of flax is found to be composed of a bundle of other fibrils which are about 4-2500 of an inch in diameter. Similar fibers obtained from the pineapple plant hav been ascertained to be no more than 1-5000 or even 1 7000 of an inch in diameter.

MR. GLADSTONE being one day in the London offices of Mr. Lindsay, the ship owner, making a note of some shipping returns for his budget, a brusk and wealthy Sunderland ship owner who was watching him and was struck by the industrious and intelligent way in which he went to work, without dreaming of who he was, said, "Thou writes a bonny hand, thou dost." "I am glad you think so," was the reply. "Thou dost; thou makest thy figures well; thous't just the chap I want." "Indeed?" "Yes, indeed," said the Sunderland man. "I'm a man of few words, now; if thoul't come over to Sunderland I'll giv thee £120 a year. Now, then." "I'm much obliged for the offer," was the answer, "and when Mr. Lindsay comes in I'll consult him." Mr. Lindsay, when he came in, kept up the joke, saying he would not stand in the young man's way, and the sooner they knew each other the better. "Allow me, therefore, to introduce to you the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone of the Exchequer." There was much laughing.

SOME of the most eminent scientific men now accept the view taken by Adhemar, namely, that continents hav not been depressed, but overflowed by the ocean. Owing to the precession of the equinoxes, the mass of water is transferred from one hemisphere to the other once in 10,500 years, and the sun remains eight days longer in one hemisphere than in the other. At the present time the winters of the Southern pole are eight days longer than with us; the ice continent has consequently formed there and the mass of the ocean is to be found in the Southern hemisphere, and the ice covers a space upon and around the South pole more than twice the area of all Europe. The extreme of cold at the Antarctic pole was reached about six hundred years ago, since which time the climate has been becoming milder, while that north of the equator has been growing colder.

AS WAS anticipated, the Woodsiders refused to allow the Rev. H. H. Brownell, appointed by the Pittsburgh Presbytery, to preach in the Oak Alley church last Sunday. A few minutes before 10. A M., the Rev. Mr. Brownell, accompanied by Messrs. McCutcheon and Munn, anti-Woodsiders, entered the church and marched up the aisle to the pulpit. On arriving there Mr. Barclay arose and said that Mr. Brownell could not preach there. They (the Woodsiders) held the church property, and he spoke on the authority of two-thirds of the congregation. About one-third of those present, in company with Messrs. Brownell, Munn, and McCutcheon, then left the church and went to Allegheny City and held services in the house of one of the members. The Woodsiders being left in possession of the field, the Rev. Mr. McClelland took charge of the pulpit and preached.

A SPANISH peasant, living in the suburbs of Madrid, has long been in the habit of repairing daily to the city, accompanied by a donkey laden with milk for distribution among certain customers. One day, however, the master was taken ill, whereupon his wife suggested that the ass be sent on his customary journey alone. The panniers were accordingly filled with cans of milk as usual, and a bit of paper was attached to the donkey's headstall requesting the customers to help themselvs to their ordinary allowance of milk, and to put back the cans into the pannier. Off started the donkey, and he returned in due course with the cans empty and with everything in order. The master found upon inquiry that the trusty messenger had called at the right doors without missing one, and also that in some instances he had pulled the bell with his teeth when kept waiting. From that day forward the donkey has gone his rounds alone.

HAYES has always had a fancy for Garfield. They are somewhat alike, particularly in their loud professions of morality, and the invariable cowardice and sordidness of their conduct when brought to the test of temptation. According to the Philadelphia Times, Gov. Tom Young of Ohio asserts that the sacrifice of Sherman and the nomination of Garfield at Chicago were circumstantially arranged beforehand by Hayes, Garfield, Foster, and Dennison, that precious set of Ohio men who now control the Republican party. Sherman had too much head of his own to suit the Ohio syndicate, and his relations to the old Republican leaders had not been entirely broken off. They wanted a man like themselvs—like Hayes—whom they would own and control. They found such a man in Garfield, who promptly showed the kind of stuff he was made of by betraying the candidate whom he went to Chicago to support, and stepping into his place. Col. Tom Young's story confirms Mr. Conkling's estimate of the moral character of Ohio politicians.—Sun.

"THE National Police Gazette, of New York, indorsed by the Young Men's Christian Association," is the heading of a circular issued by the journal named, and they print the following extraordinary document in proof:

FORT SHAW, M. T., Jan. 20, 1880.

RICHARD K. FOX, ESQ., N. Y., Sir: At a late meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association of this place it was unanimously voted to add your valuable paper to our already immense list of Christian and reformatory periodicals. Hence, as secretary and treasurer of the association, it becomes my pleasant duty to send you post-office money order for $4, for one year's subscription to the National Police Gazette. Respectfully, SAMUEL D. SMITH, Secretary and Treasurer Y. M. C. A., Fort Shaw M. T.

As this is one of the papers which an effort was made to suppress under the obscene literature law, the indorsement is a curious one.—Toledo Commercial.

PROF. EDISON is still engaged perfecting his electric lamp, and has not lost faith in his carbon horse-shoe burner. He is experimenting with various materials and fabrics for the burner, and when called on recently it was ascertained that the one which has thus far given the greatest satisfaction is a diminutiv square made of bamboo. These bamboo burners will be inserted in the large number of small lamps at the laboratory, from which the air is being drawn by the "mercury" pumps. These lamps, it is expected, will be in position and lighted on the night of October 1st. It is alleged that the bamboo burners will burn for 1,325 hours and supply a flame equal to sixteen candles. A generator of one horse power will, it is estimated, keep ten lights going. To relieve the monotony of incessantly working at the electric lamp the inventor passes an occasional hour in improving his electric motor. His railway is an interesting sight for visitors, but few possess the courage to accept the invitation to take the half-mile ride over the tracks at the rate of forty miles an hour. The rails, ordinary looking, are the conductors of the electric current, and on these rests the queer-looking engine holding the electric machine and the car with its leather banded wheels, by which the power generated by the machine is communicated. The train is controlled by ordinary brakes. The professor anticipates increasing the speed to two hundred miles, and has ordered new rails, intending to lengthen his track to a mile and a half. He will in a few months make a trial trip over a portion of the Pennsylvania road. The advantage of the new motiv power is the absence of dust, smoke, cinders, and noise, and the ease in passing over heavy grades. There are at present sixty-five workmen engaged in the laboratory.

THE Rev. Samuel D. Hinman, who for many years has been a missionary of the Protestant Episcopal church among the Indians in Nebraska and Dakota, has brought suit against the Rev. William H. Hare, missionary bishop of Niobrara in the same church. The libel complained of consisted in the publication by Bishop Hare of a pamphlet entitled "The Rehearsal of Facts," in which he charges Hinman with impurity of conduct, his adulteries being common talk wherever he went. On one occasion while visiting a boarding-school he scandalized the older girls by beckoning to them in a suspicious way from his window in the twilight, and that he had abashed a pretty half-breed young woman, her assistant, by saying to her: "I love you. Won't you meet me to-night? I want to talk with you." The Rev. Hare continues: "In December, 1877, a lady, a communicant long known to me, and for years occupying a place of trust under the same roof with him, sought me in great distress of mind, and confessed to me that Mr. Hinman, under promis of marriage, had betrayed her. At my request she put this in writing and swore to it. In January or February, 1878, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his office, told me that there was a clergyman connected with my mission who was a man of most immoral character, and who was bringing great disgrace upon it. In reply to my inquiries, he said that it was Mr. Hinman, that he was a known adulterer, that he had been seen in a brothel in Washington, and that he ought to be gotten out of the Indian country as a man whose presence was detrimental to the welfare of the Indians. I state, in addition to the above, that one lady helper reported to me that parents, when she asked them to send their girls to the Santee boarding-school, refused on the ground that girls sent there were tampered with by the missionary; that another lady who has been in the mission for seven years put in my hands a written statement that on going suddenly up stairs in Mr. Hinman's house she saw him emerge from the servant's room; that he slunk away covered with embarrassment, and that on going to the servant's room she found her flushed and in a tremor. Notwithstanding my personal conviction of the truth of the charges of impurity made against Mr. Hinman, my official action has been grounded entirely on his reputation. His name is a byword, his reputation infamous."

Events of the Week.

GARFIELD is electioneering in this state.

THE Rev. Moncure D. Conway, of London, is on a visit to this country.

A YOUNG lady in a Hudson River town recently purchased a husband for a plate of ice cream.

SEVERAL vessels loaded with naptha took fire and burnt to the water's edge in this port a few nights ago.

A VESSEL which arrived in this port from Cuba a few days ago had five cases of yellow fever on board.

STEPS hav been taken by a Canadian railroad company to run a tunnel under the St. Lawrence at Montreal.

THE Rev. Dr. Krohn, of West Troy, N. Y., has suddenly decamped. He is accused of immorality and dishonesty.

TROOPS hav been ordered to Ireland by the British government, as fears are entertained of disturbances there.

ABOUT five hundred messenger boys of the American District Telegraph Company of this city are on strike for higher wages.

Two trains collided near Norwich, Conn., on the 5th. Many persons were scalded and otherwise severely injured, but nobody was killed.

THE English government is again sending out reinforcements to Afghanistan. The Afghans will not remain whipped, but persist in occasionally rising and defeating their conquerors.

THE son-in-law of the Rev. Mr. Stebbins, a Unitarian minister of San Francisco, shot and killed the seducer of his wife a short time since. Mr. Stebbins, the father of the lady in question, expresses sorrow that he himself did not do the shooting.

AN excursion steamer with six hundred passengers on board knocked a hole in her bottom, on the rocks in New Rochelle harbor, near this city, on Sunday last. She was run into shallow water before she sunk, and the passengers were all safely landed.

NO progress has yet been made in recovering the bodies of the twenty victims of the Hudson River tunnel disaster. The water rushes into the tunnel faster than three large steam pumps can take it out, and the work of clearing the tunnel will hav to be commenced anew.

PIETRO BALBO, a young Italian, who murdered his wife some time since, was hanged in this city on the 6th. He had had an altar constructed in his cell, and most of the time since his conviction was spent in prayer, in which he was assisted by several priests. He died a good citizen.

DR. TANNER finished his forty-day fast at noon on Saturday last, and now he is making up for lost dinners. His digestiv powers are as wonderful as his fasting powers, and the amount of food he consumes is astonishing. He gains in weight at the rate of from four to five pounds a day.

A LOCOMOTIV and car jumped from the elevated railroad of this city a few days ago, doing considerable damage, but luckily no one was killed or injured, as the engineer, conductor, and fireman escaped from the train before its plunge to the street, and there were no passengers aboard at the time.

SEVERAL collisions between excursion steamers and other vessels hav lately occurred in this harbor and adjacent rivers, though fortunately few lives hav been lost thus far. A few days ago a crowded steamer collided with a schooner lying at anchor, carrying away the schooner's bowsprit and otherwise damaging her. Several passengers were injured.

A CHILIAN transport was blown up by a Peruvian torpedo a short time since. The torpedo was concealed in a launch loaded with fruit and vegetables. The launch was set adrift at night, and was soon discovered and captured by the Chilians, who thought they had taken a prize. It was taken alongside the transport and partly unloaded, when the torpedo exploded, sinking both vessels and killing one hundred and fifty of the crew.

The Radical Pulpit

The Joy of Life.

[Sermon preached in the church of the Trinity, Evansville, Indiana, by George Chainey, who is now kept from preaching by an injunction obtained by a small minority of his congregation.]

By the joy of life I mean an abiding sense of its worth—a feeling of gladness and thankfulness for it as a boon. It is the weight that bears down the scale on the side that it is better to hav lived than not to hav lived.

All men do not feel this. Almost every newspaper brings us word of some one who has decided on the other side, and so, at their own free choice, hav deliberately "shuffled off this mortal coil." Most of these, however, are the result of individual misfortunes in the loss of money, or love, or friends, or health, or sanity. The great majority do, I am sure, prefer to liv. The thought of death is abhorent to them while life is strong. When disease has weakened the body, and made life a burden, to die is as welcome as sleep. Thousands then find comfort in the thought of being hushed into the dreamless sleep of eternal rest. But when life is strong within us, and death confronts us suddenly, it maddens and makes men desperate and selfish. This was seen in the late sad steamboat collision off Long Island. For life men forgot duty, love, friends, humanity, and everything.

It is not in accordance with nature that with the mass of men this should be otherwise. In the estimate of the worth of life there are two extreme positions, both of which are dangerous. We speak of them as optimistic and pessimistic. The thorough optimist is hopeful, buoyant, and finds good everywhere. The pessimist is sad, cheerless, and finds evil everywhere. The optimist is blinded with his rose-mist to the large amount of suffering there is in the world, and so lacks sympathy and interest in the wrongs and woes of humanity. The thorough pessimist is too mistrustful of human nature and hasn't enough faith in the possibilities of progress and improvement to incite him to usefulness. Both these extremes are hurtful.

The men and women who do the most good are those who, though seeing that there is much evil in the world, still feel glad to liv, and that to be is far better than not to be.

Whence comes this sense of the joy and worth of life? What is it that makes the largest number of people in earnest to do and to favor whatever will contribute to the happiness of mankind? This is the foundation of right and wrong.

If not to be is better than to be, is my faith, I shall most likely abstain from anything that will increase the sum total of existence. A thorough pessimist, to be consistent, ought to organize a society for the purpose of bringing about universal suicide. On the other hand, if I believe that life is worth living, right will be to do whatever is conducive to existence. The first great question of every brave and thoughtful man is, How shall I make the world better? Now if it is this feeling of the worth of life that underlies all right or wrong-doing, should we not be in earnest to find out what are the influences or conditions of life that produce this feeling? It is said by many that it is produced by religion. Buddhism is the largest religion of the world, covering, as it does, over one-third of the whole human race. In the struggle after spiritual purity no people are so religious. But the end of all their prayers and struggles is to lose the consciousness of life.

"To them life is long-drawn agony.
Only its pains abide. Its pleasures are
As birds which light and fly.
Sweet is fond love, but funeral flames must kiss
The breasts which pillow and the lips which cling.
Gallant is warlike might, but vultures pick
The joints of chiefs and kings.
Beauteous is earth, but all its forest broods
Plot mutual slaughter, hungering to liv.
Of sapphire are the skies, but when men cry,
Famished, no drops they giv."

The promis to the pious devotee, which he struggles by self-renunciation to gain, is:

"Never shall yearnings torture him, nor sins
Stain him, nor ache of earthly joys and woes
Invade his safe, eternal peace, nor deaths
And lives recur. He goes
Unto Nirvana. He is one with life,
Yet livs not. He is blest ceasing to be.
. . . The dewdrop slips
Into the shining sea."

But many will say this is a false religion, invented of the devil, and that all who believe it are idolators, but that Christianity is divine, and that it is belief in its doctrins that can alone make life worth living. A book has been written to prove this to be a fact. It is acknowledged by the author that to men of intellectual attainments life may hav a certain sense of worth that is quite preferable to annihilation. Still he is quite sure that when common, every-day people lose their faith in Christianity all the perfume and coloring will be found to hav gone out of life. But we who hav lost this faith, whether common or uncommon people, with but few exceptions, feel that life has for us a far higher value.

We are very sure that it would yield us no satisfaction to hav to go back again into the intellectual narrowness and superstitious feelings of our earlier days. Every day yields us some few minutes of exquisit joy when we look back into the pit from which we hav escaped.

But do all who entertain this faith in Christianity feel that life is a joyful thing? Nay. The whole history of Christian faith is one of entire condemnation of life as a worthless bauble. In every possible way its meanness has been described. In prayer and song, all earthly life has been denounced as mean and despicable. Like the Buddhist religion, the highest meaning Christianity has given to life has been to get well out of it, to despise it, and hate it so well that when death comes to the believer his soul will not be wedded to its vanities. Every Christian biography relates the story of how its subject had to constantly trample under his feet the allurements of this world. In order to contemplate God, thousands hav closed their eyes to the beauty of the earth. In order to enjoy a happy death, millions hav renounced all the pleasures of human love and ambition, and in cells and nunneries and ascetic devotions watched and waited for the hour of deliverance from the flesh. It is true that these people tell you that there is a peace and joy in their hearts that the world cannot giv nor take away. But these statements must be acccepted in the light of others. They are fully persuaded that they are going to enjoy a good time by and by when all unbelievers will be suffering eternal pain. Their joy is an illusion to us. I know that it is said that there is more pleasure in anticipation than in realization. But I had much rather eat an orange than imagin for a year how good it would taste. I had a thousand times rather at this moment be on Long Island laving my limbs in the salt waves and feeling the keen delight of their electric power than imagining in this sweltering climate how nice it would be. And who would not rather feel the joyous thrill of an all-conquering love for one week than to hope to do so for any length of time? We must also remember that if what these people say is true the world is a failure. According to their philosophy, those who neglect it will be rewarded, while those who seek, in their love of it, to improve and enrich it, will be punished. We must also remember that thousands who were once as earnest in their devotion to this view of life, having escaped from it into a true enjoyment of nature, say that its happiness was not by any means so rich and full as their present.

I readily acknowledge that the sincere believer often enjoys a certain kind of peace and ecstasy of a mystical flavor that simulates in some measure the more real joys of life. But even this is often born of a spiritual conceit as to a mistaken notion concerning their importance in the plans of God for the salvation of the world.

Then this joy is liable to be marred in so many different ways. Some are beginning to be shaken with doubt through the first intellectual awakening of life. Others are in constant fear and torment lest some of their dear ones should neglect to seek the Savior. The minister may tell them to leave it all in the hands of God, but they are a little too human to be such good Christians as that; their faith balks at the promis that whatever they ask in the name of Jesus shall be granted. Others are constantly at war with themselvs because when they honestly examin into their own lives they find that they don't begin to love their neighbor as themselvs.

Still others are troubled about the conflicting views of religion taught in the churches, and wonder whether they are in the right way. I hav lived and worshiped among the most devout people, and I know that so far as this life is concerned it is not by any means so satisfactory as it is to those who are content with "one world at a time." Why is this? Because the belief in God and immortality necessarily blinds to the real meanings of the present life and world. Close before them stands their real mother inviting them to feast upon her warm and tender love, but they deride her and turn her away that they may look for an ideal parent whom they hav created to suit them in their imaginations. Though they may get a little comfort through fondly dwelling upon the idea of excellence of this production of their fancy, it is not to be compared with the actual love and presence of our real mother.

While men and women expect to liv on forever in a much larger life than the present, it is utterly impossible for them to see the real meaning and beauty of the present. Giv a child a beautiful toy to-day and promise him twenty more beautiful ones to-morrow, and he will fail to enjoy the one given to-day in wondering and thinking about those coming to-morrow. The hours will be numbered. The day will drag wearily and the night will be fitful and feverish, so that the present will be sacrificed on the altar of the future. It is in this way that the dogmas of Christianity spoil the worth and beauty of the present life.

Before I answer the question, What is it that makes life worth living? I want to say that there are many good people who, though destitute of all superstition, still think that it is not worth living. I do not by any means think of this world or universe as perfect. There are so many failures and calamities that to do so is impossible. If any dependence is to be placed in astronomy, there are worlds that are born, liv, and die without serving any good purpose, just as there are many idiots and people born whose lives through no fault of their own are entirely useless to themselvs or the world. Many a flower wastes its sweetness on the desert air. Thousands are crushed to the earth by trampling beasts or destructiv storms. So it is in human life. The belief in a God necessitates a belief in the perfection of all things, but when this delusion fails us we find that things are very far from perfect. What means the wreck of the Narragansett or those numerous tornadoes that go tearing through the land, destroying so many happy homes in one fell swoop of death and ruin? Now there are some people who feel those things so keenly that through sympathy with others or their own misfortunes they are compelled to feel that for them the pains of life outnumber its pleasures. It may be that, taking humanity as a whole, its pleasures outweigh its pains, but that cannot change the balance so far as they are concerned. This is one of the greatest questions of life, To be or not to be. It runs through all literature. It was constantly present to the imperial mind of Shakspere. The fascination of Hamlet and of Lear is largely due to it. What impressed Shakspere so deeply is not to be pushed aside with a few dogmatic assertions. So I will say again that though to me life is worth living, and I believe that it is constantly growing more so to thousands, I still hold in trust, respect, and hav the deepest sympathy for those who think otherwise. One of the tributary streams that contributes to the joy of life is the sense of liberty.

The joy of liberty is better felt than told. The man who has been a slave knows that there is a great difference between his present enjoyment of life and when he was confined by force to a monotonous and weary routine. His life may cover no larger ground. He may hav some troubles now he never had before, but to him the feeling that he is free, that all fields of life and activity are open to him, that the days to come hold for him many welcome surprises, is a priceless boon. But the sense of mental liberty is far larger and keener in its contribution to the joyous feeling of life. When we were confined in our thought to a creed, life was tame and insipid. All wonder and expectation were quenched in its dogmas. The infinit had no power to thrill and move us, and life was simply like that of the slave who knows that each to-morrow will be a repetition of to-day.

In harmony with this, belief has always despised intellectual attainments. Science and knowledge are everywhere spoken against. The wisdom of this world is said to be at enmity with God. Belief and knowledge are as antagonistic as slavery and freedom. There is nothing that orthodoxy fears so much as Freethought. The church talks of liberty, but never means what it says. When I came into the Unitarian body I was promised the largest liberty, and now for taking them at their word I am denounced. You joined this church under the recognition of the sacred right of private judgment with the pledge to advocate freedom of thought and with the distinct understanding that the church was ruled by the majority, and now a few of our friends want to force a creed upon you, and compel you to submit to their arbitrary will in the control of the pulpit and form of service. Liberty, you see, brings its troubles, but the sweet sense of feeling that to us all the broad and rich fields of truth stand open, that every to-morrow is rich with some new vision of truth, fills us with joy that makes us oblivious to these petty obstructions placed in our path. All the creeds, written or unwritten, and all the churches ever built, are not worth to us half as much as this joy of liberty that makes life a perpetual wonder and delight. The imprisoning power of dogmas is responsible for much of the despair and humdrum character of life.

Nothing is so fossilizing as a creed; and as human joy is the inspiration of righteousness, opposition to all creeds is one of the first and highest duties of life. With mental liberty comes the sense of belonging to one's self. There is no longer war between our own desires and the law of life. We enjoy the peace of a definit and consistent law of conduct. In being true to ourselvs we see that we are doing the largest amount of good to humanity. The world needs the healthful and saving influence of sincerity. It can stand a great many blunders when men are honest with themselvs and each other, but when through the influence of popular creeds thousands profess what they don't believe, the stream of life's worth is poisoned at its fountain source.

Another source of joy is the sense of our relationship to the universe. The world in which we liv is a perpetual cause of wonder and delight. It is in itself to us an infinit mystery. We find much more enjoyment in it than those do who try to explain away this mystery by imagining a still greater mystery. If we must find a first cause it is just as necessary to ask the child's question, Who made God? as it is, Who made the world?

Theism is destructiv of human joy because those who go behind nature in search of omnipotence lose in a large measure the sweet sense of relationship to the world they liv in. Joy is almost synonymous with that quality of life we call naturalness

Wherever superstition clouds the sky of life there is the shadow of a fearful awe upon the heart. No clouds of fear obscure the light of reason. To all who walk by its brightening ray the beauty and perfume of the flowers, the wonder and charm of the changing scenery of the landscape, yield a perpetual delight. The sense of our relationship thrills us with a sweet and poetical pleasure. All its moods affect us. We feel our relationship to it and rest in its truth. There is a power in it which, as Matthew Arnold says, makes for righteousness, that is eternal in its order and harmony; but it is not to us a personal power outside of nature, but Nature itself. As long as men believe that the world has been created out of nothing by a greater power than itself they will fail to see its beauty or feel the worth of life. The upliftings and subduings of feeling that many call religion are not born of any creed or dogma, nor of any forced obedience to arbitrary standards of morality, but they flow down into our lives from the natural hights of beauty and wonder that fade away into the impenetrable infinities of the universe.

When all guesses about the infinit are gone the infinit remains. When all faith in dogmas is gone, and we are brave and honest enough to say so, there remains in life a sincerity that is more than truth, a goodness that is more than justice; and these blend and flow into each other like harmonious colors in flowers, forming a bouquet of indefinable grace and beauty. Another source of life's joy is found in real human love. We are no longer such ascetics that we cannot rejoice in the physical beauty of man or woman. To cultivate physical perfection is to us one of the sacred duties of life. Religion has branded with infamy the sensuous pleasures of life, and for so doing I believe is responsible for most of the sensualism of the world. Sensualism grows largely out of calling impure what is pure in itself. It is born of a false and morbid repression of natural appetites. It is protected by a low moral estimate of the importance of the bodily functions of life. It flourishes and fattens on the dense ignorance that prevails in regard to the relation of physical health to all the other functions of life. Imaginary love of God may grow strong as the body grows weak, but the human loves of the new gospel liv and flourish the best when the body is healthy. One of the first duties of life is to be well. Physical health alone is a source of indefinable joy. No words can express the luxury of living when the pulse beats high and the senses are all awake to contribute, each one its share, to the feast of life. It is in this soil the plants of love bud and blossom in rich profusion. Who shall sing the praise of love? How new and yet how old the story!

The first and last theme of every poet's pen and artist's brush are these. And yet it has been called profane! Sickness and death, according to religion, hav often invaded some happy home, and snatched therefrom the dearest object of love to teach those that remain that they must not be so taken up with love as to forget God. We must preach that nothing is so sacred or givs such worth to life as a love that fills all the days and hours of life with thoughts and deeds of devotion. Let men and women worship each other. Let them idolize their children. What harm can come of it? Let the home be the most sacred temple, and the fireside the divinest altar. We hav been seeking a heaven in the skies; let us now look for one on earth. Thousands of women hav wept and prayed away their lives, crushing down with iron hand of fear the cravings for some human love. How much sweeter and purer the world would hav been if all this earnest devotion had been consecrated to the building up of earthly homes, the rewarding of honest manly hearts, and the training of little children beneath the warm sunny skies of such a brooding tenderness. A life without experiencing a genuin human love, however rich it may be in other directions, has never felt the highest sense of life's worth. Goethe on his dying bed found sweetest consolation in saying, "I hav loved and been loved."

Another source of life's joy is found in wealth. Religion has had much to say against the danger of riches. It is impossible, according to the Christian standard, for a rich man to enter into the kindom of heaven; still I notice that a great many of them expect to do so. The new gospel shall, however, pronounce its curse against poverty; not the poor man, but the conditions that make him poor. We must cease to encourage a belief that says that an order of society that keeps so many ground to the earth beneath the burden of poverty is of necessity permanent. Wealth must be more equalized. There is enough to provide every one with all that is needed of physical good. I hav no sympathy with the leveling principle that all should share alike. That was the doctrin of Jesus, and whenever it has been fairly tried it has proved a failure. But I believe that wealth instead of being a curse is a blessing. I know that the children of the rich are often ruined, but that is owing to other influences than the fact that their parents were above all want. Wealth that is held in the aristocratic spirit, as something that makes one superior to his fellows, independent of any worth of intellect or of character, is bound to work mischief. But wealth rightly used will multiply all the other pleasures of life.

The world is growing happier because it is growing wealthier.

If you want to see human misery, go to a poverty-stricken land like Ireland or Italy. Christianity has pronounced its blessing upon poverty, and to-day these two most Christian countries swarm with paupers.

When we turn our attention to the improvement of this world, to the actual happiness of mankind right here and now, we shall find that this question of wealth is one of the foremost. When we giv the time and thought now given to disputes about God, heaven, and hell, and other things of which we can know nothing, to the questions of the social reformation, of money, and of the relation of labor to capital, we shall be much nearer the universal sense of life's worth than we are to-day.

Let every man and woman be free to think their own thought; let the home be the most sacred temple, pure human love the holiest religion, and wealth increase until comfort shall sit by every fireside, and no one will complain that life is not greatly worth having.

I fancy I hear some orthodox person saying, How will you bring this joy to him who is laboring under the burden of a guilty conscience? In the first place, most of these burdens are of your making and as long as they believe in your doctrins the only relief they can find is by taking liberal doses of faith. But when, through the influence of universal education and science, we hav destroyed these dogmas there will not be so many of these blighted and distorted lives. And if any one walking in this new light of truth shall wilfully do what he feels to be wrong, I am sure that he will learn to respect himself far sooner by manfully bearing his own burden than by shirking off the responsibility on to some one else. Nature cures a wound of the spirit by obedience to her laws in the same way as it does one of the body.

When the true law of conduct is taught in the place of the present false and unnatural ones there will be but little transgression. When sincerity and naturalness abound and every one has a chance without becoming a slave to gain a fair share of the comforts of life, our prisons will be to let, our insane asylums and poorhouses will be empty, and happiness will bloom in every heart. It may be that it will be long before this ideal will be reached, but every approach to it will be made by the preaching and practice of the new gospel of liberty, love, and law.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 7.

And what has been done by habits can be undone by reversing the processes or discontinuing the habits. It is now clearly established that the causes of our human degradation and loss, and the means of our elevation and gain, are within us. The way of redemption and ascension to higher life is by a right use of those powers and faculties the perversion of which has resulted in so much suffering and misery to our race. The generativ power must be educated, trained, and guided by the highest wisdom and scientific culture as the only sure foundation of effectiv and permanent reform.—Loring Moody.

And habit has led us step by step into sexual intemperance, and now we must "reverse the processes and discontinue the habit." We must teach the world a truer and higher form of general morality than it has yet possessed. To make our position more clear, suppose we take the question of temperance as regards liquor drinking as an illustration of our subject. I hold that all use of liquor for a beverage is harmful, and probably in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it dees more injury than good even as a medicin; and consequently I am a tetotaler. There was a time when to eschew all fermented drinks was thought to be fanaticism, foolishness, and finicalism. Men then pleaded for gustatory enjoyment as harmless and natural, just as they now ask for sexual enjoyment on the same plea. But as years rolled away, and they saw the continual and increasing demand for liquor, and saw the appetite becoming so depraved that it took cayenne pepper, strychnin, and even vitriol, to make the fiery beverage strong enough to tickle the palate, and as they watched the disastrous and ruinous consequences of intemperance, they began to wonder if it paid; to wonder if there was really more pleasure than pain, more joy than sorrow, in the long train of woes resulting from tippling, tasting, and guzzling. Homes desecrated and ruined, men wrecked in fortune, in mind, and body; crimes increased a thousandfold, and misery, woe, and desolation everywhere along its track, and all for a little temporary exhaltation, amiability, and "enjoyment."

Then was inaugurated a gradual system of temperance reforms that hav revolutionized public opinion, so that now temperance and teetotalism are the rule, and drinking for pleasure is the exception. Slowly but surely the good work will go on till the day will come when liquor will be made only by the government and sold only by the same executiv power, just as postage stamps now are sold. And then, when no man can fill his coffers by offering to his neighbor poisor, he will cease to do so, and intemperance in liquor drinking will be one of the outgrown evils of the past. But, says one, we ought to enjoy all our faculties. Yes, I too believe in getting all the pleasure we can in the right use of every function with which we are endowed.

But what is the right use of the generativ function? Is it not the procreation of the species? And is there really any other use for it? Because a man has made the use of tobacco or rum a seeming necessity to his happiness, is it a proof that he is endowed by nature with an appetite for them, and has a right to get all the pleasure he can from their use?

It is not to man, nor even to woman herself as queen in the department of the affections, to whom this subject of sexual indulgence should be referred. By long ages of false reasoning and improper habits of life, during which the human race yielded to appetites, passions, and desires that grew and increased as fast as gratified, the nature of human beings has become so perverted that now, to right the wrong, there must be some martyrdom endured. A few must suffer "starvation" that the many may be saved. The strong must endure self-abnegation to preserve the weak. When all becomes right and natural, there will be no real starvation or restraint. The celibate saints are no guides for alphaites. They practiced starvation on the mistaken idea that by crucifying the passions and mortifying the body they would, like the pillar saints, inherit purer and holier joys in the world to come, and so they let the mind dwell in the thoughts of lustful indulgence, and on them as crosses borne and sufferings endured for piety's sake, thus increasing desires and appetites; when they should hav been activly employed in happy, healthy, hearty work for the good of the world. Confined in cloistered cells, dwelling amid thoughts gloomy and dark, imagining themselvs hell-doomed if they let in one ray of earthly sunlight upon their lives of penance and mortification, it is no marvel they had disordered brains and withered heads.

When our friends will tell us how many glasses of liquor a man may drink a day without going beyond the "innocent and natural use" of intoxicants, then we will tell them how much legitimate indulgence outside of procreativ purposes may be allowable for pleasure. Tampering with poisons, playing with edged tools, sleeping on a slumbering volcano, are all dangerous pastimes, but misusing and abusing the most tender, delicate, and easily disordered portions of the human body, those designed only for the perpetuation of the race, is ten thousand times more dangerous than all these put together.

Pause, think, and consider before it is too late. Keep on the safe side, for in this there is but one that can possibly be safe—the side of continence, purity, health, and all that is good and clean. Cleanliness is better than all the godliness the world ever knew. Matthew Arnold says, "Excellence dwells among high and steep rocks, and can only be reached by those who sweat blood to reach her." But to be excellent who would not strive to climb? What is life for if it be not for the purpose of achieving excellence? Shall we hesitate, then, to begin our ascent? Humboldt says, "One's business in life is first to perfect one's self by all the means in one's power, and secondly to try and create in the world an aristocracy, the most numerous that one possibly can, of talents and character." So let us perfect ourselvs, and then by precept and example do all we can to perfect as many as we can, thus creating an aristocracy of purity and excellence that shall embrace more and more within its folds, till all the nations rejoice in light, love, and knowledge.

"Gathering strength while we are waiting
For the conflict yet to come,
Fear not, fail not, light will lead us
Yet in safety to our home."

Snowville, Va., July 21, 1880. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

MR. J. B. F. CHAMPLIN, of Little Valley, New York, is entitled to the commendation of the friends of Freethought, not only himself, but his good wife, who has greatly aided him in the good work he has just accomplished. Little Valley is a very pleasant village, but is terribly orthodox in religion. There are a number of churches there where the so-called "bread of life" is dealt out every Sunday, but it is very poor "bread," and the only reason the people eat it is that they were brought up on it and hav never allowed themselvs to change their diet or believe there was anything better than this old moldy stuff. But Mr. Champlin is a reader, an observer, and a traveling man, and has ascertained the fact that there is better diet than orthodoxy. He has put up a fine brick block in the village, and finished off, in fine style, in the third story a magnificent public hall, which was last Saturday and Sunday dedicated to Freethought and mental liberty. And he proposes that hereafter Liberalism shall hav a hearing in Little Valley.

Bismarck (Kan.) Liberal Camp-Meeting.

Do not fail to attend the second great encampment of Liberals at Bismarck Grove, Lawrence, Kan. This Convention of Liberals will be one of the greatest of the year. Commencing Sept. 1st, it will last seven days. The best speakers of the Liberal ranks will be in attendance. Strong efforts will be made to secure the attendance of Col. Ingersoll. The grounds hav been enlarged and beautified by the owners, the W. P. Railroad Company. The Kansas railroads will commute their rates, and perhaps some others. Accommodations at very reasonable rates can be had on the grounds or in the city. Bring your own provision and bed clothing, if you choose, and camp out. Plenty of good tents for rent cheaply. Do not forget. Come all.

Lawrence, Kan., Aug. 3, 1880. O. A. PHELPS.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1880.

What Objections to Christianity?

REPLY TO MR. MAIR'S FOURTH LETTER.—CONTINUED.

Quirinius of Rome is briefly described by Higgins as having been crucified. It is also shown that he was born of a virgin, and his life sought when a child by the reigning king. He was of royal blood; when he was put to death darkness spread over the earth; he also rose from the dead and ascended to heaven.

Thulis, or Zulis, of Egypt was believed to have been crucified more than fifteen hundred years before Jesus. Wilkinson says of him, "His history is curiously illustrated in the sculptures, made seventeen hundred years B. C." After his violent death he was buried, but rose and ascended into heaven, and became "the judge of the dead." He is said to have been full of grace and truth, and to have come down from heaven to effect a great good for mankind.

An account of the myth of the crucifixion of the Thibetan god and savior Indra may be found in Georgius (Thibetinum Alphabetum, p. 230). Plates in this work represent this Thibetan savior as having been nailed to the cross. Five wounds are seen, representing holes made by nails, and also a wound in the side. The myth is of great antiquity. A part of the myth referring to him is that he was born of a virgin and descended from heaven on a mission of mercy. He lived a life of strict celibacy, led a most holy life, and taught the purest of morals.

Alcestos of Euripides seems to have been a female savior who was crucified. An account of this case may be found in the English Classical Journal, vol. xxxvii. The period assigned to this savior was 600 B. C.

Attys of Phrygia, another crucified savior, is a still older myth, being placed at 1170 B. C. Higgins mentions it. The Latin phrase suspensus lingo, found in his history, indicates the manner of his death. He was suspended on a tree, crucified, buried, and rose again. Different stories are told of him, but this is one.

Crite was the Chaldean savior, an account of whom, according to Higgins, is noted in Chaldean sacred books. He was called "The Redeemer," and was styled "The Ever Blessed Son of God," "The Savior of the Race," and "An Atoning Offering for an Angry God." When he was offered up, heaven and earth were said to have been shaken to their foundations.

Bali, or Baliu, of Orissa, in Asia, is another of these old crucifixion myths. Higgins tells us (Anacalypsis, vol. i, p. 257) that monuments of this crucified god bear great age, and may be found amid the ruins of the magnificent city of Mahabalepore, partially buried among the figures in the temple. He was called the "Lord Second," indicating the second God in the trinity. He was the son of the principal deity, and, as in so many other cases, was the one for a propitiation or atoning offering.

Mithra, according to a Persian myth, as Higgins informs us, was another redeemer, or son of God, to whom Jesus bears much resemblance. He was the son of the great god Ormuzd; he was one of the trinity, and he was born on the 25th day of December. That day was celebrated with great pomp in his memory for hundreds of years. It was held that he was crucified on a tree as an atonement for mankind. Two Christian writers, Faber and Bryant, both speak of his being slain, but avoid mentioning his being crucified, as other Christian writers have done in the cases of other ancient myths. The disposition has often been shown to suppress the idea of crucifixions, lest it be seen what "counterfeits" they were of the crucified Jesus, who came on nearly a thousand years later.

Prometheus was the Grecian crucified savior. Different renditions of his story are given, as many different writers have had more or less to say of this myth. Hesiod sings of him, and Eschylus and Seneca wrote of him, as did also Horace and many others. He was nailed to an upright beam of timber, to which were affixed arms of wood, which constituted a cross, and was located near the Caspian Straits. The learned Mr. Higgins pronounces the modern Christian rendition of Prometheus being bound for thirty years to a rock, where vultures preyed daily upon his vitals, "an impious Christian fraud." "I have seen," says he, "the account which declares he was nailed to the cross with hammer and nails" (Anac. vol. i, p. 327). The New American Cyclopedia (vol. i, p. 157) says of Prometheus, "It is doubtful whether there is to be found in the whole range of Greek letters deeper pathos than that of the divine woe of the beneficent demigod Prometheus, crucified on his Scythian cross for his love to mortals." Southwell commemorates the same idea—"He exposed himself to the wrath of God in his zeal to save mankind." The noticeable points in the myth of Prometheus are: 1. He was the son of a God; 2. He wished to benefit the race of man; 3. As a propititation to appease the anger of God, he was crucified; 4. The whole frame of nature was convulsed; the earth shook, the rocks were rent, and the graves were opened.

The story of Prometheus was written by Grecian poets, hundreds of years before the time of Jesus, prominent among whom was Eschylus; and a drama of the crucifixion of Prometheus was enacted on the Athenian stage five hundred years before Jesus was born. The plot was derived from materials, even at that time, of very remote antiquity. The ex-Rev. Dr. Robert Taylor (Diegesis, p. 191) describes this at length. The "Prometheus Bound," of Eschylus is among the most noted ancient poems that has come down to our times. Perhaps Potter's translation is the best. The majesty of the silence of Prometheus, whilst the ministers of an offended God were nailing him by the hands and feet on Mount Caucasus, could only be equaled by the modesty with which he relates, while hanging on the cross (referring to the position of the sufferer), his services to the human race which had brought on him that awful crucifixion:

"I will speak
Not as upbraiding them, but by my own gifts
Commending. 'Twas I who brought sweet hope
To inhabit in their hearts. I brought
The fire of heaven to animate their clay;
And through the clouds of barbarous ignorance
Diffused the beams of knowledge. In a word,
Prometheus taught each useful art to man."

In answer to a call made on him to explain how this philanthropy could hav incurred such a terrible punishment, he continues:

"See what I, a god, suffer from the gods
For mercy to mankind. I am not deemed Worthy of mercy; but in this uncouth
Appointment am fixed here,
A spectacle dishonorable to Jove!
On the throne of heaven scarce was he seated,
On the powers of heaven
He showered his various benefits, thereby
Confirming his sovereignty; but for unhappy mortals
Had no regard, but all the present race
Willed to extirpate, and to form anew,
None, save myself, opposed his will. I dared,
And boldly pleading, saved them from destruction—
Saved them from sinking to the realms of night,
For which offense I bow beneath these pains,
Dreadful to suffer, piteous to behold."

None remained to be witnesses of his dying agonies save a chorus of faithful women who bewailed and lamented his unhappy fate, but were unable to subdue his inflexible philanthrophy. Overcome at length by the intensity of his sufferings, he curses Jove in language scarcely different in terms, and not inferior in sublimity, to the celebrated Eloi, Eloi, lama sabacthani? of the gospel story. And then immediately the whole frame of nature became convulsed, and earthquakes and the rending of rocks followed, "and in a storm that threatened the dissolution of the universe, the curtain fell on the sublimest scene ever presented to the contemplation of the human eye—a dying god."

"Lo, streaming from the fatal tree,
His all-atoning blood;
Is this the Infinite? 'Tis he,
Prometheus, and a god!
Well might the sun in darkness hide,
And veil his glories in,
When God, the great Prometheus, died
For man the creature's sin."

Dr. Taylor continues: "The preternatural darkness which attended the crucifixion of Prometheus was natural enough as exhibited on the stage, and is beautifully described in the language of the tragedy. Nor is there any difficulty in conceiving that when the mighty effort of such a tragedy on the feelings and sentiments of the audience became an inexhaustible source of wealth to the performers, there would he found those who were shrewd enough to discover the policy of enchaining and perpetuating so probable an impression on the vulgar mind by maintaining that there was more than a mere show in the business; that it was an exhibition of circumstances that had really happened; that Prometheus was a real personage, and had actually done and suffered and spoken in as lively a manner as had been set before them; that the tragedy was a gospel put into meter, and that nothing but 'an evil beast of unbelief' would induce any man to doubt 'the certainty of those things wherein he had been instructed.' It is probably no more than a figure of speech, though very injudiciously chosen, in which Origen calls the crucifixion of Christ the most awful tragedy ever acted. But the pretense of the reality of the event would break down, in the judgment of the better informed, from the total want of evidence to support that part of the detail, which, had it been real, could not have wanted the clearest and most constraining demonstration. The darkness which closed the scene of the suffering Prometheus was easily exhibited on the stage by putting out the lamps; but when the tragedy was to become history, and the fiction to be turned into farce, the lamp of day could not be so easily disposed of. Nor can it be denied that the miraculous darkness which the evangelists so solemnly declare to have attended the crucifixion of Christ labors under precisely the same fatality of an absolute and total want of evidence."

In speaking of this subject, and especially of the similar story of the crucifixion of Jesus, Gibbon, in his characteristic ironical style, asks: "How shall we excuse the supine inattention of the pagan and philosophic world to those evidences which were presented by the hand of Omnipotence, not to their reason, but to their senses? This miraculous event, which ought to hav excited the wonder, the curiosity, and the devotion of mankind, passed without notice in an age of history. It happened during the lifetime of Seneca and the elder Pliny, who must have experienced the immediate effects, or received the earliest intelligence, of the prodigy. Each of these philosophers, in a laborious work, has recorded all the great phenomena of nature, earthquakes, meteors, comets, and eclipses, which his indefatigable curiosity could collect; both the one and the other have omitted to mention the greatest phenomenon to which the mortal eye has been witness since the creation of the globe" (Gibbon, vol. ii, chap. 15, p. 379). The argument is a strong one; if it was true that earthquakes, rending of rocks, and general darkness prevailed at the death of Jesus, with the dead coming forth from their graves, Seneca, Pliny, Josephus, and others would undoubtedly have had something to say about it. If Matthew drew upon his imagination in this case to get up a remarkable narrative, he is not to be believed in anything he says. Bishop Watson's reply to Gibbon hardly meets the case: "However mysterious the darkness at the crucifixion might have been, I have no doubt the power of God was as much concerned in its production as it was in opening the graves and the resurrection of the dead bodies of the saints that slept, which accompanied that darkness" (Third Letter to Gibbon). Thus the bishop would be glad to prove the darkness by the rising of the dead, and probably the rising of the dead by the darkness. Unfortunately there is nothing to prove either save the unsustained and unreliable story of Matthew.

Taylor further says: "Prometheus, exactly answering the Christian personification, Providence, is, like that personification, used sometimes as an epithet, synonymous with the supreme Deity himself. The pagan phrase, 'Thank Prometheus,' like the Christian one, 'Thank Providence,' its literal interpretation, meant exactly the same as 'Thank God.' Thus in the Orphic hymn to Kronos, or Saturn, we hav this sublime address: 'Illustrious, cherishing Father, both of immortal gods and men, various of counsel, spotless, powerful, mighty Titan who consumest all things, and again thyself against them; who holdest the ineffable bonds, throughout the boundless world; thou universal parent of successive being, various in design, fructifier of the earth and of the starry heaven; dread Prometheus, who dwellest in all parts of the world, author of generations, tortuous in counsel, hear our supplicant voice, and send our life a happy, blameless end. Amen."

The foregoing brief mention of the mythical saviors that have been believed to have been crucified, together with the references and authorities, are from Grave's "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." Much fuller remarks could be made, and much more said showing that belief in saviors and sons of Gods being crucified existed widely in the world many hundreds of years before Jesus. I think you are correct in deciding that one must be a counterfeit of the others. We differ only as to which is the counterfeit. You think the older is the counterfeit, while the younger is the original. I hold directly to the opposite. Let our readers decide which is correct. One thing, however, must be perfectly apparent to every thoughtful person who understands the facts—that there was quite enough of the crucifixion myths in the world, centuries before Jesus was heard of, to afford ingenious manipulators the necessary cue and material to make up the Jesus story. I feel inclined here to repeat what I said in my last, that if our gospel story is true, that God found it necessary to leave his home in heaven and come to earth to make it possible for a moiety of the human race to be saved, what a pity that he should not have been able to originate something new, and not be compelled to follow in the footsteps of the old pagans, and adopt their crude, effete, and worn-out vagaries.

You are unfortunate in your endeavors to prove the truthfulness of the story of Jesus from contemporary historians. Seutonius did not speak of Jesus or Christ. He did, in 110, speak of Chrestus, a leader in Jewish riots, but it is absurd to claim that he alluded to Jesus. If Christianity has no better proof in its favor than that, it is weak indeed. The passage from Tacitus has been clearly proved by Dr. Robert Taylor to be a forgery, and not very long since an English writer asserted in the Edinburgh Review his ability to prove that the entire "Annals of Tacitus," from whence the story emanated, were forged by one Paggia Bracciolini, who died in 1459, having for forty years been apostolic secretary to seven successive popes. He was a good scholar, and in every way capable of getting up the forgery. A proof to show that the passage in the "Annals" is a forgery is that the punishment of the Christians by Nero is plagiarized from Sulpicius Severus, an elegant Christian writer, about the year 400. Passages in the two are almost identical, as could easily be shown if space could be taken to give corresponding passages. Forgeries in the early Christian centuries were of most frequent occurrence, and it is unsafe to attach full importance to much that was then written. This is particularly the case with the celebrated passage ascribed to Josephus, speaking of Jesus. The ablest writers pronounce it a forgery. At best it is of questionable authenticity. The asserted quotation of Pliny stands little better. It is stoutly claimed that he wrote of the Essenes, and not of the Christians proper. The term Christian was not used by any pagan writer till the second century.

I must confess to you that a smile unavoidably came over my face as I read your attempt to prove that there are "governmental archives" referring to Jesus. You gave a quotation from the apocryphal gospel called the "Acts of Pilate," or "Gospel of Nicodemus," as it is also called, which, so far as I am informed, no respectable authority regards as anything else than spurious. The book is made up of the most absurd accounts of Jesus descending into hell, about the conversation which took place between Satan and Hades, of the objections of the latter to Jesus being taken into his dominion, of the shattering of the gates of hell, of the conversations with Adam, Seth, John the Baptist, etc. Much of this gospel is too ridiculous for anybody to believe, and no sensible person for a moment supposes that Pilate ever wrote a word of it. Pretty "governmental archives," indeed! Is that the best kind of proof you have to offer? The bungling of the forger who got it up may be seen by the claim that Pilate wrote his letter to Claudius Cæsar, telling about the ministry and death of Jesus, when Pilate had been recalled by Tiberius and was superseded by another procurator, so that when Claudius became emperor, A.D. 41, Pilate was not in Judea at all, and never wrote a letter to Claudius. You might with the same propriety have introduced as "governmental archives" the remarkable story of the handkerchief of the woman Veronica, on which handkerchief Jesus instantaneously photographed his own picture, and which afterward cured the emperor Tiberius Cæsar. If you have a taste for those "big stories," you can find plenty of them in the canonical and uncanonical gospels. There have been doubtless hundreds of them, and gotten up by interested and ingenious forgers.

My reply to your letter has reached a greater length than I intended, and I will needs leave some points unnoticed, but I will take the space to deny your attempt to make it appear that Christianity, or the gospel, is more than nineteen hundred years of age, and I deny that it was preached to Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, or anybody else before the Christian era. The mention that the heel of the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head had no more allusion to the religion of Jesus than it had to Mohammed, John Calvin, or Joseph Smith. The serpent story is a simple Chaldean allegory, and the allusion to heels and snakes' heads asserts the natural antipathy which exists between human beings and snakes, if it means anything. When a man suddenly comes upon a serpent, his sudden impulse is to place his heel somewhat forcibly upon the snake's head. The fable recognized this existing abhorrence to snakes. I deny also that there is any prophecy alluding to Jesus in the Pentateuch or in any part of the Old Testament. I am aware several are claimed, but I think without proof. I will pay attention to them when you have cited them.

I have used so much space I will not now take up your idea of God and the creation of everything from nothing, and your pretty little sermon about man's becoming a rebel and falling from God, and his being redeemed by the blood of God's Son. We will get to that subject more fairly after a while. I will remark, however, that I regard the sermon in the latter part of your letter as having very little to do with the subject of the discussion between us. That you can draw largely from thousands of sermons and theological sources I readily grant you, but, unfortunately, they prove little or nothing.

In closing this reply I will briefly continue to show that Christianity has borrowed from the systems of religion that are much older, by showing the points of resemblance between them. First let us compare Brahmanism with Judaism and Christianity. Some of the similar features in each are:

1. A personal creator of all existences.
2. Revelation from the Divine Being to the human race.
3. Profuse sacred scriptures.
4. A divine and inspired law-giver who instructed the people in what God required of them.
5. The doctrine of the trinity—three gods united in one.
6. The sacrifice of animals to appease an angry God.
7. The efficacy and importance of prayer in affecting God.
8. The doctrine of incarnation—God visible to mortals.
9. God cohabiting with a virgin, producing an offspring half God and half man.
10. God's son coming into the world to save it.
11. The conflict between God's son and devils and evil demons.
12. A belief in a holy breath or the Holy Ghost.
13. A belief in animals bearing away sin and its effects.
14. A belief in immortality.
15. Places of happiness and misery in a future life.
16. Expiation—one person atoning for another.
17. A mediator, redeemer, and savior.
18. The Savior performing miracles, and being killed by enemies.
19. The altar used in worship, also the rosary.
20. Baptism both by water and fire.
21. The extraordinary qualities of holy water.
22. The confession of sins.
23. Going on pilgrimages to holy places.
24. Celibacy and chastity to be observed by priests.
25. Belief in miracles and their great efficacy.

These resemblances can be greatly enlarged if necessary.

The believers in Brahmanism are estimated at 150,000,000. Brahmanism has existed a thousand years longer than Christianity.

Among the resemblances between Zoroastrinism and Judaism and Christianity are the following:

1. A personal, unseen, eternal deity.
2. The creation of the earth and all the worlds from nothing.
3. A first pair of parents to all human beings.
4. A belief in a general flood.
5. A lawgiver to receive and dispense God's will.
6. Laws of God given on a holy mountain 'mid thunders.
7. Sacred books divided into chapters and verses.
8. The inculcation of morals.
9. The direct government of God over the world.
10. A priesthood—a mediatorial class.
11. Belief and practice of animal sacrifice.
12. Belief and practice of prayer.
13. Belief in supernaturalism.
14. God's son a mediator and redeemer.
15. Angels and good spirits not of mortal birth.
16. The devil a good adversary of God.
17. Demons and evil spirits of lower grades.
18. A continual warfare between the good and evil.
19. Wonderful miracles.
20. A future state of existence.
21. Christmas festival, commemoration of the birth of God's son.
22. A strong opposition to idolatry.
23. Heaven and hell in a future life.
24. The resurrection of the body.
25. A final day of judgment.
26. The passions to be curbed; purity and chastity enjoined.
27. Love and forgiveness highly approved.
28. Future destruction of the world by fire, and then a new earth.
29. The division into numerous sects.
30. The Persians were forsaken of their god, and dispersed. So were the Jews. Great promises to the contrary were made to both.

There are many additional striking resemblances between the religion of Zoroaster and that of Moses. They shall be pointed out if you desire it. Zoroastrinism is undoubtedly older than Judaism.

Buddha and Jesus—Buddhism and Christianity—characteristics in common:

1. Both miraculously begotten, and a virgin for a mother.
2. Both claimed to be of royal blood.
3. Both lived lives of great self-denial.
4. Both had a band of disciples whom they taught.
5. Both taught orally; neither wrote.
6. Both claimed to have performed miracles.
7. Much that is mythical in the story of each.
8. The doctrines of each spread rapidly and widely; Buddha's most so.
9. Both systems have been embraced by millions; Buddha's far the most.
10. Both have tended to improve the morals; Buddha the most so.
11. Both enjoined works of self-denial and abnegation.
12. Both lived celibate lives and enjoined the same.
13. Both enjoined non-resistance, and the returning of good for evil.
14. Both systems have monasteries and monks.
15. Both have nunneries and nuns.
16. Both have images of virgin and child.
17. Both revere the cross as a symbol.
18. Both have confession of sins.
19. Both use the miter in priestly paraphernalia.
20. Both have the dalmatica and cape.
21. Both use psalmody and double choirs.
22. Both believe in devils and evil spirits.
23. Both believe in the power of exorcising evil spirits.
24. Both have the censer with five chains.
25. Both inculcate their doctrines in regular sermons.
26. Both use benedictions.
27. Both use chaplets in religious ceremonies.
28. Both practice and enjoin prayer.
29. Both worship departed saints.
30. Both have images representing saints.
31. Both enjoin fasting to secure God's favor.
32. Both have religious processions.
33. Both use litanies in worship.
34. Both think much of holy water.
35. Both believe in incarnation.
36. Both believe in God and earthly females begetting a hybrid offspring.
37. Both believe in expiation and atonement.
38. Both believe in a future life.
39. Both believe the righteous will be saved and the wicked lost.
40. Both use altars and temples.
41. Both believe in holy pilgrimages.
42. Both believe in supernaturalism and miracles.
43. Both believed the founders of their systems to be divine.
44. Both teach love to enemies.
45. Both think more of the future life than the present.
46. Both encouraged poverty and mendicancy.
47. Both claimed great love and charity for mankind.
48. Both greatly exalted humility.
49. Both denounce nature and teach its subjection.
50. Both claim their religious systems to be the most divine and perfect in existence.

Buddhism is more than five centuries older than Christianity, and could not well be a counterfeit of the latter.

What Judaism may have borrowed from the Egyptians:

1. Circumcision. The Egyptians used it long first.
2. A hereditary priesthood.
3. The phrase "I am that I am."
4. Linen dress for the priests.
5. The carrying of the sacred ark on poles.
6. Tabernacles and temples to worship in.
7. Inner temples, or holy of holies.
8. Cherubim with extended wings.
9. The Urim and Thummim, symbolical of priestly jewels.
10. Branched candlesticks in places of worship.
11. Animal sacrifice to appease God.
12. The use of the scapegoat.
13. Theocracy or priestly rule.
14. Prayer and humiliation before God.
15. The monotheistic theory.
16. Belief in prophecy.
17. Rites of purification.
18. Necessity of a holy life and moral conduct.
19. Kings subservient to priests and prophets.
20. The use of musical instruments in worship.

What Christianity may have borrowed from the Egyptians:

1. Belief in a son of God being a Savior.
2. Belief in the Virgin and Child.
3. The idea that a God can suffer death.
4. The doctrine of the atonement.
5. The doctrine of the trinity.
6. The government of a personal deity.
7. The necessity of a mediator to insure divine clemency.
8. The belief that one member of the trinity must suffer to appease the anger of another member.
9. The idea of demigods, half god, half man.
10. The cross as a religious symbol.
11. Belief in a future life.
12. Belief in the judgment of the dead after death.
13. God and the devil antagonistic.
14. Belief in angels and demons.
15. Belief in a local heaven and hell.
16. Belief in the resurrection of the body.
17. Observance of the Christmas festival.

(Continued on page 520.)

Communications.

"Chatter."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: An old proverb says, "Politics is a dirty mud puddle, and he who dabble in it will get his garments soiled." Still, a citizen cannot divest himself of the responsibility that attaches to the right of choosing those who shall make and administer the laws. And if he be a man who cares whether truth and justice or falsehood and tyranny rule, he cannot but be interested in so vital a matter as the choice of a chief magistrate of the nation.

Now that another political crisis is upon us, every philanthropist feels that he ought to do something, but what to do? "Aye, there's the rub." Brothers Bennett, Wakeman, Ingersoll, Green, Truesdell, Walker, Leland, et al., hav spoken, each, no doubt, intent on pointing out the best thing to do under the circumstances, more specifically what a Liberal had better do with his vote in the coming struggle.

Having retired disgusted from the political arena, I had thought to pass quietly through the troublous times ahead without getting my feathers ruffled. But like an old war horse at the first toot of the bugle, I find myself prancing to the front. What is that note of alarm? It is the proposition to turn the Liberals over, soul and body, to the Democracy.

With all due deference to the opinions of such able, clear-headed, and good men as yourself, Wakeman, and Leland, I must dissent from your views, and desire you to consider what that step implies. You say: "The Republican party has trampled upon the liberties guaranteed to us in the Constitution. Let us join the Democratic party in restoring to us those sacred treasures." Mr. Wakeman says: "After the Congress another convention of the National Liberal party should be held, . . and a resolution passed to support Hancock and English. . . From their [the Democrats'] platform and history we may expect that they hav returned to the traditions of Jefferson and real Democratic Republicanism." And even Mr. Leland says, "Just giv them the chance of one Congress to do something."

Now, suppose that all you say of the Republican party is true, and I confess that your scathing arraignment is a just one; how are you going to better it by voting the Democratic ticket, and putting the Democracy in power?

We profess a love of justice, truth, liberty, and humanity. If we wish to see these principles carried out we should ally ourselvs (if at all) with those who practice them. Is the Democratic party such a one? Let us see.

The Democracy adopted, defended, extended, and tried to perpetuate that "sum of all villainies," human slavery, and when they failed in having the "divine institution protected wherever the flag of the Union floats," they, with fiendish malignity, tried to destroy the life of the nation itself. Every man that took advantage of his position as "master" to debauch innocence was a Democrat. Every man that sold his own flesh and blood was a Democrat. Every man that stole the labor of another in order to liv in idleness was a Democrat. Every man that trained a blood-hound to track fugitivs from a living death was a Democrat. Every man that fired on the old flag because it would not be responsible for his iniquity was a Democrat. Every man that shot the defenders of that flag was a Democrat. Every man that starved Union soldiers to death was a Democrat. The man that peddled smallpox and yellow fever was a Democrat. The man that shot the best president that ever lived was a Democrat. Every man that inwardly rejoiced at that assassination was a Democrat. Every man that murdered citizens of the United States for voting the Republican ticket was a Democrat. Every man—but why continue the catalog? No crime has been so dark, deep, and damning that it could not find a special champion in the Democracy. "Oh, that was our misguided Southern brethren," says one. Ah, was it? Were Northern Democrats any better? It would require > "A demijohn of gall.

> A cane reed split with a broadax,
> A sheet of paper large as Congress Hall,
> And vigorous nerves as tough as cobbler's wax"

to enumerate their sins. I will just sum them up as follows: They possessed all the mean qualities of the Southern rebels, without any of their redeeming traits.

How about the Union Democrats? Well, all general rules must hav exceptions, and I suppose they were the exception. But the Democracy as a party never had but one principle, and that appears to be "persistent." Here it is, Office for the sake of the spoils. It was never known to hold, advocate, practice, or defend any of the principles we hold so dear.

Yet, Bro. Leland says, "Let us just giv them a chance to do something." Suppose we did, what would they be likely to do? Do men gather figs from thistles? Will an old dog learn new tricks? Can the Democratic tortoise cast its shell? Who is so childlike and bland as to believe it?

But Mr. Wakeman says, "We may expect that they hav returned to the traditions of Jefferson." Indeed! It seems to me that no expectation could be more unfounded. The Republican party has undoubtedly forfeited our respect and esteem, and we may hav nothing but a feeling of contempt for King Log, but is it the part of wisdom to precipitate ourselvs into the gullet of King Stork?

As to the candidates, there is not much to choose between them. Garfield represents Comstock, and Hancock the "lost cause."

Oh yes, "that plank" in the Democratic platform, put in to catch Liberal gudgeons. Who ever heard of a promis (especially a Democratic one) made before election redeemed after? If any gentleman knows of just one little promis let him step to the front. Fame awaits him.

I now expect to see some Liberal brother rise in his place and explain to me that "the bloody shirt issue is dead." Very well; let that obliging friend bring with him a genuin "repentant rebel," and I stand corrected. Principles never die, and if we hav any they are worth voting for.

Let us not vote with people who do not represent us or our principles, but nominate a man of our own and vote like men.

Now, when "Tee Cee Lee" comes to use his scalpel on me I trust he will recollect that I but acted on his advice—"Now let the chatter go on." Harry Hoover.

Zanesville, O., July 26, 1880.

REMARKS BY T. C. L.

Since our stalwart Harry invokes my "scalpel," let me bare the weak places, and let him submit bravely and without chloroform to the operation. I will be as tender and good natured as possible.

I did say, "Let the chatter go on," but I little thought I should catch him, a veteran Freethinker, in my chatter-box. "Having retired disgusted from the political arena," he seems to hav lost the run of the political cards. "Retired," and especially "disgusted," politicians are hardly up to all the issues that are vital to-day. The old war horse who volunteered out of the pasture, Harry will remember, was not admitted into the new cavalry, marching under modern orders and improved tactics. His intentions were good, his suggestions were humored, his heroic past was venerated, but, in the tenderest manner possible, he was led back to the pasture all the same.

Harry's "note of alarm" is just such a toot as a superannuated cavalry steed would be very likely to imagin he could hear. "It is the proposition to turn the Liberals over, soul and body, to the Democracy!" No wonder he cleared the fence and said, "Neigh" to a proposition like that! But there must hav been criss-cross echoes, and undulations of extra reverberatory power in that pasture, confusing to the ear of our veteran steed. What the bugle really tooted was, Turn the great body of activ, working, conscience Liberals over to the project of using the Democracy for the one election which takes place in this one year of grace, 1880, to drive the Republicans out of power. The "soul," dear Harry, goes marching on.

There is a celebrated metrical affirmation,

> "He who fights and runs away
> May liv to fight another day."

That sentiment has always been quoted as a sarcasm, but really there is right-down policy and profound science in it. Suppose the Liberals had half a million ballots to cast! Why isn't it practicable and possible for them in their compacted, organized, Leagued capacity to march up to the polls alongside of another independent organized body and fire their ballots (bullets, spelled with an a) into the ranks of the common enemy; and, having done so, retire from the field, open new negotiations with both ally and enemy, and prepare to fight either or both together "another day." What's to "hender?" Do please tell us, Harry. This is very far from "turning the Liberals over, soul and body, to the Democracy." Is there really nothing new in the applied science of politics? Does the ring machine know it all? Is there no true art of political engineering, no scientific long-headed calculation and adaptation of political ends, no new tactics, no improved diplomacy? If there really is nothing but goat-headed butting of your own individual sconce into your own old played-out party, with nothing but the musty remains of an ancient record, discounted and drawn to the last pennyworth long ago, to go upon, with the sole and only hope of "reforming it from the inside," there is small outlook for any Freethinker in the United States. One might as well say "die," and make his peace with Joe Cook and Comstock at once.

But Harry, after confessing that our "scathing arraignment of the Republican party is a just one," asks, "How are you going to better it by voting the Democratic ticket?" Well, for one thing, we better it by turning the blarsted Republicans out of power as coming under the condemnation of those culpables—"Ye knew your duty, but ye did it not." Retribution for an evil work is among the eternal veracities, and when it follows immediately, catching the flagrants in the very act, it affords a glowing satisfaction to the victor.

Then next, if we put the Democracy in power, we are "going to better it" by demanding that they carry out their platform to our satisfaction. If they do not do it, then, at the very next election, we will come that same retribution on them, and enjoy another time of feeling good over the discomfiture of ingrates in whom we had confided. And so we will keep doing till all parties find out that no party can stay in the administration of the government till they comply with the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States made and provided for the total separation of church and state.

Now I could add several dark shadings of black to the dark picture Harry draws of what "every man" did and "was a Democrat" twenty years ago, and then I would hav the right to draw, as I did last week, a comparison picture of what "every man" is doing now, to-day, not twenty years ago, and is a Republican. Shall we allow every man who is a Republican to keep his foot on our necks, and will you, a Freethinker and a Liberal, vote to help him do it, this year when we hav a chance to overthrow him, and liberate ourselvs—shall we allow this to-day just because every man was a bloody Democrat twenty years ago? O Harry! Harry! your logic must hav lost a leg in the war twenty years ago. It limps distressedly. Besides, of those Democrats twenty years ago some millions are dead, and other millions younger, more progressiv, not so bloody Democrats, are born into the party instead. Time works wonders, and every year settles the hash of many of the remaining Bourbon, slavery-defending Democrats.

Curiously enough, just what Harry says of the Democracy is precisely true of the church before the war—the church which now makes up the main body of the Republican party. The church "adopted, defended, extended, and tried to perpetuate that 'sum of all villainies,' human slavery, and when they failed in having the divine institution protected wherever the flag floats, they, with fiendish malignity" captured the Republican party and "tried to destroy" the free intellectual "life of the nation itself." And Harry is a willing captiv and will vote for a continuance of the captivity! It is the mere politician's, spoilsman's "note of alarm" that the old war horse hears, and, dear old veteran in the cavalry of every reform as he long has been, yet now pricking up his ears at the wheezes of a trumpet so brazen as that, he mistakes it for a bugle call to arms in the battle of freedom. Verily, verily, "Old Hoss!" I fear you will hav to go to grass for the rest of this campaign.

A "Scratcher" on Politics.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Since the Credit Mobilier, salary grab, and whiskey ring scandals, and the Force bill, the beautiful workings of which I had occasion to observe in Southern states, drove me from the Republican party, I hav generally acted with a party that has no headquarters, no literary bureaus, no congressional committee, no torchlight processions nor stump speakers; calls no conventions, nominates no candidates, enacts no "voluntary" contributions, does no pipe-laying, wire-pulling, nor ballot-box-stuffing, but is nevertheless out in full force on election day, and brings every mother's son of them to the polls—I mean the Independent Scratchers. The managers of both political parties know us quite well, and hate to see us moving up to the polls with that dreadful little stub of a pencil in our hands, which, with one fell stroke, makes

> "The best laid plans of mice and men > Gang aft aglee"—

lays over caucuses, and smashes political slates.

It is as an Independent, then, that I hav examined the four tickets now in the field, and as an Independent speak. Further than that, I am interested in good government, and never confound independence with neutrality. I care not a rush for either of these parties, as my private interests are not influenced by the success or defeat of any one of them. I am not a politician, do not run for office, nor, as far as I know, hav I any particular friends running for any.

To vote for Neal Dow and the Prohibitionists is clearly out of the question for one who believes in personal liberty and is opposed to coercion. The cause of true temperance is dear to every Liberal, but prohibition is not temperance, and the records nowhere show that it has aided or promoted true temperance in any way. On the contrary, it has turned men into hypocrits by assuming a Pharisaical and tyrannical control over men's tastes and appetites, which never yet hav been, nor ever can be, controled by legal enactments. As for myself, I believe in and practice moderation in everything, but I deny the right of any one to defend me from drinking a glass of wine, beer, or whisky where I please and when I please. Sumptuary laws are a relic of the dark and barbarous past.

To vote for James B. Weaver and the Greenback party is equally impossible for one who does not believe in a corncob currency interconvertible with cornstalks; or, to drop metaphor, does not approve of financial vagaries and follies that hav been exploded a hundred times, as often reappeared, and been cried up as something new under the sun by their holders. The "fiat," or irredeemable paper money, as Thomas Benton has well said, "is the greatest curse to the laboring man." Wherever the "fiat" scheme has been fairly tried it has ended by entailing ruin and disaster upon the people. I need only recall the French assignats, the Continental paper currency, the Austrian and Russian paper money issues, and still more ancient attempts to raise one's self over the fence by means of one's own suspenders or bootstraps.

The American people hav too much good, solid, common sense to re-open the financial question, which has been settled in half a dozen square fights, much to the disgust of the Democratic party, which in some states forsook its old and tried convictions on the subject of finance, entangled itself with these financial crotchets, and got soundly trounced for its pains. Take those three Greenback leaders, De La Matyr, Gillette, and Weaver, who secured seats, but, alas! very little recognition in this Congress. How did they do so? They managed to squeeze in, not because the people in their respectiv districts were so much in love with their financial theories, but because they were tired of Republican rule and because the Democrats, despairing of electing a candidate of their own, to borrow a Kearneyism, "pooled their issues" with these men and gave them their support at the polls. De La Matyr cannot be re-elected, for the Indianapolis Democrats hav put up a candidate of their own, Hon. Cass Byfield, and will no longer play tail to this blatant Methodist parson's kite. Gillette will not be re-elected in the Des Moines (Iowa) district, but make room for Hon. John M. Kasson; and no Greenbacker will succeed Weaver in his district, because the Democrats will not be made a cat's-paw again to rake political chestnuts out of the fire for that rabid "blue light" and bigot. These three meteors of the "fiat" constellation will be extinguished this fall, with nothing but the smell of tallow dips remaining. 'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished! I do not say, remember, that the masses who vote the Greenback ticket are not sincere in their convictions, nor honest in their purposes, nor deficient in any of those qualities which go to make good and patriotic citizens. But what then? So are the masses who vote the Republican or Democratic ticket. But to speak of the Greenback leaders as pre-eminently virtuous, patriotic, and honest, made of different material, as it were, from that of the leaders of the two great political parties, makes me smile. Who are the generality of these lofty paragons? Former Democratic and Republican politicians, wire-pullers, party-hacks, office-seekers, whose greed for fat berths could not be allayed within their respectiv parties, and who hoped, on the wave of demagogism, alias the Ohio idea, alias Greenbackery, which swept over this country a few years ago, to ride into power. A few good crops, the triumph of resumption, and the balance of trade in our favor has silenced the cry for more money, has left this gentry hopelessly tangled in their logic and stranded on the banks of the political Styx, where the undertow will reach out for and claim them as its own in November.

There remain, then, the two larger parties, one of which is absolutely certain to administer the affairs of this country for the next four years, to decide between. Having read both platforms, and examined the records of the four candidates, together with their several letters of acceptance, I unhesitatingly declare—and shall work and vote—for Hancock and English. I do this as a Liberal and an Independent, and for the following reasons:

1. I believe in discussing live, not dead, issues. If the Republican party at its birth and during its early career, when it was led by such men as Lincoln, Chase, Sumner, Trumbull, Stallo, and others, was the party of Liberty and great moral ideas, and enlisted the sympathies, the heart and brain, of every intelligent, liberty-loving citizen, it was not such when it robbed the wards of the nation by means of the Freedmen's Bureau, when it inaugurated a system of "Christian statesmanship" which inundated this country with the whisky ring, the District of Columbia ring, the New York Custom House ring, the post-tradership ring, the Credit Mobilier and salary grab, the safe burglary, and kindred abominations. It was not such when it instituted carpet-bag rule, pocketed foreign insults to our flag on the high seas, drove American vessels from the ocean, impoverished the horny-handed farmers of the West for the benefit of a few human sharks, by means of a protectiv tariff, and the wholesale squandering of the public domain to bloated, grinding monopolies; when it stole the presidency in 1876, depriving a majority of over a quarter of a million of voters of their rights, and last but not least, when it imprisoned and fined an editor for sending a foolish but harmless pamphlet through the mail; and when it is now, as it has been since 1860, controled by the Young Men's Christian Association and the Protestant hierarchy, which dictates its enactments and attempts to mutilate the Constitution by forcing its Jew God upon it.

If the Democratic party went out of power with the stench and rottenness of corruption clinging to its garments; if that party held twenty years ago tenets that were repulsiv to every liberty-loving, right-thinking man, it is equally true that in its earlier days it was pure, grand, and patriotic. It should not be forgotten that it it was that extended our territory, filled the oceans with vessels bearing the Stars and Stripes, and that "brooked the eternal devil" before it allowed an American citizen, or even one who, like Kossuth, desired to become one, to be molested.

The two parties, so far as their past history is concerned, are, then, on the same plane. The question is not what one was twenty years ago, and the other at a still more remote time, but what are the positions taken by the two parties on the living issues of to-day?

2. In examining the relativ positions of the two political parties, let me say right here that according to the most reliable information I could obtain, the war of the Rebellion closed fifteen years ago. Incredible as it may appear, this fact does not seem to be generally known, even among some Liberals, or they would be ashamed to prate about and harp on fifteen or twenty years ago, what was then said, held, done, and believed in. Since that time a new generation has sprung up, and the boys of 1860 are the voters of this year. They may even listen with glowing hearts to the tales of valor performed by older brothers and their fathers, and thank them for their deeds of patriotism in crushing out the hydra of rebellion, but they cannot feel the spirit of enmity and contention that actuated and nerved the latter to the conflict, and which spirit, indeed, died out, with the fighting portion of the loyal to the Union at least, after Lee's surrender. The times of the Capulets and Montechis and the Sicilian vendetta are past and not adapted to our clime; the "bloody shirt" is definitly played out as a factor in politics. The man who waves it now is not a patriotic American citizen, and ought to be marked. The non-combatants, stay-at-homes, and chanoins of both sections must become reconciled, or we will tie them in a bundle, with the editors of the Okolona (Miss.) States and the Lemars (Iowa) Sentinel, and dump them in the Bosporus. The young men of the North hav no enmity against the young men of the South. No, we feel that we are brothers, sons of a common united country, with one flag over us all, and the future is ours.

I oppose the Republican party because it has become the servil tool of monopolies; because it has crippled our shipbuilding, made our navy the laughing-stock of maritim nations, being inferior to that of even third class powers; because it affords no protection to national citizens abroad or on the high seas; because it has made civil service reform a farce; because it enriches a few Eastern manufacturers at the expense and to the detriment of the agricultural classes of the West; because it tends to centralization and imperialism, disguised under the thin varnish of a "strong government" and the ad captandum vulgus shibboleth of a Nation with a capital N; because every former Know Nothing belongs to it; because it is controled by the Protestant church; because it is opposed to liberty of conscience, speech, and press, as exemplified in the unjust imprisonment of an Infidel editor; because it stole the presidency in 1876, making a "fraud first triumphant in American history;" because it is sectional, arrogant, and utterly corrupt.

I shall support the Democratic party for the nonce, because it can do no worse, and I am in hopes will do better. I want a change. The Democratic party, having been out of power for so long, has no pet monopolies to provide for; from its former history we are entitled to hope that it will send our vessels again to every part of the globe, and that it will not with impunity let a Spanish butcher, Buriel, massacre American citizens without demanding and obtaining bloody satisfaction; that it will release American citizens, lying in foreign dungeons, at the mouth of the cannon, with the Stars and Stripes nailed to the masthead, as in Decatur's time, instead of having a Hamilton Fish begging them free for the grace of God. I support the Democratic party because it cannot establish a worse civil service than now obtains, but, on the contrary, has already retrenched the expenses of government, because it is unequivocally pledged to free trade, because while a portion of its adherents are Catholics it is not true that the party is controled (owned body and soul like the Republican party is by Methodism, the Y. M. C. A., and God-in-the-Constitution bigots) by the Roman church, or such men as George W. Julian, Judge J. B. Stallo, Judge George Hoadley, and hundreds of others, Freethinkers all of them, would not be found countenancing or giving it their cordial support; because its platform is as sound on the financial and educational question as the Republican, and manlier, bolder, and more pronounced on the subject of separation of church and state; because it has opposed Know Nothingism, favored personal liberty, and been a true friend to the emigrant seeking an asylum on our hospitable shore; because it opposes centralization and imperialism; because it suffered a great wrong rather than plunge the country into civil war; because it is opposed to bringing honest white labor in competition with Mongolian helotism; because its young and progressiv men hav come forward, and the Bourbons and Mossbacks hav been crowded to the rear; because under their lead it has accepted the issues settled by the war of the Rebellion; because it is not sectional.

That is the difference between the two parties, as I see it, and thus must I piece it out. On the one side a party with a splendid record, utterly rotten and corrupt; on the other a party with an equally brilliant record, but obscured and stained with blotches, yet returning penitent after twenty years of exile and two decades of sackcloth and ashes. For my part, I would rather trust the man whom I knew twenty years ago to hav served a term in the penitentiary for a criminal offense than the thief whose hand is in my till at this moment. I feel less bitter against the man who did me an injury many years ago than I do against the villain that has me by the throat now, and more than the former am I inclined to kick the latter under the belt.

3. The candidates are the embodiments of the principles of the two parties. I oppose Garfield because, though he was a brave soldier during the war of the Rebellion, he left his command to electioneer for a political office; because he accepted a $5,000 bribe as Chairman of the Appropriation Committee, as I consider it, or a $5,000 fee as a lawyer before a committee of which he was a member and which had to pass on the merits of a scheme, in favor of which he appeared before himself as a lawyer and prepared a brief that was never read, nowhere filed, seen by nobody, as his friends will put it; because he was mixed up in the Credit Mobilier business and voted for the salary grab; because he helped steal the presidency for Hayes; because his course was ever a vacillating one; because I believe him treacherous to his friends, as shown in his nominating speech of Sherman, which, according to Ingersoll (if I mistake not), consisted of "two words for Garfield to one for Sherman;" because all the pious cusses hailed his nomination with hosannas and are for him; because I am tired of continuing the Ohio regency and the psalm-singing and tract-snuffling at the White House.

I am for Hancock because he was a gallant soldier; because he placed the civil law above the military; because his life and record are spotless and no taint attaches thereto; because he holds public office to be a trust, not a bounty; is not the man to be controled by politicians, or to let them parcel out the spoils, as Garfield, in his letter of acceptance, hints, to appease Messrs. Logan, Cameron, Conkling & Co.; because he is not a church member; because there is no danger of his allowing the fruits of the war to be jeopardized or impaired; and because it is perfectly safe to intrust the government to him who has done so much to preserve it.

I oppose Arthur, because he is a ring politician, and used a great office as an engine of oppression and for corrupt political purposes, so that even the present hypocritical, canting, fraudulent administration felt constrained to remove him. And I support William H. English because he has always been loyal to the Union; because he has fought Know Nothingism to the bitter end; because he is of the people, truly a self-made man, and a square man.

These, then, are my reasons for supporting Hancock and English and favoring a temporary return of the Democratic party to power. I should be pleased to hav the majority of our Liberals think well of them. If the Liberals vote in a body for Hancock, and thus make his election sure, they will be in position to demand that the Democratic promises in regard to questions which we deem essential and which are dear to us be carried out. If that party refuses to do so, there rests upon us no moral obligation to continue our support. At the very next election we can vote the Republican ticket again and dispossess those whom our votes had elevated, but who proved recreant to the trust confided to them. I, for one, shall be as willing and pledge myself to plead as earnestly for a return of the Republicans to power then as I now plead for a change. Let us hav a change!

CHARLES J. HERBOLD.

Cincinnati, Ohio, July 3, 1880.

Those Posters.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: My friend H. L. Green informs me that he has had printed a large poster 33 by 48 inches, in red and blue ink, giving notice of the Convention to be held at Hornellsville, and the names of speakers, railroad rates, etc., which he designs for use throughout the country. I write to urge our Liberal friends to sustain him and the cause by ordering a few copies to hav posted in conspicuous places. These are just the thing to giv notice of the Hornellsville meeting. If brother Green gets them up, let us post them up.

W. S. BELL.

LIBERALS who propose attending the Freethinkers' Convention will be pleased to learn that T. B. Wakeman has promised to be present at Hornellsville and deliver a "lay sermon" on "The Church of the World."

Political.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been amused and interested, but not much instructed, by the remarks of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the letters of correspondents, on the political question. Now I would like to bet $2.50 that no man fully understands the situation or knows just what party would serve the country best in its present condition. My individual preference is for Weaver, because he represents principles which I consider more national in character than those for which either of the other candidates stands. In fact, about the only difference noticeable in the Democratic and Republican platforms is that the former speaks of the traditions of its party and reiterates the cry of fraud, while the latter stands by its party record in its entirety. Now I happen to know of the Democratic party that its chief "tradition" is that a black man has no rights which a white man is bound to respect, and that ought to be enough for a man who is trying to stand by the Golden Rule of Confucius and Jesus to know of a party to insure his opposition.

As for the Republican party, the way it sat down on Horace Greeley and Charles Sumner, and indeed on every one who was not a bitter partisan, and its long line of iniquities since 1872, hav satisfied me of its utter unfitness longer to control the affairs of this nation. With these feelings, of course, I am in a condition of political orphanage as regards the two old parties, and must vote with the new. True, as you hav said, we are going to be left, and may not get an electoral vote, and this I should consider a good reason for voting with the party which the judgment of each individual tells him will be most likely to giv the country a fair and able administration.

I consider the point made by D. R. Sparks, in a late number of your paper, that while you may be able to sell out the Liberals to the Democracy, you never can deliver them, to be well taken.

The Democratic party, as I understand its position, has no great rallying cry except "opposition to centralization," and while that sounds well, and might mean great good to all the people, yet, in the light of the history of that party, I hav no doubt the real animus of the pretense is a chronic desire to oust the black race and all white men who favor giving them equal rights before the law and seeing that those rights are maintained. The nation ought to do this, and rather than ignore the obligation, I should favor spelling nation with a big N, and bouncing the entire South with a big B.

If a foreign power fires on an American vessel, though only for the purpose of insulting the flag, we are all in arms at once without distinction of sex, color, or previous condition of servitude; but if a "d——d nigger" is killed for trying to vote for the party that raised him from a chattel to the plane of manhood, that is a very small affair in the estimation of many men who would like to be considered "statesmen."

Now it occurs to me that the constitutional guarantee of a Republican form of government, to every state in this Union, means that every man (and it should include every woman under the same general conditions) should vote just as he pleases; and at the risk of being thought extreme, I will say that rather than see the most ignorant negro in all the South with the longest heel and the lowest forehead deprived by force or intimidation of his constitutional right to vote any ticket he may choose, I would hav the entire land forces of the United States, and as much of the navy as the geography of the position would allow, hurled upon that precinct and kept there till that vote was put in and counted, and then the soldiers could come home and vote in peace—for Hancock, if they wished. We can't help being sensitiv when mistreated by outside powers, but it is a good deal more important that we be sensitiv and just among ourselvs.

Truly yours, R. P. LEWIS.

REPLY.—We wish to inform our heated friend that no Liberal that we know of, and certainly not the editor of this paper, ever thought, or proposed, or wanted to propose, to sell anybody's vote. As for the outrages upon the negroes over which our friend waxes so wrathy, we opine that the most of them are manufactured in the offices of New York daily newspapers, or by special correspondents sent down South for that purpose. What genuin ones there are, if there are any genuin ones, are fully offset by the disfranchisement and arrest of a thousand or more Irishmen in this city by Johnny Davenport, United States Marshal, who, by the bye, has, contrary to law, been furnished by United States officials with the census returns of this city to use for that purpose next November. Friend Lewis can vote just as he pleases. We giv him opportunity to express his opinions in these columns, and why should not the editor hav the same privilege? It would be just as fair to accuse him of trying to sell the Liberal vote to the Greenbackers as it is to accuse us of trying to sell it to the Democrats. Our vote is not for sale, and we hope Mr. Lewis's is not.—ED. T. S.

ONE thing is certain, where a man does not take even one Liberal paper he cannot be expected to be an efficient worker. He does not know what is going on in the world of advanced thought. The popular press will not tell him. If each man and woman in this land who does not accept the commonly received views concerning religion and the rights and duties of life would take and pay for just one Liberal paper, we should soon witness such a stampede from the churches, such a repudiation of the religion of unnaturalism, as would astonish even the most sanguin of us.

E. C WALKER.

SORE eyes often result from arsenical poison in the wall-paper of our houses.

(Continued from page 517.)

18. Observance of Candlemas Day.
19. Belief of Peter and the pope holding the "keys of heaven."
20. Holy pilgrimages.
21. Marriage as a sacrament and the wedding ring.
22. Shaving of the priests' heads.
23. Linen surplices worn by priests in religious services.
24. The doctrine of asceticism.
25. Superior knowledge of two worlds claimed by the priests.

It cannot be denied that Egypt contributed its share in making up the Christian system.

Parallelisms between Confucius and Jesus:

1. Both were claimed to be of royal descent.
2. Both were of poor parentage.
3. Both possessed a sincere love of the human race.
4. Both traveled about teaching morality.
5. Both had disciples and followers—Confucius the most.
6. Both enjoined their disciples to be loving and brotherly.
7. Both taught the Golden Rule.
8. Both were despised by the proud and haughty.
9. Both have been revered by admiring millions.
10. Both have a great influence in the world.

There are also a few points of difference between Confucius and Jesus, some of which may be named:

1. Confucius married; Jesus did not.
2. Confucius was a father; Jesus was not.
3. Confucius began to preach at twenty; Jesus at thirty.
4. Confucius taught fifty years; Jesus one or two.
5. Confucius gave twenty times as many lessons as Jesus.
6. Confucius was educated; Jesus was not.
7. Confucius taught about the things of this life and to regard them; Jesus to disregard.
8. Confucius had little to say about a future world; Jesus much.
9. Confucius aimed to make man happy here; Jesus hereafter.
10. Confucius pronounced no curses; Jesus did.
11. Confucius said little about gods; Jesus much of the Jewish God.
12. Confucius had little belief in devils; Jesus much.
13. Confucius consigned none to hell; Jesus did.
14. Confucius showed little revenge; Jesus much.
15. Confucius pronounced no damnation; Jesus did.
16. Confucius did not let his anger rise; Jesus did.
17. Confucius told people to love their parents; Jesus to hate them.
18. Confucius did not whip and scourge; Jesus did.
19. Confucius did not teach his disciples to steal; Jesus did.
20. Confucius did not make wine for drunken people; Jesus did.
21. Confucius did not pluck people's corn without permission; Jesus did.
22. Confucius wrote many of his wise sayings; Jesus did not.
23. Confucius was a practical man; Jesus was not.
24. Confucius did not claim to be a son of God; Jesus did.
25. Confucius made no pretense to miracles; Jesus did.
26. Confucius was no supernaturalist; Jesus was.
27. Confucius encouraged industry, agriculture, etc.; Jesus did not.
28. Confucius recommended marriage; Jesus did not.
29. Confucius did not incite persecution; Jesus did.
30. Confucius died a natural, honorable death; Jesus did not.
31. The religion of Confucius has had a peaceful effect; Jesus's not.
32. The followers of Confucius have not persecuted; those of Jesus have, and more bitterly than any other people in the world. Christian nations have shed more blood than all the other religionists on the globe. Paganism has been peaceful; Judaism and Christianity warlike and bloody. Paganism invented no Inquisitions, racks, pulleys, thumbscrews, and crushing iron boots; Christianity has, and used them extensively, relentlessly, and mercilessly.

I will not take the space now to trace the parallelisms between Christianity and the religions of Chaldea, Assyria, Phœnicia, Greece, Rome, Gaul, Scandinavia, and ancient Germany. Should I do so, many points of resemblance could be found; but it would doubtless seem like repetition to name them. One thing, at all events, is very clear—all the material that was needed to get up the Christian religion was already in the world. They had nothing to invent save its modes and apparatus for persecution; everything else was furnished to hand.

You may be able to see the great wrong in Brahmanism, Buddhism, Zoroastrinism, Egyptianism, Confucianism, and the other ancient isms in getting up so many "counterfeits" of Christianity, and—the meanest of all—five hundred and one thousand years before Christianity existed. I cannot see it in the same light, as the religious field was tolerably clear over the world three thousand years ago, and the followers of Jesus had not taken out a patent for his being God-begotten, virgin-born, wonder-working, humility-teaching, man-loving, and all the rest of it. I recognize that the ancients had a right to exercise their pleasure in their religious notions and to borrow from each other and to use their inventive powers as much as they pleased. But this painful reflection inevitably takes possession of my mind—what a pity it is, after these other systems of religion had been in successful operation for from five hundred years to fifteen hundred, and God and his Son took it into their heads to get up a new system of religion—one that would do far more than all the others for heaven, earth, and hell—that they should not have been able to devise some new kind, some untried notion, and not be compelled to follow in the footsteps of the despised pagans and gather up the old creedal garments cast away by them. If I must believe in the firm of God, Son & Co., I like to imagine that they have some originality and are not under the necessity of borrowing their ideas from their enemies. I like to entertain a higher opinion of them than that they were copying plagiarists, imitators, and literary and religious thieves. I'll confess to you, rather than think that of them, I come to the conclusion that they did not get up the Christian system; that a fraud has been played upon the world in this respect; that you and others are laboring under a great error, and that you need to have your eyes opened, that you may see things as they are and have been. Let us hope that such a thick, opaque film of superstition and pious veneration has not so spread over them that ultimately it cannot be removed. I will pray for that result, remembering that Theodore Parker said, "Effort is the only prayer that amounts to anything."

Please pardon me for my great length; but you will not be troubled with me again till I return from Europe, some two months from now. In the mean time you can use my columns in making such replies to what I have said as you see fit, and I can review you when I come back (if the waves don't submerge me).

I thank you for my good wishes in my behalf, and trust in my absence you may remain healthy, hopeful, and happy.

I am, very respectfully yours, D. M. B.

Off to Brussels.

On Wednesday, the 4th inst., Mr. Bennett sailed by the steamer Gallia of the Cunard line for Liverpool, thence to proceed to Brussels to attend the Convention to be held there the 29th, 30th, and 31st of this month. He was accompanied by Prof. Rawson, who is also an accredited delegate to the Convention.

Wednesday afternoon was a little rainy, and the chance for social intercourse and inspection of the steamer was limited. But we had an opportunity to observe, as we stood under a dripping awning, that a large proportion of Mr. Bennett's fellow-voyagers were clergymen. Long nosed, clean shaven, high-cravated, black-coated gentry were thick as bees, and buzzed as incessantly. They did not laugh, and certainly could not be termed jolly, but they had a sort of subdued, sepulchral joy about them to think that they were to get away for a while from the arduous labors of pitching sinners into hell or pulling them out as occasion and the state of their (the sinners') belief warranted. Probably if the ministers had known that their notorious Infidel enemy was among them, their feelings would hav been different. They would hav regarded him as a Jonah whom it would be desirable to get rid of. Perhaps they would hav said the down-pouring rain was the result of his presence. He could retort, however, that perhaps they were the Jonahs.

The Gallia is one of the finest steamers that ply between this port and England, and the officers of the Cunard line are justly proud of the fact that no vessel of their line was ever lost. Unless they commence by losing the Gallia, we feel very certain that by the time this paper reaches its friends Mr Bennett will be safely landed in England. He was accompanied to the pier by many friends, but owing to the heavy rain, superinduced by the presence of so many ministers, or some other to be-wept-for cause, we were obliged to leave before the ship sailed. As Mr. Bennett disappeared under cover, he was followed by many hearty good wishes for his safe voyage, pleasant time, and speedy return, refreshed, invigorated, and ready for another campaign with the enemies of mental freedom.

We could not help contrasting this setting out on a trip which will undoubtedly be pleasurable with the departure last year for quite a different place and where the experience could hardly be called pleasant. A little over a year ago we accompanied him to the depot to take a train for the Albany Penitentiary. Then everybody was gloomy, but on this last occasion there was considerable jollity. There were no United States marshals along, as on the former occasion, and Anthony Comstock was for the time forgotten. Then he went alone to a cruel prison, now he goes with friends to meet friends. Taking it altogether, there was considerable difference between the two occasions, and in returning home to again take charge of THE TRUTH SEEKER for a short time we did it with a far lighter heart.

Three Questions.

MIDDLE FORK, IND., July 26, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Will you please inform me through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER who the senator was who introduced the measure in reference to an amendment putting God in the Constitution of the United States?

Also please inform me what senators voted yes and no on the above amendment. I want to know so that I can be positiv that no one ever gets my vote for any office who ever voted for so infamous a proposition.

Also let me know who were instrumental in getting that Comstock law through Congress and Senate.

By answering you will very much oblige,

M. H. GARD.

REPLY.—Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, talked of as a possible Republican candidate for the Presidency this summer, was the introducer of the God-in-the-Constitution amendment. The ones who voted for it were the twenty-eight Republican Senators, as follows: Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin; Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrell, Morton, Oglesby, Padduck, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, Wadleigh, West. Sixteen Democratic Senators voted no, as follows: Bagy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Kelley, Kiernan, Key, McCrary, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Randolph, Stevenson. Twenty-seven Senators were absent, or paired. The vote was taken August 14, 1876. Senator Windom, also a somewhat prominent Republican candidate for the Presidency at the Chicago Convention, introduced and championed the Comstock law. Parson Newman helped lobby it through. It will be noticed that both these measures were solidly supported by Republicans and opposed by Democrats. Liberals, it seems to us, can hav but one choice between the two parties.—ED. T. S.

IT being promised in our report of the last Fourth-of-July celebration at Philadelphia, when, on the part of a citizens' committee—embracing national Liberals, Free Religionists, and Socialists—a telegram was sent to the committee having charge of the Brussels Congress, greeting the men of Free-thought and genuin morality, and promising that an address should follow, we now publish the latter. The author wishes us to state that he is not as familiar with the English as with the German tongue, but that nevertheless the duty of writing the address was imposed upon him. An article by the same author which should hav preceded the present as an introduction, had, from unexpected hindrances, to lay over till our next issue.

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League.

To the Auxiliaries and Members of the National Liberal League, GREETING:

The fourth annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held at a hall to be hereafter designated in the city of Chicago, Ill., on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next. All charter and life members of the National Liberal League, the President and Secretary of each local auxiliary, and three delegates from the same are entitled to seats and votes in the Congress, and all annual members of the National League are entitled to seats, but not to votes. As a President of the United States is to be elected this year, it is important that every one of the now two hundred auxiliaries shall be represented, and that a republic, every citizen of which professes that the state should be independent of the church, and the church of the state, shall no longer stultify itself by subsidizing ecclesiastical corporations in exempting their property from taxation, supporting religious instruction in schools, robbing the people of their time by Sunday laws, paying salaries for religious services, and exacting religious oaths as security for truth and fidelity to civil obligations If the National League has any voice, now is the time to hav it heard. The Constitution under which we liv consecrates the rights of speech and opinion and has no punishing power except for accurately-defined and proven crime; and the depositories of this punishing power, national and state, hav their well defined provinces and limits as servants of the people and protectors against all personal violence and fanatical persecution. The great question of the day is whether these bulwarks of individual liberty shall be swept away by the greed of power truckling to bigotry and superstition, or the voice and votes of a free and enlightened people shall teach political partisans that the whole is always greater than any part in the administration of our republic. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Pres.

Boston, Mass, Aug. 9, 1880.

An Unnecessary Letter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: On recovering from a severe illness I learn that the impression has obtained that the report of Messrs. Wakeman and Leland, containing a denial and a retraction by D. M. Bennett of certain accusations against me, implies an acknowledgment by me of wrong I hav done him by word or deed, and approval of the condemnation of Mr. Savage, myself, and others who are censured in that report.

I wish to say only that the impression above referred to has no foundation in fact, as I hav never made any such acknowledgment, or given such approval.

Thorndike, Mass., Aug. 7, 1880. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Those Postal Laws.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your last issue there appeared a letter from our friend W. S. Bush, Esq., of Washington, the object of which is to induce Liberals to vote for Gen. Garfield. He puts forth the most remarkable reasons for this course that I hav seen yet. They are, in short:

1. The Comstock postal laws are constitutional.
2. They are not so very bad, after all.
3. The Democrats will not repeal them.
4. The Democrats are retrograde Bourbons of the most villainous, vicious, poisonous, etc., etc., type possible.

Now, before we go for Garfield on these grounds let us think them over.

1. Mr. Bush tries to make out the constitutionality of the Comstock postal laws in this way: Congress has power to prohibit the importation of obscene articles, prints, and publications, and this power has been exercised by all parties since 1842 without objection. Therefore Congress must hav the power to prohibit the transportation of such prohibited matter, and consequently any matter it chooses, through the mails. This is the point of his argument, or it has no point at all.

The answer to it is very ready to most readers of The Truth Seeker I hav no doubt, viz., there is no similarity in the cases. The power of Congress over commerce and importations is absolute, and may be used for governmental or any indirect purpose it may deem proper. The words of the Constitution, Section 8, are, "Congress shall hav power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." This grant follows, and is an adjunct of the taxing and borrowing power. The first Congress after the adoption of the Constitution began to regulate commerce for purposes of revenue, retaliation, reciprocity, aiding of home manufactures, etc. Legislation of this sort has been continued ever since from year to year. Under this clause Congress can keep whisky and firearms out of the Indian tribes, and any matter it deems objectionable out of the country—unless it is smuggled.

Nor does this abridge the freedom of the press, for even printed matter, if prohibited, did not originate in this country nor from our press or people.

Now if we turn to the grant and history of the postal power we find a very different state of things. In the old Articles of the Confederation Congress was invested with the sole and exclusiv power of "establishing and regulating post-offices from one state to another throughout all the United States, and exacting such postage on the papers passing through the same as may be requisit to defray the expenses of the said office."

In our Constitution the above wording was changed to the simple grant "to establish post-offices and post-roads."

It will be noticed at once that the words "and regulate" are omitted in this grant, and that they are the very words which giv Congress the power to do what it pleases with commerce. The omission of these words is significant, for it took away the power to use the post-offices for governmental or any ulterior purposes. It limited Congress to the duty of providing post-offices and post-roads for the people, to use as a "conveniency," as the Federalist says it. The omitted words were, of course, necessary under the confederacy, which was a treaty between the states, and put the post-offices on a commercial basis—in so far that they had to be administered between independent states. This power of regulation created fear and jealousy which, with the disordered state of the country, prevented any great growth of postal facilities until our Constitution was adopted.

Thus the attempt to use the post-office as a governmental instrument, if ever entertained, was abandoned. Mr. Bush can find no instance of such use until the beginning of these postal laws in 1865, after our civil war, and, as I pointed out in my Faneuil Hall speech, in consequence of it. But even this initiativ in 1865 amounted to nothing until Mr. Comstock took up the matter in 1872 and with subsequent legislation reversed the policy of the republic for one hundred years. That policy was to limit postal legislation to postal purposes only, and that the power to establish post-offices did not giv the power to regulate them for ulterior purposes, or to discriminate as to the sentiments or purposes of the printed or written matter transmitted.

If the words "and regulate" had been retained in our Constitution, the case might hav been different. Mr. Calhoun in 1836 might then hav found some ground in the Constitution for the attempt to prevent the mailing of "incendiary" matter. As it was, he could find none, and Mr. Webster and the Senate agreed with him. Nobody had then discovered that because Congress could regulate what printed matter should be imported it could therefore regulate the sentiments and purposes of the matter in our mails by taxing or excluding it or by punishing the sender under terrible penal laws.

The usurpation of this power is one of the steps that must be retraced unless the Republic is to end in Empire.

If Mr. Bush's view is sound, Congress has a great moral duty to perform. It ought at once to establish a postal tariff of literary and moral values, according to which printed matter should be rated for mailing purposes. Perhaps this will be done when Garfield is elected. We may then expect the Christian Statesman, which advocates God in the Constitution, to be mailed free; while the wicked Truth Seeker, which advocates liberty for all, may be happy if its postage is less than $1 00 a pound. Certainly, if we remove all taxes from Christian churches, why shouldn't we from Christian literature?

But, lastly, Congress not only has no power under the Constitution to discriminate as to the sentiments and purposes of printed or written mailed matter, but in so doing it directly violates the Constitution, which restrains it from passing any law "abridging the freedom of the press."

The regulation of importations has nothing to do with the freedom of our press, as was pointed out above; but a postal tariff or prohibition abridges that freedom and practically ends it. Postal facilities, as the Supreme Court holds, are a necessary part of publication, without which there can practically be no press. For the abuses of publication the press is responsible before the grand and petit juries of the Common Law in every state of the Union; and there, and not with United States postal censors, must the responsibility be left if our constitutional liberties are to be preserved.

To those who hav read my Faneuil Hall Speech and Reply to Judge Hurlbut I hav written too much on this constitutional point, to others not enough. To those who hav not read them let me renew the request that they send to The Truth Seeker for a copy.

The other topics suggested by Mr. Bush's letter I will try to consider in the order above numbered. Next week—it will be whether these Comstock Laws are bad or not. I hope that Mr. Bush will not persist in asking us to vote for Garfield because they are constitutional unless he has far stronger reasons than he has presented.

T. B. Wakeman.

Book Notice.

Modern Thinkers; What They Think and Why? By V. B. Denslow, LL.D. with an introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. 1 vol., 12mo, with eight portraits. Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg; and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius, as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp. 12mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

This is one of the most fairly written books we hav ever seen. The author is not an enthusiast in any direction, and seems to hav aimed to get at bottom facts. We were especially pleased with his review of the work of Thomas Paine, and also his essay on the authorship of the "Letters of Junius." While this essay fails to convince Col. Ingersoll—who thinks that Junius must hav united in his character the qualities of a "coward, calumniator, and sneak," and that therefore it would be no honor to Paine to prove his authorship—yet, with the exception, perhaps, of one emanating from Washington, Mr. Denslow's is the strongest document that has ever been written on the controversy.

Col. Ingersoll's Introduction, which occupies twenty-two pages of the work, is like all else from his pen, masterly in expression and deep with thought. The Colonel's superficial critics, who say he is an orator but not a thinker, must revise their opinions on reading it. He says of Mr. Denslow's book, "If others who read this book get as much information as I did from the advance sheets, they will feel repaid a hundred times." In this sentence Col. Ingersoll epitomizes the character of the work. It is essentially a storehouse of information, condensed from volumes whose mastery would be a labor of years for the average reader.

These reviews originally appeared in the Chicago Times, for the Saturday edition of which they were written at the request of the editor. A general call for them in a permanently preservable form resulted in this work. Each review is preceded by a short biographical sketch of the great thinker to whom it refers, supplying such details of his life as are not already familiar to the reader.

Of the general judgment reached after a careful analysis of the life and work of the several characters treated we cannot giv a better idea than to quote from Col. Ingersoll's Introduction:

"While this book will greatly add to the information of all who read it, it may not increase the happiness of some to find that Swedenborg was really insane. But when they remember that he was raised by a bishop, and disappointed in love, they will cease to wonder at his mental condition. Certainly an admixture of theology and 'disprized love' is often sufficient to compel reason to abdicate the throne of the mightiest soul.

"The trouble with Swedenborg was that he changed realities into dreams, and then out of dreams made facts, upon which he built, and with which he constructed his system.

"He regarded all realities as shadows cast by ideas. To him the material was the unreal, and things were definitions of the ideas of God. He seemed to think he had made a discovery when he found that ideas were back of words, and that language had a subjectiv as well as an objectiv origin; that is, that the interior meaning had been clothed upon. Of course a man capable of drawing the conclusion that natural reason cannot harmonize with spiritual truth because he had seen a beetle, in a dream, that could not use its feet, is capable of any absurdity of which the imagination can conceive. The fact is that Swedenborg believed the Bible. That was his misfortune. His mind had been overpowered by the bishop, but the woman had not utterly destroyed his heart. He was shocked by the literal interpretation of the scriptures, and sought to avoid the difficulty by giving new meanings consistent with the decency and goodness of God. He pointed out a way to preserve the old Bible with a new interpretation. In this way Infidelity could be avoided; and in his day that was almost a necessity. Had Swedenborg taken the ground that the Bible was not inspired, the ears of the world would hav been stopped. His readers believed in the dogma of inspiration, and asked not how to destroy the scriptures, but for some way in which they might be preserved. He and his followers unconsciously rendered immense service to the cause of intellectual enfranchisement by their efforts to show the necessity of giving new meanings to the barbarous laws and cruel orders of Jehovah. For this purpose they attacked with great fury the literal text, taking the ground that if the old interpretation was right, the Bible was the work of savage men. They hightened in every way the absurdities, cruelties, and contradictions of the scriptures for the purpose of showing that a new interpretation must be found, and that the way pointed out by Swedenborg was the only one by which the Bible could be saved."

Of Herbert Spencer the Colonel says:

"Herbert Spencer is almost the opposit of Swedenborg. He relies upon evidence, upon demonstration, upon experience, and occupies himself with one world at a time. He perceives that there is a mental horizon that we cannot pierce, and that beyond that is the unknown, possibly the unknowable. He endeavors to examin only that which is capable of being examined, and considers the theological method as not only useless but hurtful. After all, God is but a guess, throned and established by arrogance and assertion. Turning his attention to those things that hav in some way affected the condition of mankind, Spencer leaves the unknowable to priests and to the believers in the 'moral government' of the world. He sees only natural causes and natural results, and seeks to induce man to giv up gazing into void and empty space, that he may giv his entire attention to the world in which he livs. He sees that right and wrong do not depend upon the arbitrary will of even an infinit being, but upon the nature of things; that they are relations, not entities, and that they cannot exist, so far as we know, apart from human experience."

. . . . . .

"Mr. Spencer is wise enough to declare that 'acts are called good or bad according as they are well or ill adjusted to ends;' and he might hav added that ends are good or bad according as they affect the happiness of mankind.

"It would be hard to over-estimate the influence of this great man. From an immense intellectual elevation he has surveyed the world of thought. He has rendered absurd the idea of special providence born of the egotism of savagery. He has shown that the 'will of God' is not a rule for human conduct; that morality is not a cold and heartless tyrant; that by the destruction of the individual will a higher life cannot be reached, and that after all an intelligent love of self extends the hand of help and kindness to all the human race.

"But had it not been for such men as Thomas Paine, Herbert Spencer could not hav existed for a century to come. Some one had to lead the way, to raise the standard of revolt, and draw the sword of war. Thomas Paine was a natural revolutionist. He was opposed to every government existing in his day. Next to establishing a wise and just republic based upon the equal rights of man, the best thing that can be done is to destroy a monarchy.

"Paine had a sense of justice, and had imagination enough to put himself in the place of the oppressed. He had also what in these pages is so felicitously expressed, 'a haughty intellectual pride, and a willingness to pit his individual thought against the clamor of a world.'"

We would like to quote at length from the Introduction, and from the work itself, but must content ourselvs with the two following extracts:

"Most scientists hav deferred to the theologians. They hav admitted that some questions could not, at present, be solved. These admissions hav been thankfully received by the clergy, who hav always begged for some curtain to be left, behind which their God could still exist. Men calling themselvs 'scientific' hav tried to harmonize the 'apparent' discrepancies between the Bible and the other works of Jehovah. In this way they hav made reputations. They were at once quoted by the ministers as wonderful examples of piety and learning. These men discounted the future that they might enjoy the ignorant praise of the present. Agassiz preferred the applause of Boston while he lived to the reverence of a world after he was dead. Small men appear great only when they agree with the multitude.

"The last Scientific Congress in America was opened with prayer. Think of a science that depends upon the efficacy of words addressed to the Unknown and Unknowable!

"In our country most of the so-called scientists are professors in sectarian colleges, in which Moses is considered a geologist, and Joshua an astronomer. For the most part, their salaries depend upon the ingenuity with which they can explain away facts and dodge demonstration.

"The situation is about the same in England. When Mr. Huxley saw fit to attack the Mosaic account of the creation, he did not deem it advisable to say plainly what he meant. He attacked the account of creation as given by Milton, although he knew that the Mosaic and Miltonic were substantially the same. Science has acted like a guest without a wedding garment, and has continually apologized for existing. In the presence of arrogant absurdity, overawed by the patronizing airs of a successful charlatan, it has played the role of a 'poor relation,' and accepted, while sitting below the salt, insults as honors.

"There can be no more pitiable sight than a scientist in the employ of superstition dishonoring himself without assisting his master. But there are a multitude of brave and tender men who giv their honest thoughts, who are true to nature, who giv the facts and let consequences shirk for themselves, who know the value and meaning of a truth, and who hav bravely tried the creeds by scientific tests."

In closing the Introduction, which is really as astute a criticism upon the work as it can hav, the Colonel says:

"The Jewish God must be dethroned! A personal Deity must go back to the darkness of barbarism from whence he came. The theologians must abdicate, and popes, priests, and clergymen, labeled as 'extinct species,' must occupy the mental museums of the future.

"In my judgment, this book, filled with original thought, will hasten the coming of that blessed time."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In "Sexual Intemperance, No. 6," the two sentences, "I think Freelovers hav taken one extreme, and the Alphaites the other. I hope to keep the happy mean between the two," should hav been in quotations, as I took them from the private letter of a friend as a test to my article, and as they now stand they make a flat contradiction of me and the rest of the article, as I am an Alphaite Freelover (in theory). Elmina.

Democratic or Greenback, Which?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The Liberal voters generally are agreed that there is no hope for us in the Republican party. The question for solution is, The Democratic or Greenback party, which?

It is true that the Democratic party, from the logic of necessity, has changed. It is no longer avowedly pro-slavery, because slavery is dead and buried; no longer anti-war to crush the Rebellion, because the war is ended; but the same instinct is there; the old "leopard" has not changed its spots. It turns back for its basis to the times when the issues were different from those of to-day, erecting its platform on what Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson advocated. "Hurrah for Jackson!" I wonder if the old hero cares for the "liberal" encore, listening to the din from his "better country" in the heavens. He would prefer to hurl bolts of lightning upon men who propose to dig into old political graveyards to make a platform of the coffin boards for Liberals to stand on and build the superstructure of "free speech, free press, and free mails." What! sell ourselvs for availability? giv ourselvs to a party of monopolizing tendencies, not yet converted from ancient ideas, because, forsooth, it has the hardihood to throw a bait wherewith to catch the unwary Liberals—"the separation of church and state for the good of each." This plank is sound, what we want and will hav; but what if it stands alone beside rotten ones? It is another craft of the self-same party, fishing to catch a whole convention of us. The old devil! A few years ago the hard-money lords at headquarters allowed their subalterns to put in a soft-money plank, and thousands of financial reformers swung their hats and hurrahed for Democracy. Such did not see then that the Rothschilds' agents in America were thus secretly forging a chain to bind them hand and foot. But the lesson will not be forgotten; the tried reformers are on the watch for a pit beneath every Democratic plank.

Now, gentlemen of the Liberal jury, if you are willing to be gulled, sold, stuffed, and mummied, vote that ticket!

A little bit of history is in point. During the Abolition times, when the little band of stalwarts breasted the storm of political and churchal wrath, that class of voters was so small that men said: "They can do nothing, Why throw your vote away?" Every Whig said so; every Democrat said so. Hence the battle for liberty was long and hard. Sometimes compromises were made, but these failed every time. The very "divinity that shapes our ends" determined that justice should stand alone, uncontaminated by "dead heads," unsupported by dangerous precedents. You know the result; Abolitionism gained the day, and its heroes who suffered are enrolled among the benefactors of mankind. This is an event that should be remembered by every lover of liberty. The new wave, starting in universal instinct, becomes transcendent law. The life of the world is fed by the fresh and green, the growing and the fruiting. Fossils never sprout.

"Oh, but the Greenback party, in convention at Chicago, had a prayer offered!" Yes, and it was the only one, and should be engraved in gold, for it was offered against the "Levites and the Pharisees of the world, on our own hook." What of the Democratic convention, whose prayers were as thick as at the Republican, whose piety was equally vociferous with spiteful expectoration of profane juice.

The Greenback-Labor platform is, I confess, lame in some particulars, but what there is of it is alive, sound, and safe. No clap-traps, no double gearing; it demands retrenchment, governmental money issues, payment of the public debt in honor, with no transmission of a national legacy in the shape of non-taxable bonds to future lords and masters for rulership over America; a graduating income tax to forestall extreme wealth and extreme poverty; labor bureaus as substitutes for the oppressiv syndicates; protection to the rights of the toiling millions now enslaved to corporate capital; all these and more constitute its platform—a platform which Liberals admire and are in sympathy with. True, the platform is not explicit on the question of a state religion. It should hav been; but where the essentials are included and a special thing is excluded kindred therewith, it is understood that the whole is there. Given the principles, all issues belonging thereto are accepted. Why it was omitted was doubless due to the fact that the question does not present itself in so formidable an array as the relativ issues embodied. It is no party distinction to claim what belongs to the others as well. The truth is patent that American statesmanship is against the union of church and state. Certain ministers want it. I would not by any means delay preparation to defeat the high-priests and bigots in their plot against liberty of conscience, but I would not crowd an issue to the front before the people ask for it or are prepared for it; but allowing said issue to occupy its proper place, giv special attention to essentials, includnig such issue, with what the whole heaving masses are immediately concerned.

A word here about "free mails." Not one in a thousand is aware of a covert law allowing sneaking spies to inspect the mails. Whether the Republican party, as a party, is exclusivly responsible for that law is a question. Democrats, too, voted for it. The petitions for Bennett's pardon were signed as earnestly by Republicans as others. The fact in the case is this: It was born in the church, and rushed through by its Congressional tools, like many other bills, not having that due consideration which it merits. Whatever party gets into power, it can and will be righted, for the free-minded people are specially jealous of their liberties when aroused by agitation to the exigencies of the hour. Let that law be further ventilated; let the Pharisaical church that begat it be pounded into submission to just rule.

They, then, who advocate and practice in life the living principles at issue, even if all their policies are not itemized, can be the best trusted in office. Right here stands the Greenback party. Liberal belongs to its rank and file; liberal is its brain and heart; liberal is its leadership; hence Liberals of every name drift to it. It is the popular out-wave from the people's instincts. It is composed of men who hav suffered under oppression. It is the aggregation of the friends of liberty. Can such a party fail? Is it a failure if it does not elect its presidеnt? That is not impossible, sirs, if we can throw the election into the House, as the circumstances portend. But even if Garfield or Hancock is elected, is Greenbackism a failure? Is justice ever killed outright, never to rise again? The agitation we produce, the enlightenment of the masses in their rights, the mighty vote we shall cast, indicating the line of Liberal sentiment, will constitute a brighter, better victory than if we possess the White House, for then we still are free from the temptations incident to the wielding of power. The strongest force is always reserved, driving Congress to justice. Greenbackers understand their duty in this respect, and cordially invite the co-operation of all who aid and abet in the leveling-up of the masses.

J. O. Barrett.

Glenbeulah, Wis., July 28, 1880.

Let the Chatter Go On.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: What has caused this great commotion? Why somebody has advised somebody else to do something, and somebody won't do it; therefore somebody is going into spasms.

D. R. Sparks, of Alton, Ill., under date of July 6, 1880, says, "I hav several times noticed an effort of some of our Liberal friends to drag the noble Truth Seeker into the support of the Democratic party." And Mr. Sparks don't seem to favor the "drag." But I hav not felt the "drag" operating upon myself, as yet, to any great extent. "Why in the name of all that is good," asks Mr. Sparks, "should all Liberals be turned over unceremoniously to the Democrats." I face the same way I hav for many years, and don't realize that I hav turned in the least. And he further says, "You hav already damaged the circulation of The Truth Seeker by such propositions published at least without a protest." The Truth Seeker circulates to me just as it always has. I don't see any damage. He speaks of Mr. Wakeman's ability and Leland's sarcasm, and then adds, "They must not expect every Liberal to march into the ranks of their most bitter enemies." I hav not commenced the march yet, nor set any particular time when I would commence it.

These men favor the Democratic party, and they hav a perfect right to do so. Not only so, but they hav a perfect right to publish their preferences. Nor can I see how Bro. Bennett or any one else should be called upon to enter a protest. The Truth Seeker is the medium through which Liberals speak their ideas. I could not prize it half as highly if this privilege should be curtailed. It is the latitude given in it which makes me prize it above all other papers. I thought the time had come when Liberals could stand a great deal of open free discussion. I think these political suggestions are in order. How the votes of the Liberal element shall be cast is a matter of no small importance. Giv us your ideas, gentlemen, both Democrats and Republicans; they will help us to act intelligently. If Bros. Bennett, Wakeman, Green, Leland, or any one else, see fit to giv their political opinions, I see no reason for any one to feel hurt. Much as I respect the candor and judgment of those men, I am quite sure they cannot compel Mr. Sparks or any one else to vote with the Democratic party unless they can make it appear that it is the most reasonable thing to do.

Because these men hav ventured an opinion in regard to the political party to be supported by the Liberal element, Mr. Sparks and some others seem to regard it as an effort on their part to "drag" or drive Liberals into their measures. I can see nothing of the kind. If any one has a good reason for supporting either the Democratic or Republican party, let us hav it. Bro. Leland givs good advice when he says, "Let the chatter go on." No Liberal should take exception to the freedom of discussion.

Bro. Leland and some others think the best thing to do is to get the best pledges we can from the Democratic party, and then join our fortunes to them. If the party proves recreant to the pledges, then try the other party. Let these experiments be tried five, ten, or twenty years, and in the end we shall find that we hav been on a fool's errand. Please remember that the old political parties hav no soul in them. Either will adopt any measure which will insure success. Neither party will bid more for votes than they are worth. How one element in a party will effect, balance, or neutralize another is closely studied by its leaders. No doubt the Democratic party would like to hav our help; and the Republican party would smile upon us if we would boost them into power; but the question is, What will they do for us? Nearly the entire Christian element of the country will be found voting in one or the other of these parties. And it must not be forgotten that religious prejudices are the strongest known to the human breast. What we desire to accomplish the Christians will naturally oppose, and they outnumber us a hundred to one. The hard thing for the people to understand is that these parties are without principle; that they are run mainly in the interest of those who are working for place, power, and profit. We can reasonably expect nothing from these parties so long as the Christians outnumber us. They can and will neutralize our best efforts and defeat us every time. We may jump from one party to the other, but so long as these relations exist we shall be like the lamb which fled from the wolf only to be caught by the vulture.

Until the wisdom of the Liberal party shall fairly canvass the matter and determine what is best for us to do, let every Liberal dispose of his vote according to his best judgment and highest sense of duty. At the same time no one should be condemned or censured for giving his opinions in regard to these matters. The more light we hav the less liable we shall be to stumble. "Let the chatter go on."

Naples, N. Y., July 28, 1880 John Peck.

The Federal Law Regulating the Mail.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: There are many conscientious persons who suppose that the federal law excluding certain matters from the mails ought to be maintained because it seems to them in a cursory reading to hav been devised for a good purpose. There is a conclusiv argument to satisfy such persons, which I think ought to receive more attention than it does.

History shows that laws apparently designed for good purposes are easily abused and become productiv of serious evils, especially when they are prompted or instanced by any partisan or sectarian feelings.

The old Alien and Sedition laws under John Adams were soon swept away by a torrent of popular indignation, and are now as dead as slavery itself. Yet these laws, or rather this law, was on its face as fair and proper a law as any of our national enactments. It simply proposed to punish "false, scandalous, and malicious writings" which assailed the president, Congress, or government, to injure their reputation or incite sedition. Certainly such writings deserve to be punished even more severely than obscene literature, and if these laws could always be administered in a righteous manner they would be highly beneficial and would do a great deal to check the profligacy of the political press and the grossness of the political campaign.

But the people would hav them repealed, not because they were in favor of the lying and seditious slander, but because no such laws can be enacted without a dangerous encroachment on freedom.

So to-day our wisest citizens wish to see the obscenity laws repealed, not because they favor the obscenity, but because it is already proved that such laws interfere with freedom even more than the Alien and Sedition law.

The old Federal party cared nothing for the interference with freedom, and the church party to-day is equally regardless of human rights. I will venture also to say that the Republican party of to-day is in this respect the lineal successor of the old Federal party, with all its sanctimonious pretenses and its dread of popular freedom—its love of corporate power and centralized government. Jefferson.

To the Men of Freethought and Genuine Morality Assembled in Congress at Brussels:

On the 4th of July last, at the beginning of the one hundred and fifth year of the history of the United States of America, greeting was sent you of citizens right from the threshold of Independence Hall, at Philadelphia, the very birthplace of the commonwealth, and you were notified that an address would follow.

In complying therewith we intend:

1. To briefly define the position of the American citizen on the ground of his own fundamental law toward the all-important subject of genuine morality, which occupies so conspicuous a place on your programme; and

2. To solicit your co-operation in procuring all the material desired for a general educational plan upon that basis.

I.—Our Fundamental Law

That created the citizen and the state is, as you will see, intrinsically human, social, moral. It invested the citizen, not with as many or few rights and duties as some other political craft might have seen fit to concede to and to impose upon him after the pattern of any effete polity, but it recognized in him the one and indivisible right and the one and indivisible duty to be a man. Thus it did not lower him down to a servant, an instrument useful to the particular interests of others, the few or even but one; it did not arbitrarily assign him some place within the state; but it paid homage to him for his own self on the exalted station which nature has assigned him; it did not construct the state first and then the citizen for it, but it nobleized, it elevated first the citizen to the rank of man and founded through him, upon him, and for him, the state, the commonwealth, the very respublica, one and indivisible.

This the standpoint of the American citizen, borne by the Declaration of Independence of July 4, 1776, and its offspring, the Constitution of the United States in 1787; the former recognizing as self-evident this truth, that all men by the law of nature are endowed with the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that governments are instituted but for the purpose of securing this right; while the Constitution's end is set on establishing justice, promoting the general welfare, and securing the blessings of liberty to the living and the generations to come.

Thus the character of our citizenship is manifest to every right-minded man. Treason only and brutality can oppose, sophistry and jesuitism cavil at, and mere ignorance mistake it. And we hardly need, in the face of our supreme law, mention the incontrovertible truth that our people does not form an exclusive nationality in the common sense of the word. No sensible man—in speaking of the nation for signifying our station among the political powers of the earth—means to hide the fact of its being, so to say, a nation of nations, comprising and constantly receiving men from all parts of the globe and uniting them on the ground of a common humanity; a community which is to show practically the way on to that universal concert toward which all mankind, by its inmost motive power, constantly though slowly is advancing. Thus on a proportionate part of the planet, aptly selected by the genius of the race between the western and eastern shores of the Old World, we are to form the very microcosm, representing society in its lawful pursuit of life's "highest end—happiness general and special."

Now, honored friends, in these our statements we only tried plainly to show the main object of our fundamental law, but we are far from assuming to say that the great problem which it imposed upon the commonwealth at the moment of calling the same into existence, had already been solved, or could be solved without the united exertions of all faithful citizens. And in this respect we gladly can state that there is no lack of attention among our fellow-citizens in the right direction, there being already organized two hundred auxiliary Liberal Leagues, dotted all over our whole land, besides other similar organizations like the Turners, the Union of Radicals, the Socialistic party, and others, all of them uniting in the leading idea of the National Liberal League, which constituted itself at our Centennial (in 1876) in memory of the glorious founders of the commonwealth by adopting a constitution, the entire harmony of which with our fundamental law you will see in the following extracts: "Total separation of church and state, to the end that equal rights in religion, genuine morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood in all human life may be established, protected, and perpetuated." And further, "This country being exclusively dedicated to the natural right of man, all the political and educational institutions are to be more faithfully conformed to the spirit of its fundamental law." In order, then, to verify this unrefutable demand, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is projected, which shall require "every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without an education conformed to the spirit of the fundamental law."

This law, when properly established as the fundament of the state-school, will evidently settle two vital questions: It will, first, overcome all open opposition to the state school system on the part of priestcraft and other elements hostile to the republic, as such opposition would be regarded and treated as rebellious against the authority of the nation; and likewise will it silence all reproaches, justly or unjustly raised, about the want of moral instruction in the state school. The state can do not more—as it shall do not less—than to provide for such instruction, and this instruction grounded in the first axiom of morality, the natural rights and duties of man, plainly represented by the nation's fundamental law. It will, secondly, and above all, open the way to an educational system in harmony with the dignity and destiny of man.

As to the means of promoting and accelerating the forthcoming of that system, it is deemed advisable, besides all necessary political action, to establish an educational plan, which, strictly based upon the axiom of morality, and scientifically worked through, will preclude all rational objection and serve the true educator as a faithful guide.

II.

And here, honored friends, we have arrived at the point in which your endeavors and ours are so coinciding, that our co-operating on that common ground can become but a most efficient agency in the cause of humanity. We subjoin a project for such co-operation, and hoping for your concurring in the same as well as in the leading principle above set forth, we have to recur on the latter by a few concluding remarks—all comprehensive disquisitions on the subject matter itself are to take their places within the projected working plan.

We hold that the supreme law of the commonwealth distinctly grounded upon the law of nature and thus identifying both, a direction of thought is given the citizen which he dare not disregard. Finding himself placed upon his own right, the natural rights of man culminating in the axiom of happiness being the end of life, he can, for the sake of self-protection, not avoid thinking of this, and arriving through the simple action of common sense, at conclusions which bid him, irrespective of all preternatural notions of his own, to recognize the natural law as the supreme authority for himself, his neighbor, and all mankind alike. He cannot avoid observing that all life, by whatever inner motive power it be, does uniformly impel the individual plant or animal to an activity resulting in expansion, growth, perfectibility, or prosperity, and that man is distinguished from all other forms of life but by this eminent degree of consciousness, involving the faculty of perceiving that course of life and its indissolubility, general and special, or the entire and mutual dependence of the single on the universal life, generic and specific. Thus he finds himself, with all the impulses of life, face to face before the absolute necessity of an activity, individual and, at the same time universal that is an activity inseparably connected with that of his fellow-beings, and for all with his fellow-men, with society. And by the degree of insight into these two elementary conditions of human life, man's dignity, virtue, morality is determined. Morality, therefore, precludes by itself all interference of an unknown and unknowable or preternatural agency. It also precludes all arbitrary or "free will" concerning those conditions, since will principally represents but the cogent activity of pursuing well-being, happiness, thus refusing by itself all voluntary act incompatible with this end.

This, honored friends, being the fundament, on which, to our opinion, a general understanding about morals would be reached, we, at least, standing upon the ground of man's right, as given by the Declaration of Independence, shall do our best for establishing a general educational plan, and we hope for your brotherly co-operation, for which purpose we place the subjoined tabular view to your disposal, in order to distribute as many copies of it among the members of the republic of science as you shall see fit.

In conclusion, we have to repeat that by this address we did not pretend to exhaust the question of morality, but simply to engage your interest in the plan as stated, and to fulfil our promise given you at the Fourth of July last, from Independence Hall in Philadelphia, where, as we expect, arrangements will be made to receive you at the Fourth of July, 1881, and there to offer the result of our common labors to the genius of the Declaration of Independence. With the profoundest brotherly esteem, Yours,

The citizens who sent you their greetings on the Fourth of July last, and in their name, JULIUS REICHHELM.

Hoboken, N. J., July 4, 1880.

SIR: In accordance with our previous communication setting forth the purpose of the subjoined formula, we respectfully send you hereby two copies of it with the request of keeping one for your own disposal, while on the other you will be pleased to point out * the subject which you have chosen to treat upon, and then to return it. As to the treatise itself, we hope that you will kindly send it before January 1, 1881.

.....Sec. of the Educ. Centr. Committee.

His Physiology, comparative with Phytophysiology, Zoophysiology, Psychophysics;
His Descent, prehistoric vestiges; his relation to animals next in kind;
Ethnology and Ethnography.
Ethnical connection of primeval nations among themselves and with modern nations;
His social development through all the vicissitudes of political, religious, and industrial bondage, up to the establishment of the American commonwealth resting upon the law of nature that ties man to man for their united pursuit of their common destiny.
Happiness general and special.

AS STATED BY

MAN:

Phytophysiology, (name.)
Prehistoric vestiges, (name.)

Ethnical connection of primeval natures among themselves, (name.)

American Commonwealth Declaration of Independence, (name.)

| History | Asia and Africa. | | | | | | | Europe. | | | | | | | | America. | Australia. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Japan | China | India | Persia | Egypt | Palestine—Phœnicia | Asia Minor | Greece | Rome | Spain | Switzerland | France | Holland Belgium | Germany | Great Britany | Scandinavia | Austria | Russia | Turkey | United States Mexico Central America South American States | Colonies of Great Britania, etc. |
| Ancient | | | | | Egypt | | | Greece | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
| Medieval | | | | | Industry, Modern, (name.) | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
| Modern | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
| Industry, Art, Science, Philosophy, Manners and Morals, Polity, Religion. | | | | | | | | Philosophy, Ancient, (name.) | | | | | | Gr. Br. Polity, Medieval, (name.) | | | | | | |

* In order to avoid any error on our record, we have on different places of our formula exemplified the way of pointing out the subject, and beg the contributor to take kindly notice thereof.

COL. D. M. FOX and wife will speak at Liberal Hall, Smithville, L. I., Sunday, Aug. 15th, at 10:30 A.M., and then in company with W. C. Bowen will go to Belmore, L. I., and address an audience at the Liberal hall of that place. Col. Fox and his wife are both exceptional speakers, and all Liberals who can attend these meetings will be amply repaid by so doing.

As to the Democratic Party.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been in the habit of thinking that Liberals were measurably divested of prejudice, but I find myself mistaken. I hav been a voter for fifty-two years; hav voted thirteen times for President. Was a Whig until that party dissolved itself into a Republican party. Voted and worked for it to the best of my ability for sixteen years, then for good and sufficient reasons I quit it, and hav not voted with it since. During all this long time I hav never witnessed a greater exhibition of prejudice—not to call it by a worse name—than appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 17th inst., on the "Political Situation." My prejudices were never so strong against one party or in favor of another but what I could see and acknowledge good and bad in both.

One of your correspondents says the "Democratic party has lived through twenty years upon the prejudices of the ignorant and the brutal by the open or tacit defense of the slavery of the body." Who ever saw on paper a greater exhibition of spleen than that? The same writer claims that the plank in the Democratic platform that declares for "an entire separation of church and state" means nothing. They did not know what it meant. But as the Greenback party declare for "the taxation of all property and for woman's suffrage," this should be sufficient to secure the support of all true Liberals. O consistency, thou art a lost jewel! He laments that they "hav placed a bigot at the head of their ticket," while other writers in the same paper claim that the Greenback party is the Liberal party. What evidence hav they given us of the fact? My experience teaches me that there are three Liberals in the Democratic party to one in either of the other parties, and I am confident that a full investigation will establish the fact.

On the currency question, I indorse the Greenback doctrin, and so do three-fourths of the Democrats of the country. Only two years ago the Democratic speakers and most of the papers were thoroughly Greenback, and these parties to-day would hav been working together had it not been for the constant abuse heaped upon the Democratic party by the Greenbackers. This in a measure has caused an alienation between them.

It is true there are some hard-money Democrats. There are a few bondholders and bankers that are Democrats. They are so because it is for their personal interest to be so. Then there is a very ignorant foreign class that can hav no conception that there can be such a thing as money except gold and silver, because they don't know any better. But the well-informed, live Democrats are in favor of soft money, because they know that hard money means dear money, and that soft money means money brought down to a fair valuation with all other kinds of property and labor.

But there are other issues as important as the money question. Shall the great presidential fraud of 1876 be made honorable or odious? This fall's election will tell. Is the Jeffersonian doctrin of state rights in elections to be perpetuated, or shall our elections be controled by Federal bayonets and deputy-marshals? This fall's election will settle that.

What will our liberties be worth if the old Federalist doctrin of eighty years ago prevails, and the Jeffersonian doctrin be set aside. The power of the government will be centralized at Washington. The states or people will hav no rights the government will respect. Free press, free speech, and free mails will be a thing of the past, and only one short step to monarchy. This fall's election will settle all that.

Now let a Republican speak. That he is a Republican is not to be wondered at. He is a banker, and that explains it all. But that he should write the following displays a depth of prejudice hard to beat: "The Democratic party has always been the party of despotism. They were the defenders of American slavery; the mob party; the opposers of a registry law; the bitter opposers of temperance, and nearly all other reform movements." Was there ever more untruths crowded into a shorter space? "The Democratic party has always been the party of despotism." Wonderful! Strange it was not found out before. Most people thought the boot was on the other foot. "They were the defenders of American slavery." Not true. It was not a political question, but a local one. All parties of the South defended it, and all parties of the North opposed it, but differed as to the manner of treating it. That is all there is of that, "the mob party." If they hav played at the game more than the Republicans they are to blame, but modesty would prevent any one from applying the epithet to any party. "The opposers of a registry law." I think there is a grain of truth in that. It was a Republican hen that laid that egg and hatched in the interest of the Republican party, and been used in their interest, and bas been of no use to anybody else, although of great expense to the government.

"The bitter opponents of temperance." That caps the climax. There are intemperate people and opposers of temperance in all parties, and good temperance people in all parties, but to say that any party opposes temperance is not true, and no one knows it better than the writer who makes the assertion.

"The ignorant foreign vote are nearly all manipulated by that party." All parties do their best to secure all the votes they can, and if one party succeeds better than another, it is not their fault.

You hav surely "stirred up a hornet's nest," and I am glad of it. Somebody will get stung, and it may do them good. Let the good work go on. People will hav a chance to see all sides, which is the only way to arrive at correct conclusions.

If Weaver stood as good a chance of being elected as Hancock, that would be a good reason for voting for him. But everybody must know he stands no chance at all. I shall therefore vote for Hancock, and would advise all Liberals and also Greenbackers to do the same.

Eureka, Wis., July 20, 1880. E. B. ROUNDS.

Notes by the Way from Iowa.

AT Earlville there are some good workers in a quiet way, and the Liberal sentiment is quite strong. A League can be formed there when the Secularists awake to the importance of organization.

AT Dyersville there are eleven saloons, five churches, two drug stores, one brewery, and one self-styled Liberal, and he don't take any Liberal paper! Beer and sin reign here. Verily, there is room for growth in Dyersville.

OUR veteran Spiritualist friends, C. L. Patrick and Miss Ella Wells, are the only live Liberals I found at Independence, and I could not find that any Liberal papers were taken in that city. Independence sadly needs stirring up and set to thinking.

I FOUND our good Liberal friend and worker, Alexander Risk, of Winthrop, a little disgusted, as he has a right to be, at the apathy and parsimoniousness of so many pretended Liberals, and discouraged, as he should not be; but he is still the same generous, earnest man and humanitarian.

JEROME CARTER is doing splendid work at Randalia and vicinity. The pamphlets and papers circulated by him are shaking up the dry bones of old orthodoxy at a marvelous rate. His accomplished lady, formerly a member of the Society of Humanity, New York, is also deeply interested in reform work.

THE attendance at the state convention at Marshalltown promises to be large from this part of the state. It will undoubtedly be one of the grandest gatherings ever seen in the West. Remember the time and place—August 27th, 28th, and 29th, at Marshalltown. I trust that the friends of the cause in the state will remember that to get up such a meeting necessitates considerable expense for hall hire, speakers, etc., and that they will see to it that no debt will be left as at the Watkins meeting two years ago. Address all communications concerning the meeting to me at Norway, Iowa.

AT West Union there are a great number of non-believers in the old dogmas, but few Liberal papers are taken. None in the city, so far as I could ascertain, and a lamentable ignorance prevails as to the recent encroachments of the church upon the domain of the state and the rights of the individual, and the work and mission of the League. But there are some fine men there interested in Freethought, most prominent among whom I hav met are Messrs. E. A. Whitney, S. B. Zeigler, and S. S. Arnsworth. Mr. Zeigler distributes a good many documents, and takes all the time he can spare from his business to devote to the cause.

MANCHESTER is the headquarters of Liberal League No. 182, and the prospects are good. Messrs. J. N. Schelling and G. R. Buckley are the pioneers in the work there, and are earnest and capable. C. Husted and J. Van Antwerp are also alive to the issues of the day. The vital importance of organization and the pressing necessity that we should devise a substitute for the orthodox Sunday-school are beginning to be realized by Freethinkers, and it is to be hoped that this knowledge will bear practical fruits. To Bros. J. N. Schelling and G. R. Buckley I am under deep obligations for kindnesses bestowed. May the sun of earthly happiness shine for them to the end of life.

AT Fayette we hav the most earnest and able workers in the persons of Daniel Davis and T. S. Davidson. They are sowing the seeds of truth with no sparing hand. Fayette is the seat of a Methodist college, and is reported to be very bigoted, and I was told before I went there that it would be a very hard place in which to dispose of Liberal literature. But I found live Freethinkers there, and they are doing far more to Liberalize their town than are their much more numerous but far less activ brethren in West Union and other places. The missionary spirit is strong among the Liberals of Fayette, and they are not afraid to let the world know the faith that is in them, and they are putting much good Liberal reading matter into the hands of their neighbors.

E. C. WALKER.

The Teachers' Union.

The following are the resolutions adopted at the annual convention of the Teachers' Union, held last week at Newark, N. J., as published in the Journal of that city:

1. Resolved, Our public schools cannot do justice to the task of educating our children to be true citizens of our community without making the fundamental ideas on which this community is based the chief aim of public instruction.
2. Resolved, The American school in adopting this view puts itself on the basis of perpetual effort toward the perfection of humanity, and is protected in this effort by the act which, on July 4, 1776, created our glorious Union.
3. Resolved, That an amendment to the Constitution of the United States should provide that the children of this country shall be educated in accordance with the spirit of the Declaration of Independence.
4. Resolved, The establishment of a general plan for popular education upon that basis would eminently promote the great object of the constitutional amendment, as laid down in the foregoing thesis (3).

Mr. Green's Posters.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just received one of H. L. Green's beautiful posters. It is printed in colors and is pretty enough to hang on the walls of paradise, or to paste on one of its barns. It is ornamented with the names of so many of our brave, good, and earnest workers in the field of mental freedom that it does one's eyes good to rest upon it. I hope every Freethinker will get at least one of these posters just as soon as possible and put it in a conspicuous place where all eyes will see it and all brains cogitate upon it, and all tongues talk about it. The silent, effectiv work each one will accomplish will amount to an immense quantity in the aggregate. We hav very few such workers as friend Green, and I hope all will take a pride in encouraging him. I wish I was able to buy ten of them right off for free distribution, or ten times ten. I never saw so beautiful a "Freethinker" in print as adorns this poster. The artist who designed it must hav loved the work.

ELMINA D SLENKER.

Book Notices.

THE GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES. By D. M. Bennett. Two volumes, comprising 1,792 pages.

The work is not original. The gods and religions are old, and consequently nothing new historically can be said of them. The author has culled from the best sources the best things, and has not only organized a large body of matter on these themes but has put the mass of information at a very small price. In this respect Mr. Bennett is a benefactor to humanity. His generosity in this direction, however, I am sure is not duly appreciated by the Liberals at large. The amount and quality of printed matter here offered for five dollars would not cost less than fifteen dollars if issued from any other publishing house, and if the stereotype plates were destroyed by fire some day, every copy of this encyclopedia of the gods and religions now in the hands of the people would command large prices if offered for sale.

As a work of reference it ought to lie on every Freethinker's table. It is refreshing mentally to rise up and shake off the cobwebs of superstition, and as a sovereign individual contemplate the spider's webs from which we hav escaped. In this spirit I turn over page after page of the 1,792 on "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." I read there that the struggle of the race has been and now is to become better than its religions and to escape from the terror of deities and demons.

With this book on our tables, our friends hav an opportunity to see the character of the literature we prefer. They may become interested enough to open and read a few pages relating to the character of the heathen gods, and afterward possibly read gingerly of our borrowed gods. At any rate this book lying around loose in the home of the Liberal will be a magazine from which ammunition can be had in all quantities for all calibers. A few such books as this and "Supernatural Religion" are worth hundreds of smaller volumes on corresponding subjects, because they are, so to speak, the last word of science. In fact it would be an incalculable gain, even to many Liberals, if they would burn up the old Liberal books, which hav become fossilized, and read over and over the two works mentioned. An individual living on the Rocky Mountains, apart from society, could keep abreast with the progress of the age if he had for his companions these books and the Encyclopedia Britannica. As the latter is to science the former is to religion.

People spend three-fourths of their lives in learning from books things which in the last fourth they are glad to unlearn. Mankind does not begin by reading the right kind of books.

A Sunday-school teacher out West sent to Boston for a Sunday-school library, and not having a catalog at hand to check off his selections, and besides not having himself enjoyed a wide literary culture, left the business of selecting to the bookseller, with the proviso that he would send as many Indian and pirate books as he could; "for," suggested the writer, "our boys like that kind of Sunday-school books first-rate." If this is exaggerated and attributed to somebody "out West," it is nevertheless true that the literature circulated among children and youth in this nursery of the church is trash if not poison, even in the city of Boston.

A Sunday-school teacher, now a minister, told me a few years ago, that he could not secure the attendance of his class of boys, or hav their attention when present, unless he took the most of the hour to discuss the merits of star actors and dramatic companies then in the city. The reason is plain; the stage is real, the Sunday-school unreal.

But returning to the "Gods and Religions," we despair of ever giving a worthy synopsis, much less an adequate review of the work. Vol. I. begins with the gods of the Hindoos, which are classified as Vedic and Brahmanic gods, and which, with the Introduction, cover 115 pages. Then follow the gods of Persia and Chaldea, the gods of Egypt, gods of China, gods of Greece and Rome, gods of the Norsemen, with a glossary, gods of the American savages, gods of the Semitic races, and about two hundred pages of criticism on the Christian Bible.

"The following work," says the author in his preface, 'is perhaps more a compilation than an original production. Much of the data necessarily had to be gathered from various sources, and when it was found in better language than I could clothe it in, I hesitated not to quote freely rather than re-dress it in language of my own. The authorities most used are Mrs. Lydia Maria Child's 'Progress of Religious Ideas,' Rev. James Freeman Clarke's 'Ten Great Religions,' Murray's 'Manual of Mythology,' Clodd's 'Childhood of Religion,' 'Inman's Ancient Faiths,' Tuttle's 'Career of Religious Ideas,' Prof. Draper's 'Intellectual Development of Europe,' Tylor's 'Primitiv Culture,' besides others in a lesser degree."

Vol. II. treats of religions, and has a frontispiece of "D. M. Bennett in prison garb," illustrating what one of them did for him. Of the original man D. M. Bennett, I know somewhat physically and mentally, but of him in the frontispiece, shaven and shorn, and disguised as a felon in "prison garb," I seem to recognize no more the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER than I do in St. Anthony's picture of the bold, bad man, the obscenist.

These two volumes will be a monument to the name of D. M. Bennett, and will point the finger of shame not alone to the man with the little pistol, but to the bulldozers of the church which set him on and backed him up in his mean business.

The volume opens with primitiv religion, which, when once comprehended, leaves no room for unbounded credulity or faith in any religion, no matter how far advanced. Under this head the writer discusses fetichism, metempsychosis, beginnings of religion, polytheism, mythology, and phallism.

The religions of Brahmanism and Buddhism receive their full measure of attention, as do also the religions of Persia, Chaldea, China, Thibet, Egypt, Assyria, Phœnicia, Greece, Rome, of the Teutons and Druids. Judaism and Mohammedanism are treated in an interesting and instructiv manner, while Christianity comes in for nearly four hundred pages of notice.

I feel rich in the possession of this grand work, this encyclopedia of gods and religions, and am profoundly grateful to D. M. Bennett for compiling and publishing it at such a very low price as to put it within the reach of all.

W. S. BELL.

---

THOMAS PAINE, the Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. By John E. Remsburg. Boston: J. P. Mendum. Price, 50 cents in paper; cloth, 75 cents.

This is a pamphlet of 134 pages, divided into three parts, with an appendix. Part I. is devoted to his life; Part II. is a review of his character and works; Part III. is a vindication. The work is largely drawn from previous biographers, and is a condensed statement of the charges brought against Paine, and a complete refutation of them. The testimonials to his worth occupy forty pages. Mr. Remsburg is an able and at times eloquent writer, and he has proved a good editor in this little work, which will be found very useful in combating the gross falsehoods retailed by the clergy concerning Paine. The work is embellished with a fine steel-plate engraving of its hero.

At His Father's Grave.

The funeral of Sanford Cartwell, an old Liberal philosopher, took place at Colusa, California, March 19, 1880. The funeral was one of prudence and modesty, the following being the beautiful oration by his son, W. C. Cartwell, at the grave:

Friends: To-day has brought to me the saddest task that time is wont to bring for man. Under no circumstance save by request of him could I speak the last words at the grave of my departed father. While we linger a moment here to review one of man's and nature's lovers, each word must be of unaffected truth if, like the drum which rolled the dirge march, we speak in muffled sadness.

If the world of humanity had known the throbbings of this now still and pulseless heart; if the world of humanity had known the sublime motivs of this mind which now must giv up its aim, it would realize how great its loss. Justice is one advocate poorer, truth has lost an earnest researcher, and to-day the goddess of mental liberty stands with one less guard. Once taking an infant from its tiny cradle he was heard to say, "This babe had no choice of life or existence, and can it be possible any being of justice and love would condemn it to the torment of flames?" Then placing it back on its pillow he said, "My answer is a thousand times no." It was then and there, standing with tearful eyes over the cradle wherein slept his first child, he broke the creed chains which held him, and like an eagle set free, he soared higher and beyond the bonds of selfishness to the realm of a philanthropist. He would hav bridged the entire world with kindness, over which might pass and repass the messengers of truth, honor, and humanity. To this far-reaching mind there appeared an agency in the tidal rule and government of man which told him the close of the nineteenth century would bring a "sublime or awful change in the affairs in the world." A change, said he, liberating the mind from the shackles and chains which hav bound it in superstitious servitude or the awful closing of the doors of liberty and Freethought to be barred and guarded by the joint strength of creeds. In all his arguments and contentions for the right he stood firm as the mighty oak, his calmness defying the power of his foes, and never for one moment did he sacrifice principle for policy. He has been a true and loving husband, a kind and patient father, and now, while to him the world stands but little more than three score and ten, death has kissed down his eyelids and he has passed to nature's calm repose. We shall look no more on this form, for the innumerable and quiet messengers of time will come and take the elements and replace them in the great labyrinth of the universe. Yes, friends, his task is done; no more for him the cup of sorrow, the load of care, the voice of gladness, or the songs of love. To-day he is at peaceful rest; he is still; he sleeps. The moment has come when on earth we may giv our father our last token of love. Springtime flowers will grow around this mound; the glory of summer will cherish them in their beauty; stars in silence will look down upon this grave. The tears of night will quiver on the marble tomb, but the morning sun will kiss them away. Words cannot contain our love. Let us try to not mourn, for his life has been upright. Now, with love for the past and present and future, we can but say Farewell! Lower down the grave-earth easy, now, for each sound would strike hard upon my heart.

---

DR. N. S. DAVIS, of Chicago, says the fattening of beer-drinkers is not due to increased nutrition, but to the fact that it retards the natural and healthy waste of tissues, and causes a retaining of old material after it should be carried away. In this way beer impairs the vital powers and predisposes the system to yield readily to morbid influences of any kind to which one is exposed.—Fowler's Health Monthly.

Letters from Friends.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Your sympathy for the Greenback-Labor party, at the same time proposing to support Hancock, cannot be politic. I was of opinion you would be the last man to desert a truth that you had found; that you would "freeze" to it sooner.

You seem to think General Weaver stands not a shadow of a chance for an election, and a vote cast for him would be thrown away. If all are made to think and act as you propose he certainly will not get an electoral vote. If every voter who believes in the soundness, stability, and truth set forth in the Greenback platform would stand by those principles, General Weaver would be elected without a doubt. Our only hope just now is to bring the election into the House, where General Weaver will stand as good a chance of an election as either of the other two candidates—Greenbackers, so-called, having the balance of power. The fear that Weaver will not receive an electoral vote, or enough to carry him into the House, is erroneous, provided his friends will stand by him.

Every voter should remember that the issue between Garfield and Hancock is simply a struggle for power. There can be no political issue, judging by the platforms. They stand upon the same planks. The issue really is between the two old fossils and the Greenback-Labor party. Those machine politicians propose to divert the attention of the voters from the truths set forth in the Greenback platform by not attacking them. They will not make war upon that platform before the people. Silence is their strongest weapon, and they know it.

If you will define in the crucible of the brain the issue between Republican and Democrat you will find them to be six the one and half-dozen the other.

They hav marched, counter-marched, fought, and bled, and should die in each other's embrace, and be cremated in the same furnace. Just think for a moment what they hav jointly brought upon the country. They armed brothers with daggers, and sent them on the mission of fraternal blood, thereby sending a mourner's bench into every household in the land. They are now jointly riveting chains broken from a few African slaves upon the Caucasians of this country, by playing into the hands of despots.

You speak of the many issues involving the country, yet none nor all can be equal in importance to the financial question, upon which those old parties are a unit.

In a very few years they jointly created and settled upon the country a debt never equaled by any despotism upon earth in the same length of time. Worse; they each demand the people to pay double the amount contracted for. All of which has been done by their joint manipulations with Aaron's bull-calf.

They hav jointly stolen from the people the greatest domain ever known to the world. All has gone for a mess of pottage. They now stand ready to continue their plunder system, with frauds unequaled in the history of man. Would rather operate separately, but jointly if need be.

General Hancock may be an honest man. He is doubtless a good soldier. As a statesman he has no record. One thing however is evident—the party believe they will be able to control him. His companion for office, English, with the indorsement of the Democracy of the Wall street gold gamblers, is quite sufficient for an alarm.

Principles in politics and religion we demand, and they are proper subjects for discussion. So far as the platforms of the old fossil parties are concerned they are like orthodox religion—not to be questioned. They are platitudes, twaddle, not of the people. The honest voter had nothing more to do in the framing of those platforms than Fijis.

The blarney about honest money, money convertible into coin, is as despotic in principle as words can be. All the planks in those platforms are machine made. The Republicans are "plumed upon glory." The Democracy are anything to regain the power, believing, with the Republicans, that the masses of the people are ready for both whip and spur. For the "dear sovereign people" they hav the same love that a greyhound has for a horned ewe, or that Mr. Truesdell has for the opinion of a common man touching national currency, so called.

No, my dear sir, don't "sear your conscience with Democracy." The party leaders would sell our birthright or crawl into a hollow log or upon it for a platform, if they thought it would re-seat them in the saddle. They hav not a Jefferson or a Jackson in the party—but Belmonts.

The Republican party is as cold as an iceberg in the Arctic Sea. Stand by principle, my dear sir, and if defeated, let us pick our flint and try it again.

Very respectfully, M. J. Hines.

Reply.—We hav no particular objection to friend Hines condemning both the old parties. We are not partisan enough to care a straw for that. We hav heretofore been Republican, but feeling convinced that that party has become recreant to its first glorious principles; feeling that it has committed many flagrant outrages upon its constituents, the people; seeing that it has become tainted with the leprosy of aristocracy and priestly dictation; seeing in the attempt to place General Grant a third time in the presidential chair a decided and alarming tendency to centralization and a "strong government;" knowing that Hayes, its representativ, was controled by priests in a matter which should hav been considered only by statesmen; knowing that it is a Republican clique here in New York that gave Comstock his power, The Truth Seeker has felt constrained to sound the alarm.

We would like to see the government administered on a constitutional basis. From the documents put forth by the various parties, it seems to us that Hancock is the one who would come nearest to our idea of Jeffersonian democratic principles.

Our prophecy that Weaver would not get an electoral vote, and that consequently a vote for him is a vote to keep the Republican party in power (which we should regard as a calamity), is likely to come true. Alabama, which he claimed as sure for the Greenbackers, has gone Democratic by something over 50,000 majority, although the Greenbackers united on the ticket with their deadly enemies, the Republicans. Talking of the Greenbackers sticking with Spartan-like courage to their principles really looks a little like buncombe when we see them unite with Republicans and hav their candidates' expenses paid out of Republican pockets in one state (Alabama), and with the Democrats in another (Maine).

The politicians who run the machine of the Greenback party are, we fear, a good deal like other machine politicians, while it would be arrogant indeed for the rank and file of any one party to claim that they alone vote for principle. There are undoubtedly good and true men in all the parties. The Greenback party, too, has put at the head of its ticket one whom the most enthusiastic Greenbacker we know denominates a bigot, and we cannot vote for a bigot. Both the other candidates are far more liberal men than Weaver, and we support the Democratic candidate because we believe that he will abide strictly by the Constitution and not endeavor to centralize the government. We also believe that he will not be controled by ministers, while Garfield, as a preacher, a prominent member of the Disciples' church, and an activ participant in prayer-meetings, would most assuredly be under the influence of the church. Indeed, it is an open secret in Garfield's own neighborhood that he was elected to Congress by the Campbellites and kept there by them. His chief qualifications were that he was a good preacher and prayer, and belonged to that sect. We hav had one goody-good little Sunday-school boy in Washington, and this office has felt the effects of it. It does not want another 'four years of psalm-singing in the White House."—Ed. T. S.

---

St. Catherines, Ont., Can., August 1, 1880.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I perceive that the numerous readers of your able paper are about being inflicted with another religious confab—to the exclusion of other and more valuable matter—like unto the one you had some time ago, and against which so many entered their protests.

But methinks you will say, "This will be much more interesting than the other you speak of, for the reason that the combatants are much more able and better posted on the subject-matter under discussion than those you allude to were." I, for one, care not how able or well posted they may be; they can educe for argument nothing more than what has heretofore been educed and repeated thousands upon thousands of times ever since the year one, and that is what I take exception to.

It matters not how good a thing may be, it will make it no better to repeat it a thousand times over. It may be I am the only one on this earth who is so thoroughly disgusted with repetition, but I apprehend all reasoning, thinking, sensible people are more or less disgusted, and take exception to continued repetition upon any subject.

You will, of course, readily perceive that Mair in his various assertions from time to time resorts as usual for proof to that wonderful book that has been so much descanted upon for centuries past, and it may be proof to some, but not to me, and he may hav spent much precious time (perhaps not foolishly) in perusing said book, and with a retentiv memory be able to readily repeat it, but does that make it reasonable, truthful, and reliable?

There are many good sayings in said book (but none the better for being there), and there are very many bad sayings and commands, many of which are attributed to the God of the Jews, but I don't believe in any such God of wrath, vengeance, and inconsistencies, but rather in an all-creativ power which pervades the whole universe; therefore you will readily see why I am not entertained with such debates or discussion. Others may be, if so I feel to pity them. It may be well enough orally and locally for those who are not quite out of the traces yet.

Furthermore, I will venture to say that Mr. Bennett is not entertained with such discussions, for he has to meet him on his own ground, which I think is not pleasing to him. I presume he would much prefer to originate new, philosophic, and instructiv matter, which he is quite capable of doing, to occupy the columns of The Truth Seeker instead of such debates.

His letters from abroad I hav no doubt will be more entertaining to thousands of his readers than said debate, and I, for one, hope that the circumstance of his going to Brussels will be the means of ending that same.

I was much pleased to learn the fact that the ill-feelings between Mr. Bennett and Mr. Underwood had been amicably settled. Mr. Underwood, evidently, has talents which should not be lost to the Liberal cause, and I was grieved (judging from reports) that he had seemingly gone astray, but all is well that ends well. I shall pray that The Truth Seeker and its proprietor may now hav a clear sea, for a time at least; nothing to mar its peace and prosperity.

I advocate forbearance with every one in so far as it can be consistently exercised. Rashness often makes trouble.

Your next Presidential election is a knotty question for the Liberals to get over, and unless they decide to wave old party feelings for the good of the cause I fear not much good will come to them from it, and that will be just what will please your enemies. I take sides with Messrs. Bennett and Leland, for I think them sound on that question. Your Republican party has been in power for a long time—from my observation and experience in politics, too long for any party to be in power, for however honest and reliable they may seem to be at the commencement they will become dishonest and corrupt after the second term if not before, and you all know what the party now in power hav and what they hav not done, consequently what you may expect of them should they succeed to power another term.

I can readily see from my independent standpoint that Messrs. Bennett and Leland's arguments on putting the Democratic party in power for a couple of terms would be quite beneficial to the Republican party by way of purging them of the dishonesty, corruption, and unreliableness which hav been accumulating upon them for a quarter of a century past. And from the two platforms—and the two men made choice of for President—I think it would redound to the good of the Liberal cause if the Liberal party would but fall into line with the Democratic party at your election in November next. Your third political party don't amount to much as yet.

Please overlook my seeming rudeness of expression concerning your politics, the only excuse I can giv being my zeal for the Liberal cause. Hoping the said election may result in the good of said cause,

I remain yours as ever, C. B. Thompson.

Remarks.—With all respect for our esteemed friend we would say with regard to discussions, that they hav a special interest for many readers, especially those who are beginning to examin theological questions. When each side has a chance to say all that can be said in its favor, and then the other to combat it, the readers hav a better chance for deciding where the truth lies than by reading one side only. As proof of the popularity of this species of literature, it may be stated that debates and discussions between Liberals and Christians hav a very good and steady sale. Many prefer to hear what can be said on both sides. Many new subscribers to The Truth Seeker expressly stipulate to hav their time commence with the Discussion. We hope our friend, and others who are not partial to a discussion will bear in mind that many are in favor of it. It certainly may be hoped that arguments will be used on either side that will prove of interest to thousands of readers. It is doubtless difficult to get up much that is really new on either side, whether by discussion or otherwise, but the thoughts can be presented often in a new form. At all events, if the discussion is sometimes dull to a portion of the readers, it occupies but a small part of the paper and there is always much besides that is interesting. It is hoped all readers may be suited.—Ed. T. S.

---

Cincinnati, O., August 1, 1880.

Mr. Editor: T. C. Leland's political doctrin is neither good nor brave. It looks as if he thought every Liberal should turn hypocrit and vote for spite. But it should ever be remembered that mankind ought to possess a firm principle and never be guided by any sore in a tender spot. Moreover, the Democratic party is corrupt to its core, and no good can ever be gained from it. So getting out of the Republican party into the Democratic would be jumping from the frying-pan into the fire. It won't do. Rather let all the old corrupt parties go and bravely start a new national party, with supreme liberty of thought, and free from every sectarian dogma. What if our party be small and be beaten a thousand times! Better be amongst the fallen braves than thrown in as a tub to the whale with any party that is strong in numbers and much stronger in ignorance. We do not want any man of sword and flame. The gunpowder party is the curse of nations. Let us hav peace, intelligence, and the most progressiv order of things, such as every man of sense, reason, and patriotism would hail with delight and support with the utmost zeal.

Let a Liberal ticket be put in the field at the Hornellsville Convention. We hav the finest material on the globe to run a campaign. Set the ball rolling, and may it land in the White House! T. Winter.

[Reply.—Those who advocate a separate party for Liberals hav little conception of what it costs to organize and run a party. The two large parties in our country will not spend in the present campaign less than five or ten millions of dollars. To get up candidates for electors in every state, and to even make a very slight effort at canvassing before the people, with the electioneerers, ticket-holders, etc., at the polls, would cost $100,000 or $200,000. Who is prepared to furnish the money? Political parties are expensiv affairs to run, and those who recommend Liberals having a separate party of their own are extremely impractical and scarcely know what they are talking about. Even if we could raise $50,000, and be able to get up a feeble little party, what possible good would it do? None whatever. Not half the Liberals would vote the ticket, anyway. We would succeed in being laughed at by everybody, and would never come within fifty miles of electing a single officer. The better way for Liberals is to co-operate with the party they like the best, and when a party wrongs them seriously, to join in with the opposit party and whip them out as punishment.—Ed. T. S.]

Donations to the Parton Fund.

The following generous donations in behalf of The Truth Seeker hav not hitherto been acknowledged: E. Worman, $1; John Maxwell, $1; R. McIntosh, $5; John McDougall, $6; J. F. Smith, $5; Thomas Reeder, $5; L. Tabor, $1; James Brown, $10; J. S. Shepherd, $1; John Van Valkenburg, 50 cents; John W. Sherry, $1; Thomas Fryer, $1; Gilbert Arnold, $1; Jacob Schule, $2; John Rees, $1; S. R. Shepherd, $1; Mrs. Grace L. Parkhurst, $10; W. W. Dunham, $5; George Williams, $1; a Rochester Friend, $10; Mrs. Letsie A. Allen, $10; Jacob L. Reitzel, 25 cents; J. H. Cook, 80 cents.

We here return our grateful thanks for the kindness of generous friends. We shall endeavor to prove worthy of the confidence bestowed. D. M. B.

Brussels Donations since Last Report.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| John G. Kendall, | $1.00 | J. Reithmuller, | 1 00 |
| Mrs. W. S. Briggs, | 1 00 | Soldier and Greenbacker, | .25 |
| Dr. Allen Pence, | 1.00 | G. H. Hocking, | 1 00 |
| E. E. Curtis, | 2 00 | Martha Higgins, | 1 00 |
| A. Ramsdell, | 1.00 | D. Williams, | 1.00 |
| Courtlandt Palmer | 5 00 | W. F. Porter, | 1.00 |
| Mrs. Louise Post, | 10 00 | Samos Parsons, | 5.00 |
| Thomas V. Lawson, | 1.00 | Friend from Newark, | 2 00 |
| James Parton, | 10 00 | | |

The two recipients of these kindnesses express their hearty thanks for the favors thus bestowed. May the generous liv forever.

The "Posters."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Please publish the following from brother Walser, editor of the Lamar (Mo.) Liberal. H. L. G.

Lamar, Mo., Aug. 3, 1880.

Bro. H. L. Green: Your poster at hand. It makes a fine show, and ought to be posted in every town in America. They would do more good than a thousand lectures. But few will trust themselvs to hear a Liberal lecture. Send me some as per stamps inclosed. Yours for the cause,

G. H. Walser.

P. S.—How can we, from western Missouri, get the proper reduction to attend your Convention?

Ans.—Get an excursion ticket to Chautauqua Lake, and there get another. H. L. G.

---

We thankfully acknowledge a donation of 80 cents from our friend J. H. Cook, of Columbus, Kan., on the Parton Fund. We should hav attended to this much earlier.

The Skylark.

A Song for Children.

BY CHAS. BRADLEY AND WILLIE FEICKART.

"Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings
And Phœbus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs,
On chaliced flowers that lies;
And winking Mary buds begin
To ope their beauteous eyes,
With everything that pretty bin—
My lady sweet, arise.
Arise,
My lady sweet, arise." —Shakspere.

Nigh to a brook,
Where I mistook
My shadow in the water,
A bluebird sung
When spring was young,
And summer piping after.

Bright April showers
Kissed the wee flowers
With soft and dewy kisses;
By all the powers,
This world of ours
Was made but for the misses!

Just then a lark,
A choral spark,
Flew high above the meadow,
With unseen wing:
Still he did sing,
And this the song he said: "Oh,

"Rejoice, rejoice,
Ye girls and boys;
May sorrow never fright you;
While I can fly
Beneath the sky,
I'll sing for to delight you."

In the sad deeps
Where sorrow sleeps,
To wake to sorrow deeper;
Sorrow would end
If God should send
That tranced song to the sleeper,

Near unshut doors,
Where lovelight pours,
Where waters of life flow,
All silent stand
The angel band;
They're listening below.

Wings pressed to breast,
To the dear nest
A gliding star he falls:
Echo still there,
Through the still air,
To answering echo calls.

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.60.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius, as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

UPPLYSNINGENS TIDEHVART

(AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT).

A SWEDISH WEEKLY,

Devoted to the culture of Freethought, to the snvestigation of the religious systems of our times, and to the discussion of religious and social questions in general.

The only Swedish religio-philosophical publication in America.

TERMS PER YEAR . . . $2.00

Exchange is desired with any other papers in any language.

ERICKSON & OLSON.
Grove City, Meeker Co., Minn.

For sale, in the Swedish language:

A BETTER RELIGION.

BY FRANZ HERMAN WISTRAND,
Editor of the Truth Teller,
Lake Constance, Buffalo Post-Office,
Wright Co., Minnesota.

Published by ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Minn.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, | 5 |
| On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

Epicurus: or, a Few Days in Athens.

Being the Translation of a Greek Mss. discovered in Herculaneum.

BY FRANCES WRIGHT.

Containing a copy of the head of Epicurus.

Price 75 cents. For sale by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th street, New York, N.Y.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

FIFTY CENTS

Will pay for

DR. FOOTE'S HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for the AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED PRONOUNCING POCKET DICTIONARY, containing 30,000 words.

ONE DOLLAR will pay for DR. FOOTE'S

HEALTH MONTHLY

For one year and for a large center-table book containing the Complete Works of Shakspere! Do not forget to send 25 cents to pay postage or 35 cents if you want it registered. Address

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 E. 28th st., New York city.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructive work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.

tJan81.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington Ave., New York, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK are at liberty to CONSULT ITS AUTHOR in person or by mail FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY,
129 East 28th Street New York.

DR. KINGET'S NEW BOOK.

"MEDICAL GOOD SENSE"

—AND—

PRIVATE READING FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.

—EMBRACING—

SEXUAL PHILOSOPHY AND PHYSIOLOGICAL MARRIAGE,

Containing over 500 illustrated pages, well bound—price $2. It treats of the nature, causes, treatment of, and prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases. It unfolds some of the deepest mysteries of human nature in the generation and development of life, sexual relationship, marriage, parentage, and offspring, all viewed from a secular standpoint. It fully answers numerous questions, the delicate nature of which prevents thousands of women from asking. Any person sending $1.50 before the day of publication, this fall, will receive a copy, well bound, mailed free. Contents table sent free for stamp.

DR. T. R. KINGET ANNOUNCES

to his Liberal friends and patients throughout the United States and Canadas that he is, as usual, treating

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES,

and positively curing ninety per cent of those pronounced incurable. Having had over thirty years' experience, Dr. K. is meeting with remarkable success in curing obstinate cases of Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Nervous Debility, Impotency in both sexes, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Dysentery, Piles, Diseases of the Skin, Kidneys, Bladder, Genital Organs, and all diseases of women Consultation Free. Address

T. R. KINGET, M. D.,
317 East 14th St., New York.

Questions for Invalids free.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall, this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person. Price 20 cents.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds.
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13t27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book, Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00: twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Thelogy, Etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man. Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

LOVE VENTURES.

A rose tinted record of love in the tropics, with strange and startling adventures thereto belonging. Price, 50 cents.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp, $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 68 pages; price, 35 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.), $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

Cut out the rotten from your apple;
The apple eats the sweeter. —Tennyson.

In the present state of the world it is practically impossible that writings which are read by the instructed can be kept from the uninstructed. If the teachers of mankind are to be cognizant of all that they ought to know, everything must be free to be written and published without restraint.—Mill.

In examining the evidences of Christianity, let every prepossession be swept away and room be left for the understanding to expatiate without fear and without incumbrance. . . . No partiality of the heart or fancy is to be admitted, and no other influence acknowledged than the influence of evidence over the convictions of the understanding.—Dr. Thomas Chalmers.

In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times, for his thoughts will fly to it of themselvs, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice. A man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one and destroy the other.—Bacon.

Courage, when it is a virtue, is the sacrifice of our personal safety to the interests of our kind, which rises to its highest pitch in the case of martyrdom. Temperance fits us to perform our duty to society, and spares, while intemperance wastes, the common store. Chastity is, in like manner, a sacrifice of the sensual, animal passions to the social principle, since the indulgence of lust both involves the corruption and misery of its victims, and destroys in the man who indulges it the capacity for pure affection.—Goldwin Smith.

Be mine a philosopher's life, in the quiet, woodland ways.
Where, if I cannot be gay, let a passionless peace be my lot;
Far off from the clamor of liars, belied in the hubbub of lies.
From the long-necked geese of the world that are ever hissing dispraise
Because their natures are little, and, whether he heed it or not,
Where each man walks with his head in a cloud of poisonous flies. —Tennyson.

Why is it thought so very wicked to be an unbeliever? Rather, why is it assumed that no one can hav difficulties unless he be wicked? Because an anathema upon unbelief has been appended as a guardian of the creed. It is one way, and doubtless a very foolish way, of maintaining the creed, this anathema. When everything may be lost unless one holds a particular belief, and nothing except vulgar love of truth can induce one into questioning it, common prudence points out the safe course; but really it is but a vulgar evidence, this of anathema.—Froude.

The end of theological dogmatism is at hand. Less and less will men talk of God "as if he were a man on the next street;" of immortality as if some one had returned with tidings of the land beyond the sea. But if the idea of God loses something of warmth, it will gain something of pureness. If it becomes less familiar, it will become more holy. And the idea of immortality will not be less but more religious when, ceasing to be a dogma, it becomes a tender hope, ever subordinate to a perfect trust that the Eternal knoweth what is best. I fear no more that men will cease to be religious than that they will cease to be moral.—J. W. Chadwick.

A MISGIVING.

Past praise, past blame, past joys, and past regrets,
At length thou sleepest cold in thy green grave.
Where the close dew, the mourning cypress wets,
And the wind sobbeth low or frenziedly doth rave.
Is, then, the strife all done,
Is, then, the rest all won.
For which the weary hearts of toilsome mortals crave?

Thrice, oh, thrice blessed thou if this be so!
Soft is the covering of the green, green earth.
Sweet is the sleep that knows not joy or woe,
Remote alike from tears or feverish, restless mirth.
Is, then, the strife all done,
Or but the strife begun?
Vain quest! The dead are silent. Knowledge hath its girth. —Canadian Spectator.

The anxious, believing Christian says, "I would be exceedingly glad to get you out of the gloom of Atheism." But there he is certainly in the wrong. Atheism is far from gloomy. It is full of light, brightness, and beauty. It has no "original sin;" no "man was made to mourn;" no dark, gloomy, terrible hells, and no fears of what may be after death. But all is hopeful, cheerful, and pleasant. Atheism sees the loving hand of nature in all that exists. Happiness, health, and joy are the boon of every living being by nature's bounteous, all-giving behest; but as there are exceptions to all rules, the sickness, suffering, and misery that visit one here and another there shadow somewhat the brightness of the picture. Yet perhaps life, as a whole, is no less enjoyable because of the somber clouds that flit across its sunny fields. Contrasts giv one a keener sense of appreciation, for we prize the lovable and the enjoyable all the more by the comparison with their opposits. I would like the believer to show me one Atheist who is gloomy; one who is not more buoyant, more happy, and more full of the joy of living than the average Christian is.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

It will take a pretty hard frost to kill the speech crop that is coming on now.

The heft of a woman cannot, with any amount of correctness, be arrived at when judging by her sighs.

Miss Tanner, who recently married a widower named Hyde, with eleven children, says she has given up tanning and is now dressing Hydes.

The young man who dropped a ten-cent piece down his sweetheart's neck and called her a dime savings bank, had a dividend declared on the spot.

A Philadelphia debating society is wrestling with the question, "Can a married man be a Free Mason?" He can provided he is not "lectured" to death at home.

"Julius, did you 'tend de las' meetin' ob de debatin' society?" "Yes, sir." "Well, what wur de fust ting dat cum afore de house?" "Why, it was a charcoal cart."

"Pa," said a six-year old cherub to his paternal ancestor, "when is a locomotiv like a rocket?" "Giv it up, sonny." "When it is fired up," replied the cherub.

A young gentleman was accusing another of having a big mouth. "Yes," said the other, "but nature had to make yours small so as to giv you plenty of cheek."

Teacher: "What is an abbreviation?" Scholar: "A shortening." Teacher: "Yes; giv me an example." Scholar: "Some folks use butter, but mother says hog's lard is good enough for anybody."

A man who was suffering from a boil on his face pettishly exclaimed, "I wish I knew the best place to hav a boil!" to which his little girl responded, "Why, papa, the tea kettle is the best place for a boil!"

Proprietors of hotels at seaside resorts are endeavoring to get up a rush of visitors through skilfully written newspaper articles, hinting that the female bathing costume is shockingly immodest this season.

Harvey Smiggins says that it puzzles him how strange men walk into houses and abstract fifty or a hundred dollars from a bureau drawer. He says he couldn't do it in his own house, and he knows every nook and corner in it.

There are mean men in this world, and in that class may be reckoned John Snedicker, of Jersey City, who, hearing that two of his bragging friends had gone fishing, hied him to the market and bought every trout to be had.

He had one son hanged, another son in the penitentiary, and his wife eloped with a chromo peddler. "Hav you any family?" he was asked by a fellow-passenger. "None to speak of," was the prompt response to the census man.

"I'll teach you to lie, and steal, and smoke, and use profane language," said an irate Galveston parent to his eldest offspring, at the same time swinging a good-sized sapling; "I'll teach you, you young scamp." "Never mind, father, I know all them branches already."

A Yankee stopped at a Saratoga hotel and the landlord charged him $5 a day for five days. "Didn't you make a mistake?" "No," said the clerk. "Yes you did; you thought you got all the money I had, but you are mistaken. I hav a whole purse full in another pocket."

A young man who livs in a boarding-house wants to know how he can play the violin without disturbing the other boarders. Soap the bow, young man, soap the bow, and bathe the strings twice a day in sweet oil. Then you can sit up all night and play overtures, and nobody will mind it.

An Irishman who had a pig in his back yard was observed to adopt the constant practice of filling it to repletion one day and starving it the next. On being asked his reason for doing so he replied, "Och, sure, and isn't it that I like to hav bacon with a strake o' fat and a strake o' lane, aiqually, one after the t'other?"

"Yes," said the witness, "I remember the defendant's mother crying on the occasion referred to. She was weeping with her left eye—the only one she has—and the tears were running down her right cheek." "What!" exclaimed the judge, "how could that be?" "Please, your honor," said the witness, "she was awfully cross-eyed!"

An agent who had sold a Dutchman some goods was to deliver them at the residence of the purchaser. The Dutchman gave him the following directions: "You shoost goes behind de church; den you turns up de right for a while till you comes to a house mit a pig hog in der yard. Dot's me."

A gentleman being threatened with an infectious fever, said to his little son who in an affectionate mood wished to embrace him, "You musn't hug me; you'll catch the fever." Willie, standing back, looked in amazement upon his papa, who, by the way, is a pattern of propriety, and quickly asked, "Why, papa, who did you hug?"

She chucked him under the chin, and then
I saw him seize her hand;
The light from her diamond ring it flashed,
Like a star supremely grand.
I heard him whisper of love and truth,
But she turned away her head,
And told the beautiful smiling youth
She'd rather hav cream instead.

WANTED.

A healthy, activ Bath Woman, and to do dining-room work in Dr. Lyon's boarding house and Hygeian Home. Address
Dr. J. S. LYON, M.D.,
1t32 Box 247, Springfield, Mo.

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. " | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Scieta. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New Age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangeli | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 3 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 2 |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

Wanted.

A widow of thirty-two would like to correspond with an educated Liberal-minded gentleman. Address Sincerity, care of Truth Seeker office. 4t32

100 Genuin Transparent Cards sent for 25 cents (silver). J. C. Keen, Salem, Me. 1t33

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

"Salem, Or., July 17, 1880.
"S. H. Preston, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100,00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.
"Dr. Mary Solander."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is Simple, Safe, Infallibly Reliable, necessary to Health and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5 00; improved, $10,00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON, tf32 209 West 34th st., New York.

GODSEND TO THE SEX

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 34. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, August 21, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE eloquence of a Wisconsin divine on the iniquity of any money dealings on the Sabbath had such a telling effect on his enthralled audience that not a cent appeared in the collection plate.

IN the sanctimonious village of Delhi, Delaware county, a man was recently fined $1 and costs for taking a load of hay out of his barn, spreading it out to dry, and then returning it, all on Sunday.

THE Prussian Government, it is said, are seriously thinking of abolishing civil marriage. They profess to be shocked at the wide and rapid spread of irreligion and rationalism, and consider that some step like that contemplated is necessary to recall the people to a sense of their religious duties.

G. M. MAIR and D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, are debating the questions of the origin of bibles, gods, and religions, and "all that the names imply" in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Mair handles his side of the case with more ability than has any other of his class of religionists.—Cloud County (Kas.) Blade.

THE Athenæum says that the publication of the revised version of the New Testament will not take place until the spring of 1881, when the Greek texts will, no doubt, be completed. The editorial work, as regards the revised English version, has been intrusted by the universities to the Rev. J. Troutbeck, the secretary of the New Testament Company.

D. M. BENNETT, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, is claimed as an accession to the Hancock rank. The Democracy are welcome to him.—Terre Haute Express. Now let pagan Bob Ingersoll and Dr. Monroe of the Seymour Times flop into our ranks and make it unanimous for Hancock. The Lord is on our side this year and so are all the Christians.—Albany Ledger-Standard.

GEN. JAS. A. GARFIELD is the Republican candidate for President. Gen. W. S. Hancock is the Democratic candidate. Gen. James B. Weaver is the Greenback candidate. Gen. Neal Dow is the Prohibition candidate. Gen. Jno. W. Phelps of Vermont is the Anti-Masonic candidate. Gen. Susan B. Anthony is the Female Suffrage candidate. Gen. D. M. Bennett is the Liberal candidate, and the ghost of Gen. Geo. Washington is the Spiritualists' man. Socialists, Babies in long clothes, and the Chinese citizens are yet to hear from.—Mt. Pleasant (Pa.) Times.

RABELAIS, whose statue has just been unveiled at Tours, was some time Doctor of Medicine in the University of Montpelier, monk of the Franciscan Abby of Seuilly, near Chignon, and curate of Meudon, near Paris, where he died in his seventieth year, in 1553. To the French clericals Rabelais, although he was patronized by popes and petted by cardinals, is as much of a "bete noire" as the loathed Voltaire himself. Rabelais did the monastic orders of his time in France far greater harm than Henry VIII. had done them in England. The bluff king only turned them out of their convents and robbed them of their land, but the great satirist robbed them of their good name and held them up to ridicule.

ONE of the "tallest yarns" heard for a long time is the story of W. H. O. Billmire, sexton of the Mt. Vernon Methodist Episcopal church of Baltimore, who disappeared last October with $3 000 pew money. He says he was decoyed away from his home, taken into a hack, knocked down, chloroformed, and robbed. Afterwards he says he found himself upon a vessel in Chesapeake Bay, from which, when upon the ocean, he was transferred to a small boat and set adrift. He was picked up by a ship and taken to Hong Kong, from whence he worked his way back. Although Mr. Billmire is very pious, his story is doubted, and he will hav a chance to prove it in a court where romancing is at a discount.

WHILE at mass last Sunday a congregation at Glendore, Ireland, were placed in imminent peril by the good Lord they were worshiping. A freshet swept through the edifice carrying everything before it. Many were drowned, but the priest succeeded in getting on to high ground and was saved, which is regarded as providential or otherwise, according to the bias of the reader. It is curious that the Lord should hav chosen to drown the people who went to church, while the sinners who stayed away were left undisturbed. According to the "fitness of things," he ought to hav pointed a lesson to the worldly by taking them and leaving the worshipers. But "his ways are not man's ways," and if the pious are satisfied with his mode of conducting his business the worldly ought to be.

THE Cincinnati Enquirer some time ago had the following bit of political gossip. It is interesting reading since the nominations: Bob Ingersoll, you know, was an applicant for the Spanish Mission, and Blaine interested himself in his behalf, making a direct appeal to Hayes in his behalf. He didn't get the appointment, though, and everybody said it was because Mrs. Hayes put her veto on it. The fact was that John Sherman went to Hayes and interfered in the matter, holding up his hands in holy horror at the idea that the Republican party, the party of morality, the protector of religion, and all such stuff, should send abroad a rank Infidel to represent it at a foreign court. Blaine heard of it indirectly through Schurz, who is as much of an Infidel as Ingersoll, though he does hold a place in Hayes' cabinet, and he put Mr. Sherman's name down in a little blank book to be remembered.

THE Ohio man, says Peck's Sun, is always the leader in all new enterprises. Last Sunday a sad-looking young man entered a church at Columbus, Ohio, and whispered to the sexton that he would like a front seat, as he was very deaf. The sexton looked into the faded blue eyes of the applicant for a front seat, and with a sigh led him to the extreme front, where he could gaze down the throat of the reverend expounder. The service proceeded, and the deaf man took it all in. When the orchestra struck up he gazed at the soprano as though her sweet voice was music to his left ear. He took a libretto and followed the course of the opera like a thoroughbred, and when the collection was taken up he chipped in a lead quarter as though it was lead cast upon the waters, which would return in about seven minutes. When the minister asked the conundrum, "Let us pray," and closed his eyes, the deaf man knelt down, the choir went to sleep, and all was quiet as a store that does not advertise. Then the deaf man crawled to the table where the corn-popper was that contained the collection money, emptied the contents into his hat, and lit out, with the sexton and two deacons following him. He was a fraud. Now when a deaf man comes to that church the sexton knocks him down and drags him out on the steps.

THE Commissioners of Immigration of this city a short time ago issued an order which displeases very much the city "missionaries" of the various denominations, who look upon Castle Garden as a fishing ground whereon they catch gudgeons of all sorts and sizes. By this order they were placed upon the same footing as other boarding-house runners, being excluded from access to the Garden till the officers of the Board had finished their connection with the immigrants. The reason for the order was the continued complaints that the "missionaries" were using their privilege to influence the sale of tickets and of land and the exchange of money, receiving therefor commissions from the railroad agents and money brokers. The missionaries admit keeping boarding-houses, where immigrants are charged $1.50 to $2.00 per day, and the taking of commissions for the sale of tickets and lands, but claim they do it for the good of the immigrants, as in their houses religious instruction is thrown in with the hash and beans free gratis for nothing. Just how free prayers and sermons aid the immigrants they do not state, and it is more than probable the immigrants would willingly dispense with them if they could get through New York to the West without being robbed at every turn by boarding-house keepers, religious and otherwise.

MASSACHUSETTS has a rigorous but neglected law that "whoever travels on the Lord's day, except from necessity or charity, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10 for each offense." This statute was enacted as late as 1836, and is only a slight modification of the statute of 1692, which said, "No traveler, driver, horse courser, wagoner, butcher, higgler, or any of their servants shall travel on that day or any part thereof, except by some adversity they are belated and forced to lodge in the woods, wilderness, or highways the night before; and in such case to travel no further than the next inn or place of shelter on that day, upon the penalty of 20s." The existing statute was habitually taken advantage of by railroad and steamboat companies in case of accidents on Sunday, the defense being successfully made when suits for damages were brought, that the injured persons were violating the law by traveling on Sunday, and therefore could hav no legal status in the proceedings. However, in the case of a man who, while driving in Boston on Sunday, was bitten by a dog, the Supreme Court has just decided that, "though the plaintiff was illegally traveling on the Lord's day, his illegal act was not a contributing cause of his injury, so as to defeat his right to recover." Another recent case was that of a man who, having gone to the funeral of a relativ on Sunday, rode out of his way to call on a friend. He was injured by reason of a hole in the street, and sued the city for damages. The decision is against him.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH is having all the law, it would seem, that one man can handle. Besides being sued by a Mr. Henry Lewis Clarke for sitting and voting as M. P. without having taken the oath (the penalty for which is a fine of £500), he has been obliged to sue a few newspapers for libel. In his proceedings against the Yorkshire Post for one very gross slander, he is obliged to answer interrogatories not only as to doctrins he has taught and works he has published during the whole of his life, but also to works he may hav happened to refer to. Although these hav little or nothing to do with the matter they are relied on to warp the minds of religious jurymen, and are calculated to greatly annoy Mr. Bradlaugh by putting him to great expense. In his suit against the editor of another paper, the British Empire, he will, probably hav to summon large numbers of witnesses from various parts of England to speak of what happened at lectures delivered as far back as 1860. His friends wish him to sue a few more, but he says he is not rich enough to afford the luxury. He asks his friends to constitute themselvs advocates for him and fight his battles where he is slanderously assailed by electioneering opponents. Mrs. Besant will probably on her own account sue Sir John Hay and the Glasgow News for what Mr. Bradlaugh calls an "infamous, most cowardly, and utterly uncalled for attack." Mr. Bradlaugh foreshadows the necessity of severe retaliations on the Tory leaders who permit their followers to make unrebuked these indefensible attack upon himself and Mrs. Besant.

PRACTICAL philosophy, according to the Detroit Free Press: "Walkin' ont dis mawnin' to behole de bewtiful in natur'," began President Gardner as he arose "my mind recollected dat I had been axed to splain de true secret o' happiness. In de fust place, when am a man happy? Is it when he has lots o' money—when he has fixed his enemy—when he travels an' sees de world—when he has a good home? An' how many grades of happiness kin you count up? An' what am happiness, when you boil it down? Happiness, as an old black man like me defines it," continued brother Gardner, "am not sto' cloze, a fat wallet, a big house an' ice cream ebery night afore you go to bed. When I looked about me arter a wife I didn't look fur anything gaudy. I knew I mus' ma'ry a black woman or none at all. I knew she'd be away off on her Greek an' Latin, an' so when I got my ole woman I war' not a bit dis'pinted. She am as good as I am, an' what more can I ask? When I war' free to start out I reasoned dat I mus' job 'round at dis an' dat, kase I had no trade. I nebber counted on havin' more dan a cord of wood an' five bushels of 'taters ahead, an' I nebber hav had. I knew I'd hav to liv in a small house, own a cheap dog, liv an' dress plainly, an' keep dis black skin to de grave, an' it has all happened jist as I 'spected. I am happy kase I hav'n't 'spected too much. I am happy kase I doan't figger on what I havn't got. I am happy kase I reason dat de weather can't allus be fa'r, money can't allus be plenty, good health can't allus last, an' yer bes' fr'ends can't allus be counted on. If dar' am any secret of happiness I believe it am dis, an' we will now begin de reg'lar bizness of de occashun."

Events of the Week.

RICHMOND, Quebec, is a sufferer by a recent fire to the extent of $75,000.

ADELAIDE NEILSON, the celebrated actress, died suddenly in Paris on the 15th.

A SIX-DAY go-as-you-please race between men and horses is announced to take place in Chicago soon.

TWENTY-ONE Nihilists were recently tried at Kieff, Russia. Two were condemned to death, the rest to penal servitude.

THE Jesuits in Spain are accused of instigating a movement to place the very pious pretender Don Carlos on the Spanish throne.

IT is rumored that Russia has been assisting the Afghans in their recent demonstrations against the English army of occupation.

A HOME rule demonstration at Glasgow, Scotland, on the 14th was attended by thirty thousand Irishmen from all parts of Scotland.

SIX men were poisoned by eating watermelons, recently, in Falls county, Texas, dying in a few minutes after partaking of the fruit.

IN a recent contest at Creedmoor rifle range between Canadian and American riflemen, the Americans were victors by thirty-eight points.

Two trotters, Maud S. and St. Julien, made the fastest time on record on the Rochester track on the 12th. Each trotted a mile in 2:11½.

THE well-known English philanthropist and millionaire Lady Burdett-Coutts is about to be married. She is seventy-seven, he is twenty-eight.

FORTY-FIVE young ladies became "brides of the church" at one fell swoop in Baltimore, Md., on the 14th. They hav entered the convent of Notre Dame in Baltimore county.

A RAILROAD conductor on the Northern Pacific Railroad killed his wife and immediately afterward put a bullet through his own head at Minneapolis, Minn., on the 13th.

A LAWYER in Bath, New York, who had been clandestinely married to a young lady against the wishes of her parents, recently shot and killed his wife and then blew his brains out.

A WHARF at Mount Hope, Mass., upon which were standing a large number of excursionists, broke down, a few nights ago, throwing them into the river. How many were drowned is not known.

A PARTY of grain speculators who some time ago purchased sixteen million bushels of wheat in order to make a "corner" and control the market, hav been compelled to sell out at a loss of several million dollars.

THE Hudson River Tunnel Company continue to pay the wages of the twenty drowned men to their widows, and will do so until the tunnel is finished. The bodies of the victims will not be recovered for a month yet.

FIVE hundred workmen are lying idle at Rockaway Beach, unable to leave, and many of them actually suffering for food, because the builders of a new hotel are unable to pay them the money due them for their services.

ONE thousand pounds of powder exploded in the railroad station at Red Hill, Col., on the 13th, blowing the depot and every building in the place to atoms, and killing two men and injuring three others, one of them fatally.

AMBITIOUS young men in different parts of the country are trying Dr. Tanner's plan of fasting for forty days, but generally giv in after a few days' trial. Dr. Tanner is now as strong and hearty and good-looking as ever.

A PARTY of men boarded a vessel at Queenstown, Ireland, not long since, and, after securing the captain and crew, took several cases of rifles from the cargo. It is said to hav been a plan arranged by the Fenians to get the arms landed.

Two loaded passenger trains crashed together at May's Landing, N. J., on the 11th, instantly killing fifteen passengers and injuring fifty others. The trains were going the same way at full speed, and only a short distance apart. The foremost train stopped suddenly and the rear train plunged into it, with the above result.

Communications.

The Proprieties which Should be Observed on the Occasion of Birth, Marriage, and Death.

There are in the lives of most persons three events which are recorded in the family register, published in the newspapers, and considered epochs—birth, marriage, and death. Thus we say of a man, such a thing occurred ten years before he was born; such another took place the year after he was married, and such another five years before he died. Our opinions and customs hav all come down to us from our ancestors, modified by the great law of evolution, and we hav a right to sit in judgment on them and thus carry on the process of change and improvement. The writer of this article thinks that in regard to the three events named there is great room for improvement in our thoughts and ways, and hence he calls the attention of those readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who are Spiritualists to the subject, hoping it will not be considered undeserving of their attention.

The Spiritualists are a distinct class of people in their opinions concerning Man's place and destiny in the Universe; and from those opinions, when they grow into convictions, inferences can be made which are very far-reaching in their beneficial effects upon society. Many customs are founded on dogmas in religion which modern science proves to be false. Spiritualism, in its grand phenomena, makes no claims to supernaturalism, but entirely repudiates it. It needs, therefore, as a reform movement, no priesthood, no church in the ecclesiastical meaning of the word, no revelation written in books, no prospectiv psalm-singing and playing on golden harps in heaven, and no fear of hell-fire where the Almighty Father, for the sins of this ephemeral life, will torment the great majority of his children to all eternity. A people so advanced in thought and so rational in their views ought to bring those views to bear practically on the topics I hav named above, and thus become in a good sense a peculiar people. Let us consider them in order:

I. Birth.—I migrated with a wife and one child from the East, forty odd years ago, to the spot in what was then called the West where I now liv and where I expect to die. The church we then worshiped with consisted of about one hundred and thirty families, pretty much all farmers. Not ten persons took a newspaper of any kind, and scarcely a house had more books in it than a Bible and psalm book. Vendues and election days gave the men an opportunity to meet and talk over neighborhood affairs, and the birth of a child furnished the occasion for all the old women within the compass of a mile to be present, either voluntarily, if old acquaintances, or on invitations. It was a day or night devoted to gossip, and as every venerable matron knew when such an event was expected, she put in an appearance in her best apparel, and with her pipe and tobacco in her pocket, valued the opportunity of meeting her friends and neighbors to hear and talk about the news that it was not deemed proper to touch upon in the interval of public worship on the "holy Sabbath."

When the first child in my family was born after my settling down as a farmer, the only woman present with my wife, besides the doctor, was her own mother. As no one else was invited, and no one knew that such an event was anticipated, the dear old women all around lifted their eyebrows in amazement at the secrecy observed, as if we expected some monstrosity to be born which we did not want the people to see. The doctor, who entirely approved of this arrangement, said that he had been called in on a similar occasion when the house, consisting of only one room besides the kitchen, was filled by no less than twenty-three women, all smoking in turns each other's tobacco pipes, and all ready and willing to help the expected stranger to put in an appearance on the present breathing stage of his existence. If the poor little fellow had been conscious of his rights at that early period how he would hav protested against the contamination of the atmosphere when he took his first breath of it, and thought what a smoky world he had been ushered into. Perhaps it was, and perhaps it was not, this custom which prevailed among the Scotch-Irish population of western Pennsylvania, and which they inherited from their ancestors in the old country, of having their children born in a cloud of tobacco smoke, which prepared them, when they grew up, to believe the doctrins of the Athanasian Creed, which, of all the productions of the human intellect since the world began, is the most remarkable for nebulosity. The fogs of London, and of the Banks of Newfoundland, where you cannot discern an object ten feet before you, are like sunny Italy, when compared to the smokiness of the orthodox creed on the doctrin of the Holy Trinity, where it is taught among other propositions, and expected to be believed on pain of eternal damnation, that a child can be as old as his father, nay, that a child can even beget his own father!

There was a lot more of children born, seriatim, in our house, and as no invitations were ever sent out to the neighboring women to be present, the people began to think that the old custom, after all, was more honored in the breach than the observance of it.

In respect to birth the lower animals seem to hav a finer sense of delicacy than many people hav. The cow retires from the herd, and goes into the bushes, or some obscure corner of the field, when she is about to be delivered of her offspring; the ewe leaves the rest of the sheep, and so do the hen and other animals, when they perform the duties of maternity. I suppose it is really for the safety of their young that they do so, but it looks so modest in them that I prefer to giv them credit for such motivs.

The custom I hav alluded to, and which prevails so extensivly still in the rural districts of the country, of making the birth of a child a public neighborhood affair should be done away. Nature, who is our teacher in manners as well as morals, dictates that at such a time the utmost privacy should be observed; not that there is anything shameful in the process of parturition, from beginning to end, but for the good of the mother, if she be a delicate, sensitiv woman, and on the score of decency.

II. Marriage.—When the child passes into its "teens," as our Saxon ancestors called that interesting period of life lying between twelve and twenty, then comes that wonderful desire for giving and accepting love, which leads ultimately to marriage. Surely there must be some grand destiny of honor and of happiness for the human family to enjoy in the distant ages of the future, or Nature, which is God, would not, seemingly, lend all her energies to secure the perpetuation of the race by implanting within us the sentiment of love, which is so deep and so omnipotent. If the scheme of the universe is worthy of a God; and if it cannot be carried out without the agency of man; and if man cannot be born without the agency of love in all its manifestations, let the ignoramuses quit slandering it by calling it "the baser passion of our nature." It is the most noble, divine, and godlike of all our capabilities. A man or woman incapable of the sentiment of love is hardly human; and those who disparage love, especially in its sexual and creativ manifestations, are blasphemers of God, the essence of whose attributes is expressed in the Bible by the very word "Love." Therefore the desire to giv and receive love is as natural, as beautiful, and as lawful as the desire for food and air. Future generations as they roll on, and read the history of this and past ages, and see how little their ancestors understood of the nature and true meaning of Love as a force in civilization, will heap curses, loud and deep, on the church, whose false teachings on the subject hav made her mainly responsible for the terrible results of this ignorance. It was she who has put dishonor upon woman as woman, upon sex itself, and upon the divine institution of marriage. And, but for her planting her polluted carcass in the way of progress, the human race would be to-day a thousand years farther on in intelligence and happiness than it now is.

In ancient times, and in the northern nations from which we sprang, where there is a long struggle with the elements through the whole year to procure a livelihood, marriage was deemed a public event on account of the property involved by the new alliance, and because society felt it had a right to know, when a child was born, who were responsible for its support. Marriage, therefore, was only a public recognition of a private and natural responsibility. In hot climates, on the contrary, where nature is so lavish of her gifts as to dispense with any energy or foresight concerning the matter of food and clothing, and where a child can be raised to manhood at a very trifling expense, it is not a matter of much importance how many are born, nor who their parents are.

In this country marriage is declared, by the highest judicial authority, to be merely a civil contract, and needs no more publicity than the act of signing any other article of agreement. Taking the law at its word, the proper way of marriage is for the parties to go to the appointed officer of the state, and there read, and hav recorded, the article of agreement, signed by both, in which they simply declare themselves to be husband and wife. The wrong and falseness of the religious marriage service now in vogue is that the clergyman, who is allowed—most inconsistently under a purely secular government—to act as God's vicegerent for the occasion, requires a promis of unqualified obedience on the part of a woman to the man; and not only so, but an unqualified promis from both parties to love each other till separated by death, when, on further acquaintance, it may turn out to be impossible for them to do so. Love is an involuntary affection, and comes into being under the law of mutual attraction. Belief in a theological dogma is also an involuntary act of the mind, and is governed by the amount of evidence which the mind sees. But as the church in her cruelty and stupidity requires a man to believe a dogma on pain of eternal damnation whether his reason will allow him to accept it or not, so she also extorts the promis in marriage that a woman shall love her husband until death separate them, when she does not know whether it is possible to do so or not. She also compels the woman to promis obedience to the man, without any qualification, when she may be notoriously superior to him in point of mind and attainments, which alone fits any one to giv advice to, and require obedience from, others! And then, when these blind promises are made, this presumptuous mortal and self-styled "Embassador of Jesus Christ" exposes the arrogance and emptiness of his claims to be such, by announcing in solemn tones that God, the Almighty, has joined the parties together, and that no authority has a right to put them asunder; and all this, when, in the course of a few years, the married pair find that the kind of love which brought them together has turned into such loathing and hate that to relieve them from their domestic hell the civil authorities are invoked to grant them a divorce! What pueril conceptions of God some people hav, that he attends at a wedding, where his embassador officiates as his mouthpiece, and inseparably unites a couple in marriage for life, when in a year or two afterward, the parties seek and procure a divorce, undoing, nullifying, and falsifying what God by his clerical agent had done!

In the New York Nation, No. 767, is the notice of a book published in Genoa last year, entitled, "Women in the Old Genovese Society," in which this statement occurs which bears heavily in favor of the doctrin we inculcate: "The priests had a large part in arranging these bargains—matrimonial bargains—especially, in the later times, the Jesuits. But it is very noteworthy that before the Council of Trent, in 1545, the church had no necessary part in the solemnization of nuptials. There was no religious ceremony whatever. Matrimony was contracted simply by the couples expressing their consent, after which they embraced and kissed and the husband put a ring on the wife's hand. That act completed the ceremony secundem vitum sanctæ ecclesiæ Romanæ et consuetudinem civitates Ianuæ. But for the sake of having an indisputable record of the act, it was customary either that a notary should be present or that the event should be fixed in the minds of a large number of persons by the old Roman traductio—the passage of the bride from her parents' house, where the ceremony took place, to her husband's, in company with the marriage guests. The witnesses in this case were all the dwellers on the way, and the crowds of idle folk and children attracted by the show, and the showers of nuts, freely distributed, just as in pagan times." From this it appears that the idea of marriage as a sacrament, instead of a civil and social institution, was an innovation upon the established customs of centuries and is only of church authority.

One of the customs connected with public marriage which shows the pride, selfishness, and heartlessness of mere wealth is the giving and acceptance of presents. Let me state the case. The daughter of a rich man is about to be married, and although it is entirely problematical whether or no the marriage will be a happy one, and not end in uncongeniality, and ultimate divorce, the bride, groom, parents, and friends all take it for granted that it is to be a true wedding of hearts and interests, which is the essential idea of marriage; and therefore, when the time comes, it is made the occasion of great display of fine jewelry, expensiv clothing, and the receiving of presents as tokens of love and good will. Sometimes they are very valuable, but seldom fit for use. It is expected that all invited to the wedding should bring their contributions, and as no one wishes to be considered either poor or mean, there is a rivalry whose shall be the handsomest and most expensiv. In many cases the givers feel that it is injustice to their own families to make these presents; but now, especially Americans, who could, without a quiver, face a loaded cannon in war, hav not the courage to violate the canons of fashion, and be considered poor; and hence they send their useless contributions where they minister to nothing but pride and vanity.

After while, a school companion of the wealthy bride, perhaps a noble, intelligent girl, comes to be married. Her father is not rolling in useless wealth. No church opens its doors to admit to the altar the long train of bridesmaids glittering in gold and jewels; and no crowd of people gather there to see the ceremony performed by the surpliced priest. His daughter is married at home. A very small table will hold the presents that are given on this occasion; and the contrast between the splendor of the first marriage and the plainness of this is the subject of observation and remark, both by the bride and her friends; and their feelings are cruelly wounded—all to giv an empty glory to wealth and its fashions. And this leads me to say that, if I were a man of wealth, and had daughters to marry, rather than inflict such suffering on the sensitiv soul of an intelligent, good, but poor girl, I would hav them all married in ten-cent calico dresses. In this democratic country, where one man is consciously the equal of every other man politically, the pomposity of wealth rubs roughly on the sore places of human nature, and its selfishness and heartlessness lay up wrath against the day of wrath. I would rejoice in the wealth of men if they only knew the profound secret of human happiness, that "it is more blessed to giv than to receive." But excessiv wealth always brings into existence its opposit—excessiv poverty, and in this country poverty is armed.

In many cases these favored girls who so thoughtlessly excite the envy of their fellows are the daughters of men who began life poor and uncultivated, both in manners, taste, and intellect, but who suddenly "struck oil" in the East, or found a "bonanza" in the West that made them worth millions. I hav seen some of these parvenus, who, although dining off silver plates, still blow their noses with the thumb and forefingers, and then wipe them on a fine cambric handkerchief. For, to step aside a moment from our track of thought, the highest and last triumph of civilization over barbarism will be to teach a man what to do in an emergency with that part and function in the human body corporate, called in common parlance the nose. He will see the impropriety of, and quit squirting tobacco spittle all over the carpet; he will quit picking his teeth at the table with the tine of his silver fork, or the blade of his pocket-knife; he will cease the wholesome practice of eructating the gases of his stomach into the faces of his guests; he will giv up a score of other vulgarities which proclaim aloud his former low condition in the world of decency; but he will not relinquish the natural and God-given right and custom of blowing his nose in his fingers, no matter who takes offense.

The event of marriage ought to be quiet, and to attract no extraordinary attention. Courtship, except by empty-headed fools, although it is a very beautiful and charming thing, always seeks privacy; and marriage is but the sequel of courtship. Marriage, being at best, in our present undeveloped state, a lottery, where the chances are one to twenty whether the parties do not draw blanks instead of prizes, persons ought to protect themselvs against future pungency of remark by those who may remember the pageantry of the wedding day, and contrast its brightness with the gloomy failure to realize its promises.

Besides, delicacy and self-respect, it seems to me, require marriage to be private. What is a public fashionable marriage, announced by a flourish of trumpets, but a proclamation to the whole world on the part of a young lady that now her sweetheart will be allowed, and is about to take, personal liberties with her which he never did before? This is immodest. This invites thoughts and words which are anything else than chaste. If women who are so ostentatiously married only knew what remarks they invite to be made by the vulgar rabble that congregate at the corners of the streets, and around bar-rooms and grocery stores, and other places of low resort, they would shrink from public display on such occasions and imitate the modesty of nature; for all other animals but wealthy high-fliers conduct the whole process of courtship and marriage in retiracy. The essential meaning of the word obscenity is, that it desecrates with publicity many acts and things which, although natural, beautiful, and proper in themselves to be done, are in their very nature private and sacred. Fully three-fourths of the doings of life belong to this class.

In Roman Catholic countries, where marriage is considered a religious sacrament, like Baptism, the Mass, or Confirmation; and where the family institution is deemed only the instrument of breeding members for the church, it is consistent enough to make a gala day of a wedding occasion. Our Protestant priesthood, in imitation of the Romish, hav attempted, in their own interest of course, to poison the minds of their people with the same error, by "celebrating" marriage in the church. But when the law of the land declares it to be only a legal contract between parties who propose to set up a new family dynasty, involving the realities of property to be disposed of at death, it ought to be treated as a quiet affair unattended with vulgar parade.

III. Death.—When a person has performed his part on the theater of life and makes his exit from the stage, the event is called death. Then the question arises what shall be done with the remains he leaves behind him in the shape of a dead body which cries aloud for its silent destiny. Here the heartlessness and cruelty of wealth again appear. Rich men, even in this democratic country, are not content with tawdriness and show all through life, but convert death itself into an occasion for gratifying this love of vulgar display; and hence expensiv public funeral ceremonies. All others are compelled to imitate their pernicious example or be exposed to the censure of not caring for their dead, or to the sneer of being poor. Families which hav been impoverished by cases of long sickness and doctor bills, are driven by fashion to wind up the scene by a funeral which costs ten times more than it ought to cost; and the undertakers hav so contrived it that no man, no matter what his pecuniary ability may be, can get into his grave without paying an exorbitant fee to him. A poor man in my neighborhood who owned only one acre of land, and whose small funds were all used up in a long and expensiv sickness, died some time ago; and the cost of a coffin and hearse was so great that the undertaker would not furnish them unless the family would find security for the payment of the bill. The daughter of the man, although in no condition to warrant it, had to tramp through the neighborhood, a very orthodox one, and could find none but a notorious Infidel to giv the necessary security; and so the old man was buried.

When a person dies, unless he is put to death as a malefactor, it is a private event, and ought so to be regarded. The remains, after being prepared for their final disposition, should be placed in a tight room, and the family and friends who hav been exhausted by long watching and sympathy should retire to rest. Why should the corpse be set up with and watched? There is no danger of its going away; and "wakes," as they are called, are mere popish superstitions, and notorious for jesting, drinking, feasting, and other practices, altogether unbecoming a house of mourning.

There are two methods of disposing of the bodies of the dead. First, by burial in the earth, where they putrify, then gradually decompose, and return into the original elements out of which they were composed; and, secondly, by cremation, which is only a speedy and tidy way of doing what the grave does gradually. When the hour arrives for putting the dead away out of our sight, if the first method of disposal is the one adopted, they should be quietly coffined and buried without a public exposure of the remains, and without the pageantry of a public funeral. The public hav a right to know by its appointed officer that a citizen has died naturally by disease and not by foul means, but beyond this they hav no rights. To expose the person of the dead in his coffin, after sickness and death hav done their worst upon his features, is a barbarism. Hundreds flock to a funeral, a few to manifest their respect to the deceased and his family, but the most to gratify an idle curiosity. Propriety suggests that the event, including the antecedent sickness, and the subsequent funeral, should be deemed entirely private. Living men are expected by custom, but without special invitation, to attend the funeral, and the house being full, they are expected to stand outside, often times in the most inclement weather, and expose their health, while an inconsiderate preacher, or perhaps a set of preachers, spends more than an hour in what he calls religious "exercises." Such exercises ought to be punctually begun and ended within twenty, or thirty minutes, unless the deceased person was an eminent public benefactor, whose funeral could be turned to good account to humanity, by holding up his example for the imitation of others.

Nature, teaching the doctrin that it is as natural to die as to be born, prompts all the tribes of animals, when they feel the sure admonition of approaching death, to go into retirement, and die unobservedly. The old buffalo on the prairie, when his time has come, retires quietly from the herd, and goes to the place where the bones of his kindred lie, and calmly, and without complaint, meets the event. Birds, fishes, and insects seek obscure places, and there await their fate without attracting the least attention. Man also, when he becomes old or fatally sick, ought to act in a like retired manner. But superstition, for its cruel and selfish purposes, has in all ages invested death with terror, and the funeral ceremonies hav been so managed as to perpetuate the bondage of fear, and the power of the priesthood over their credulous victims. But since the doctrin of immortal life has dawned upon the world by the advent of modern Spiritualism, the character of funeral ceremonies should be radically changed. Instead of the lugubrious tones of the priest, who seeks every chance to make merchandise for the good of his sect out of the sadness of death, the occasion should be one for the expression of cheerful hope, that the deceased friend has actually taken his first step on an ascending series which aims to reach the perfection of moral character and happiness. This is the doctrin that dries the tears of mourning friends, and encourages all to liv the life of the righteous man so that their last end may be like his.

There is a method of disposing of dead bodies which in time will come into vogue, and which on many accounts is preferable to burial in the earth. It is, by consuming the remains in a furnace, and thus reducing them to ashes quickly. The body is made up of more than a dozen elements of matter, and they must, by the eternal law of change, all go back, after death, and mingle with the universe, and enter into new forms of being. Near large towns, where hundreds of dead bodies are carried out to undergo the process of putrefaction in the grave, the soil and the air are tainted by the escaping gases, and the dead, who ought to do no more harm, actually incommode the living. To many people the loathsome destiny of the grave is appalling, when they think of it. If they could witness a case of cremation, and see the tidiness of it, they would be converted to the method. What is so pure as fire? How it cleanses and makes sweet everything it touches and consumes! I do not wonder at the old Persians worshiping fire, for it is the emblem of perfect purity.

Besides, this method is cheap. Dr. Lemoyne, late of Washington, Pa., who was the first in this country to erect a crematory for consuming dead bodies, told the writer of this, on the occasion of Baron De Palm's cremation, that the actual expense of a funeral need not be more than ten dollars. A cheap pine coffin to carry the body to the crematory; the wages of a man for his attention to the furnace, and the cost of the necessary fuel, would all be covered by the sum named. Then, if the friends of the deceased wished to preserve the ashes in an urn, to be deposited in the graveyard, no injury would be done to the public health, and the folly and expense of public funerals would be avoided. As for the ashes, Nature, which demands them, will sooner or later get them back for her own uses, whether she finds them in the crematory, or in the grave; for in one or two hundred years who will giv care or reverence to our ashes? Our children, and perhaps our grandchildren, may reverence them, but in the generations after them, no one on earth will either know, or care, that we ever lived. The Egyptians of the present day are selling their mummied ancestors as fuel for the boilers of steam engins; and what bones remain in tombs, to the English farmers as fertilizers for their crops.

But in view of the destiny which awaits us all, Spiritualism comes to our comfort by teaching us that our bodies are only the tabernacles of the spirit, and that when the tabernacle goes into ruins at death the soul bids it an eternal farewell, and has no more to do with it, and cares no more for it than we do for an old garment that has been worn out in our service, and is now thrown aside. The custom of cremating, instead of burying, dead bodies would soon come into vogue but for the credulity of the masses of Christians who hav been taught by an ignorant and superstitious priesthood to believe that the identical body which goes into the grave is the one that shall be resurrected therefrom at some day in the far distant future. And as fire seems to them to annihilate the matter it consumes they regard cremation as a bold attempt to cheat the Lord out of the bodies of his saints, and put them out of existence. But a greater obstacle in the way of a change of custom is the feelings of friends, against which no argument can avail, that the body in the coffin which was so lately and tenderly loved is not, after all, dead and insensible as a clod, but that on being introduced into a furnace of fire will suffer pain. This amiable weakness can only be cured by seeing a frequent repetition of the method. Change is the order of the whole universe of mind as well as matter, and the day will come when the horror of sending the delicious bodies of our friends and relativs down into the grave, there to undergo the loathsome process of decay, the exposure to the body-snatchers who are scattered all over the country, and whose rifling of graves would astound the public if they knew the facts, and the terrible liability, by a hasty funeral, of being buried alive, will get the better of mere feeling, and convince all that the beautiful and cleanly process of decomposing dead bodies by fire ought to become the universal practice.

The preceding considerations are respectfully submitted to the Spiritualists primarily, and to the Radicals generally, with the hope that in regard to the points discussed they will set a laudable example in practice to the rest of their fellow-citizens.

RUSTICUS.

Creed.

"I believe in God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only son, conceived by the Holy Ghost."

The above is the august commencement of the creed drilled into my juvenil cranium, in 1807, by an old Scotch Presbyterian pedagog.

Creed or no creed, 'tis manifest enough that somebody must do the conceiving as well as the begetting.

If we hav a "father in heaven," why not a mother in heaven? But is ghost the prettiest name for our holy eternal mamma?

We wouldn't, for a common sized world, offend, but how would it do to modernize our creed thusly?

We believe in God, father and mother, the vitalizing center of all vitality, and in all their sons and daughters, who by indomitable self-disciplin, squaring their every act, word, feeling, and thought by their divinest ideal of the true dignity of manhood and womanhood, come forth in the likeness of their holy eternal parentage.

We believe in the communion of saints (better not hav any sins) and in the resurrection of the body, clean above all unphysiological, all indelicate appetites and indulgences. And we believe in life everlasting. Amen. PRENTISS.

THERE were more deaths last year from scarlet fever than from the yellow fever, and yet we endure that contagious disease without making any organized effort to stop its ravages.—Foote's Health Monthly.

Discussion.

What Objections to Christianity?

MR. MAIR'S FIFTH LETTER.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: My last letter was incomplete. In it I endeavored to present the Christian doctrine of God with a view of contrasting with it the several religions from which you say it was derived. I shall resume, then, where I left off.

I might complain that I have more labor placed upon me as regards this than properly belongs to me, because I have to some extent to build up your argument. It seems more appropriate for you to give a portraiture of the religions from which you derive Christianity and show wherein they are similar. This, unless we accept mere assertion for argument and misrepresentation for truth, is in no wise attempted.* Nor should I be solicitous to thus fully criticise the loose, illogical comparisons adduced were it not that unbelievers, as a class, as far as my observation has been, very unreasonably accept the conclusions, assertions, and ridicule of others without any personal, painstaking research—a course which is certainly against the boasted genius of Freethinking. For instance, if Mr. Kersey Graves asserts that Christianity is derived from Buddhism, or you assert what you call mistakes of the Bible, hundreds forthwith accept the assertion and immediately imagine, as I once did, that to doubt revelation and scoff at the teachings of the scriptures is the evidence of an enlightened mind untrammeled by superstition—a noble freedom of thought, etc., etc.

It is a truth which is becoming more generally acknowledged and more susceptible of undeniable proof that the primitive religion of man was monotheistic, and that not only in the earliest age of man, but in the earliest Egyptian times, for instance, the true God was alone worshiped. But "when they knew God they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man and to birds and four-footed beasts and creeping things . . . and even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge God gave them over to a reprobate mind." This is the source of all idolatry and false creeds.

Before examining Buddhism, I might just refer to Brahmanism, its predecessor. Professor Max Müller writes, "Buddhism, in its historical growth, presupposes Brahmanism, and however hostile the mutual relation of these two religions may have been at different periods of Indian history, it can be shown without much difficulty that the latter was but the natural consequence of the former." You adduce Indra as a prototype of Christ, but it needs an imagination equal to the monster elephant on which he is painted as riding to discover a similarity. Says the learned authority just quoted, "The ancient religion of the Aryan inhabitants of India . . . started like the religion of the Greeks, the Romans, the Germans, Slavs, and Celts, with a simple and intelligent mythological phraseology." So far from their conceptions being similar to the biblical teaching, I can imagine nothing more unlike. Max Müller continues: "The religion of the Veda is polytheism, not monotheism. . . . There is hardly any part of nature, if it could impress the human mind in any way with the ideas of a higher power, of order, of eternity, or beneficence, whether the winds or the trees or the mountains, without a name or a representative in the Hindu pantheon." The gods were worshiped under many different names, yet which all reveal their idolatrous origin. Thus, of their gods, "Agni was fire; Prithivi, the earth; Dyu, afterwards Indra, the sky; Varuna, the waters. The sun was invoked by many names—Surya, Savitri, Vishnu, or Mitra; the dawn was Ushas, Urvasi, Ahana, and Sûrya; the moon, rarely Kandra, generally Soma, and each of its four phases has received its own denomination."

And this idolatrous superstition we are asked to believe is the source from which was derived that system which commands: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them. . . Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves, . . lest thou when thou seest the sun and the moon and the stars, even all the host of heaven, shouldst be driven to worship them and serve them."

"The religion of the Hindoos" says Mr. Maunder in the "Treasury of Science," "inculcates a belief in a supreme deity under the name of Brahma, who is an impersonal divine substance, the object merely of devout contemplation, not of worship. There is also Brahma, the creator of the universe, and the first of the trimurti or triad of divinities, of whom Vishnu the preserver and Siva the destroyer are others." As to the numerous rites and ceremonies of their belief, the most learned Brahmin is unable to explain them. "Brahma has few worshipers, Vishnu and Siva very many. Of Siva the greatest confusion exists as to his attributes—now he is the Preserver, now the Destroyer. In one of his characters, he delights in bloody sacrifices, and with reference to this the temple of Juggernaut was built and the notoriously cruel rites of the devotees practiced. His consort, Sakti, was the goddess of the Thugs."

This conception is alleged to be an original of which the Christian doctrine of the trinity is a copy. Credat Judæus Apella. Those who, having any intelligent knowledge of Brahmanism, receive this would seem fit candidates for Bedlam, and it would be really folly to attempt argument. But I presume that the vast majority know really nothing more of the Brahmanic triad than that it is popularly called a trinity, and therefore must resemble the Christian truth. I will stop to note a difference or two:

There is a superior divinity to the trinity.

It is triad of divinities, one of whom is a demon.

Two of them (Vishnu and Siva) have had several incarnations.

Most of these incarnations were monstrosities.

There is an inferiority between the persons of the triad.

They are not a trinity in unity.

They are of different disposition—in some cases antagonistic.

Their existence has never been alleged to have been proved by miracles.

Nor have they proved it by uttering prophecies.

Your account of Buddha is highly colored and stated with a certainty and circumstantiality to which no scholar versed in Buddhist studies would commit himself. Buddha himself claimed neither miracles, miraculous conception, nor divinity. Such claims bear about the same relation to Buddha's teaching as the immaculate conception and the invocation of saints do to the doctrines of Christ—that is, none at all. They are a foreign element and corruption. Mr. J. Ware Edgar writes in the current Fortnightly Review: "After the founder's (Buddha's) death, his legend seems to have grown with the usual rapidity. He was no longer the humanly begotten son of an earthly father, but had been conceived in a dream by a virgin mother and been brought forth with an accompaniment of portents and joyous signs presaging the mighty deliverance which he was about to work. Although his studies were neglected during his youth, yet when occasion arose he displayed more than human wisdom and confounded the most learned doctors by his questions and answers in turn. He was constantly pursued by the wiles of the Lord of Desire and Death, the demon of existence, who, with his three daughters, personifications of hunger, and love, and anger, was finally overcome by Sakyamuni (Buddha) in the great struggle under the holy tree at Gaya. These and many similar legends were not reduced to writing until a period much later in date than that of which I am now writing, and the books which contain them bear marks of having been written with a controversial purpose to meet objections to the authority claimed for the teachings of Sakyamuni, but I have little doubt that the greater part of the myth grew up in the first century after the Nirvana."

Compared with other false religions, it is the purest and best, and if there were the same evidences of its divinity (though of course only one religion can have these evidences) as there are of the divine inspiration of the scriptures, I too would take refuge in Buddha. But as compared with Christ, the most superficial examiners must see palpable differences. Take the myth of his miraculous conception, for instance.

There are no prophecies of it, and of his coming, in the hands of an expectant people years before his birth, describing it, his mission, his doctrines, etc.

It was not held by any for at least a century after his birth.

His conception is alleged to be from a star ray—which is impossible, because there is no such virtue in a star ray, and according to his system there is no God to miraculously produce that virtue in it for that occasion.

Christ's body was formed by the power of God without earthly means, which is neither impossible nor, if true, unreasonable.

A comparison of Christ and Buddha in their claims, lives, teaching, etc., shows too wide a difference to suggest that one is a copy of the other.

Christ was the God-man—God before his incarnation—having "become flesh" he was from his birth the God-man.

Buddha was never more than man; even after his enlightenment he was merely a wise man.

Christ constantly performed miracles and referred to them as proof of his authority and mission. Buddha never claimed miracles for himself.

Christ came into the world first to reveal truth; secondly to die for the salvation of his elect.

Buddha discovered truth as a scientist discovers it, and was in no sense a savior.

Christ never sinned, never erred, and was infallible.

Buddha sinned, made mistakes, and never claimed infallibility.

Buddha wasted the early years of his life in selfish gratification and enjoyment.

Christ never did his own will, but from the moment of his birth thought, said, and did only as God willed.

There were no previous prophecies descriptive of himself to which Buddha referred. Christ constantly referred to old prophecies as being fulfilled in him, proving his mission.

As to the teachings of Buddha, he and Christ are irreconcilably antagonistic, as you must allow. Mr. Edgar writes, in the article already referred to, "Buddha's teaching seems to have been purely ethical and not to have touched on either theology or philosophy." As to the substance of his doctrine Max Müller says, in the first volume of his "Chips from a German Workshop:" "Buddha denies the existence not only of a creator, but of any absolute being. . . There is no reality anywhere, neither in the past or in the future. True wisdom consists in perceiving the nothingness of all things and in a desire to become nothing, to be blown out, to enter into Nirvana. Emancipation is obtained by total extinction, not by absorption, in Brahma or by recovery of the soul's true estate." Can any teaching be more utterly dissimilar to Christ's, who constantly depended on God while on earth, and would not use his own power even to satiate the cravings of hunger until it was his Father's will? who taught immortality, not annihilation? the recovery of the soul, not its extinction? As to Christianity being derived from Buddha's system, would any but a deceiver or madman seriously affirm it? Yet I must give you and many of your readers credit for sincerity at least when you profess their belief in it.

You eulogize Buddhism because, believing (to quote your own words) "in an ultimate state of rest and quiet, I (you) insist that it is infinitely better and more happifying than the belief in endless and continuous torture in the flames of hell for the main bulk of the human race, which Christianity teaches." Did you ever read of the Bedagat? The Baptist missionary whom you call to the defense of Buddhism says of their belief as to punishments before Nirvana is reached: "Of the principal hells, four inflict punishment by heat, and the other four by cold. Each of them is ten thousand uzenas wide. In the sixteen minor hells the wicked suffer every conceivable misery not connected with cold or heat. Worms of vast size bite them, their bowels are torn out, their limbs racked, and their bodies lacerated or beaten with dreadful hammers. They are pierced with red-hot spits, crucified head downward, gnawed by dogs, and torn by vultures. These and a thousand other evils are described with minuteness in the Bedagat, and often depicted in the drawings of native artists. The inhabitants are six miles hight and are continually creeping and roaming about in the vast caves of their dreadful abodes.

"For killing a parent or a priest a man will suffer in one of the hells of fire the whole period of a sakiya system. To deny or disbelieve the doctrines of Guadama (Buddha) incurs ETERNAL suffering in fire. . . . Merit may be gained by good conduct in any of these hells, so that except the criminality has incurred eternal torment, the sufferers may rise again to become insects, beasts, men, nats," etc. (Malcom's Travels in Asia, pp. 187, 188.)

The abhorrence you express for the Christian doctrine of eternal punishment is probably largely based on a misunderstanding of scriptural teaching. It is not an arbitrary penalty, nor is it the positive decree of God, but every man who finds himself in hell will only have to thank himself for it. "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live, turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die?" "God our Savior, who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." Alas! to how many do the words of Jesus apply? "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Yet, God be thanked, that he will not allow his infinite love to be utterly abused, but in his sovereign grace "plucks as brands from the burning" his own elect, who though "by nature the children of wrath even as others," even when they were dead in trespasses and sins he quickens them by his Spirit and bestows faith in Jesus Christ, to the eternal salvation of their souls. Oh that this may be the blessed lot of the writer and every reader.

The quotations you adduce as to the influence of Buddhism and the character of the Burmans, I am sorry to say are garbled and so quoted as to convey what the person thus quoting must have known were falsehoods. Let me supply some things which have been omitted: "Gratitude is a virtue of great rarity. They never on receiving a present or any favor make any acknowledgment; nor is there any phrase in the language equivalent to 'I thank you.'" "Thieving and pilfering are common, but perhaps not more so than in other countries, and much less so than we might expect considering the frail and accessible nature of their houses. These crimes, too, are perpetrated by a few of the baser sort, and cannot be regarded as stamping the character of the nation." "Sometimes gangs of robbers circumvent a house, and while some plunder it, others preclude all aid. Boats are frequently robbed. . . . Murder not unfrequently accompanies these depredations.

* I see that Mr. Bennett attempts a comparison between several religions and Christianity at the close of his answers to my fourth letter, but after the MS. of this was written and consequently too late for me to revise my remarks without greatly altering the arrangement of my argument.

"Lying, though strictly forbidden in the sacred books, prevails among all classes. They may be said to be a nation of liars. They never place confidence in the word of each other, and all dealing is done with chicanery and much disputing. Even when detected in a lie no shame is manifested; of course there are honorable exceptions to this general character, as there are in the other vices.

"There, perhaps, never was a people more offensively proud. From the monarch, who adopts the most grandiloquent titles he can invent, to the pettiest officer, every man seems bloated with self-conceit."

"In general they are uncleanly. Some regard, to be sure, ought to be had to the light fabrics they wear . . . Burmans are fond of appearing neat, and the better classes when seen abroad are generally very tidy, but their skin, their hair, and their houses are decidedly slovenly. . . Very little is accomplished toward removing the filth from their bodies by their daily ablutions, as they seldom use soap, and their skin is generally more or less moistened with oil. Few are without vermin in their heads, and washing common clothes is done at very distant intervals." "Polygamy is authorized by law, but is exceedingly rare, except among the higher classes. . . . Divorces are shockingly common." So you see, my dear sir, Burmah is not, after all, the Garden of Eden.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Postal Laws—Should We Submit to Them?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Our friend W. S. Bush, Esq., in your issue of Aug. 7th, tacitly takes it for granted that Garfield and the Republicans will do nothing to release us from the Comstock laws. He thinks we should all go for Garfield, and therefore he consistently makes the burden of his letter an effort to induce the Liberals to giv up their opposition to those laws.

In your last issue I think I proved the futility of the new reasons Mr. Bush brought forward to prove that those laws are constitutional. Now I will try to dispose of his attempts to show that those laws are not very bad after all—are indeed quite tolerable. He urges that as to printed matter, the right of post-office examinations is restricted to ascertaining whether there should be "a higher rate of postage thereon," and that matter paying letter postage, "whether obscene or not, is carefully guarded from inspection, search, or seizure."

THE MAILS NOT SAFE.

Mr. Bush is evidently too innocent to deal with Mr. Comstock and his friends. They hav, of course, too much of the serpentine wisdom to put upon the open statute what they do or intend. But a slight inspection of these laws will show that they hav practically placed all printed matter, all letters, and even all registered letters suspected of being "objectionable," within the control of the postal officers and agents to do their own sweet will with them without "let or hindrance" or any punishment whatever.

Now turn to the statutes. The main act of July 12, 1876, U. S. Statutes 19, p. 90, printed at the end of my Faneuil Hall speech, declares the matter referred to to be "non-mailable matter, NOT TO BE CONVEYED IN THE MAILS nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter carrier," and then it provides terrible and unpostal penalties for any one depositing the same in or taking it from the mails.

The reader will notice that "the matter" is not to be conveyed in the mails at all—i. e., under any circumstances! But are not postal officers obliged, under penalties, to forward all matter mailed? No; for a part of these very laws provide the exception, thus giving permission to do the contrary.

Section 145 of the Act of June 8, 1872 (17 Stats. 301), provides "That any postmaster who shall UNLAWFULLY detain in his office any letter or other mail matter, THE POSTING OF WHICH IS NOT PROHIBITED BY LAW, with intent to prevent the arrival and delivery of the same to the person to whom it is addressed, shall, in conviction thereof, forfeit and pay not exeeeding five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, and he shall be forever thereafter incapable of holding the office of postmaster."

The reader will see at once that "the matter" prohibited by law—that is, as the law now stands, all matter deemed to be obscene, relating to prevention of conception, to lotteries, or generally all matter deemed to be fraudulent—can be detained without penalty.

But how is the postal officer to know that the matter is of the various kinds prohibited? By the following section of the same law it will be seen how he is to know it:

§ 137. That "Postmasters at the office of delivery may remove the wrappers and envelopes from mail-matter not charged with letter-postage nor lawfully franked, when it can be done without destroying them, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is upon or connected with any such matter anything which would authorize or require the charge of a higher rate of postage thereon."

Again, § 146 provides "That any person in any department of the postal service, who shall UNLAWFULLY detain, delay, or open any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters entrusted to him," etc., etc., shall be punished.

Now in all these and similar apparently protectiv clauses of the law there will be found this exception—fatal to the inviolability of the mails—that matter designated as unlawful, i. e., "prohibited," can be detained and even opened without punishment. In the case of printed matter the whole mails are open under § 137 above quoted, on the ground that it is necessary to see that a higher rate of postage is not chargeable.

Now, what practical use is to be made of this privilege as to prohibited, i e, unlawful and non-mailable matter? The Supreme Court in the Jackson Case answers distinctly that it is the duty of the postal officer to detain and confiscate such matter on his own judgment. The words of the Court, referring to prohibitory regulations and laws, are:

"As to objectionable printed matter, which is open to examination, the regulations may be enforced in a similar way, by the imposition of penalties for their violation through the courts; and in some cases, by the direct action of the officers of the postal service In many instances those officers can ACT upon their own inspection, and from the nature of the case, must ACT without other proof. . . In such cases, no difficulty arises, and no principle is violated in excluding the prohibited articles, or REFUSING to forward them." (See this opinion at end of my Faneuil Hall speech, p. 51.)

This decision construing the laws above quoted settles the question. Printed matter deemed to be "objectionable," and therefore non-mailable, may be detained by any postal officer. The laws are so framed that this may be done, and the Supreme Court so decides.

Liberals may understand why it is that "Cupid's Yokes" will go through some post-offices and not others.

It is only a week ago that a case was presented to me in which THE TRUTH SEEKER and all of a Liberal's correspondence was detained by a local postmaster as "objectionable," until he could get instructions from Washington!

While writing this the cases of Dr. Kinget and Mrs. Follett are brought to my notice, and demand attention from all Liberals.

But we are told it is far different as to letters—that they cannot be seized or detained. Let us see.

The laws above quoted show that if letters contain "objectionable" matter, they are non-mailable, and their detention is not unlawful.

The Supreme Court in the Jackson Case prescribes the practice for seizing letters to be as follows:

"Whilst regulations excluding matter from the mail cannot be enforced in a way which would require or permit an examination into letters or sealed packages subject to letter postage, without warrant issued upon oath or affirmation, in the search for prohibited matter, they may be enforced upon competent evidence of their violation obtained in other ways, as from the parties receiving the letters or packages, or from agents depositing them in the post-office, or others congnizant of the facts."

Your letters, then, if suspected, may be detained until the official, perhaps Mr. Comstock, steps up stairs and gets from his friendly United States commissioner or official a warrant to seize and do what he pleases with your correspondence—and this upon such outside evidence from others, as would not hang a cat in a common law court.

But suppose your papers or letters are simply "detained" as unlawful and non-mailable on this outside evidence, what becomes of them?

They may be destroyed by the order of the postmaster-general, or be sent at once, and at his discretion, to the "dead letter" office and be opened there.

And it should be borne in mind that the word "postmaster-general" in these laws dees not mean the man, but any agent or official who acts under his general authority, as, for instance, Comstock. That this construction is not forced the following sections show. § 302 of the Act of 1876 provides:

"That all letters, packets, or other matter which may be seized or detained for violation of law, shall be returned to the owner or sender of the same, or OTHERWISE DISPOSED OF AS THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL MAY DIRECT"—e. g., destroyed.

§ 194 provides: "That the postmaster-general may REGULATE THE PERIOD during which undelivered letters shall remain in any post-office, and WHEN they shall be returned to the dead-letter office."

Thus when letters are detained for "violation of law," they are at the mercy of the postmaster-general; i e., his agents, or they may at once be sent to the dead-letter office and opened there, and destroyed or used as evidence!

The postmaster-general may, by § 34 and other sections, appoint any number of special agents. Comstock is only one.

Mr. Bush says that the laws do not permit special agents to "search post-offices," etc., "for unmailable matter even though obscene, but to search the depots and vehicles of common carriers for mailable matter conveyed with intent to defraud the revenue." But the Supreme Court says expressly to the contrary, as above quoted from Jackson's case. Warrants, obtainable as easy as putting on your hat, may be necessary "in the SEARCH for prohibited matter," we are told, when it is under seal and letter postage, but as to other matter even this bit of formality is not necessary. The postal "OFFICERS CAN ACT UPON THEIR OWN INSPECTION!" (See U. S. R. S., § 4026. Also Act of July 8, 1876, §§ 235, 299)

That the court is justified by these statutes in its decision is plain enough. These agents and officials may search for anything and everything carried "in violation of law." The post-office is open to them. Who knows what they do? Our printed matter and letters are entirely at their mercy if deemed "objectionable." They may be confiscated without jury or trial or notice to the owner.

But now suppose you think you will escape all this danger and secure privacy by having your letters registered—can you? No. The same course may be taken with registered letters as with any others; and with two disadvantages, viz., that the pursuing official will surely know who the sender is, and that if he thinks your business is a lottery, or is fraudulent, or in any way "objectionable," he can break it up and ruin you without the slightest danger or responsibility on his part. The above laws are indeed sufficient for this purpose, for a charge is equal to execution. But special enactments giv to the postmaster-general, i. e, his agents—power to make the inquisition and charge sure death, as follows:

Section 300 of the General Act above quoted has incorporated in it the following:

"That the Postmaster General may, upon evidence SATISFACTORY TO HIM that any person, firm," etc.. "is engaged in conducting any fraudulent lottery, gift enterprise," etc, etc., "instruct postmasters at any post offices at which registered letters shall arrive directed to any such person, firm, or corporation, to return all such registered letters to the postmasters at the offices at which they were originally mailed with the word 'fraudulent' plainly written or stamped upon the outside of said letters, and all such letters so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the writers thereof, under such regulations as the postmaster-general may prescribe; provided that nothing in this Act contained shall be so construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself." How kind our paternal government is getting to be! But worse follows.

Section 301 is the most astonishing piece of postal legislation extant. It is too long to quote, but, in short, it provides that anyone misusing the post-office by opening a correspondence through it with intent to defraud may be punished by a fine not to exceed $500, and imprisonment not to exceed eighteen months!

Is not this enough of Comstock legislation for one time? But, before parting, dwell a moment upon the peculiar unction of the "provided" in § 300 above quoted. The grace with which the Act does not "authorize," but does not forbid any postmaster or any other person to open any letter not addressed to himself, is inimitable in view of the laws and decision we hav above quoted. Where is such conduct prohibited as to "non-mailable matter?" Such blinds and whale tubs deceive no one.

Now let us look at two other important provisions.

By § 304 it is provided, "That all causes of action arising under the postal laws may be sued, and all offenders against the same may be prosecuted before the circuit or district courts of the United States," and they are to hav precedence over other causes. Here the United States obtains an enlargement of its criminal jurisdiction, practically without limit. Congress may make anything non-mailable, and punish the intent and motiv of every paper and letter if it can of one. It places its victim in the United States courts, beyond the common law, and the jury of the vicinage, by a practice foreign to the people, and a jury selected not by their laws, but by the minions of the judges. The guarantees of the Constitution are no protection in these courts, for they hav been set aside by a general construction that givs to Congress and these courts unlimited criminal jurisdiction. The minority, especially the Liberal minority, hav no rights that the majority are bound to respect. The statements made in my Faneuil Hall speech are no exaggerations. They are becoming true day by day. If our post-office is not a mere sieve for the detection of those guilty of Liberal thought it is not because the laws are insufficient, but because on the whole, fair and decent men still run the post-office in spite of Comstock and the influences he represents. But as soon as Schuyler Colfax's "Dear Brother in the Lord" takes the Presidential chair those influences will be the government.

Mr. Bush compels me to refer to one more law in self-vindication.

In the Faneuil Hall speech and elsewhere I hav stated that one-half of the fines of all prosecutions under these laws go to the agent-informer. Mr. Bush says on the contrary: "All fines imposed under the postal laws of the United States are required to be paid into the Treasury. No premium is offered to informers." Mr. Bush is mistaken, being probably misled by § 57, which, however, excepts from the treasury such "parts" of fines and penalties "as by law belong to the party informing or prosecuting;" and, § 317 of the Act provides what those parts are in these words, which are conclusiv: "That one-half of all pecuniary penalties and forfeitures incurred for the violation of any law in relation to the postal service shall be for the use of the person informing and prosecuting for the same, and the other for the use of the United States, except where other disposition thereof is specially provided." There is no other disposition provided.

The New York state Comstock statute is equally conclusiv on this point. See Laws of 1873, chap. 527. § 7. "One-half of the fines collected through the instrumentality of this [Comstock's] society, or of its agents. . . . shall accrue to its benefit."

Mr. Bush's denial that one-half of the postal penalties went to the informer left me in the position of having misled my friends and the public. They will see that my former statements were correct in this regard. They will see, too, that all I hav ever before urged against the Comstock legislation presented but a small part of its dangers and enormities.

In conversation with our Nestor, Hon. Elizur Wright, a few days ago, he said that if one thing more than another made him fear that the Republic would not endure it was the ignorance and indifference of the present and the rising generation in regard to the Constitution and the rights of the minority secured by it. In his young Abolition days people studied the great charter, read the debates upon its adoption, and knew the balance between the states and general government in which our liberties are weighed. "Now," says he, "I hear of people who imagin they are statesmen declaring that they 'don't care a damn whether the Constitution is constitutional or not.' 'They go for things, not documents.' Such people," said Mr. Wright, "are leaving all safe ground for Liberalism. Before long the enemies of liberty will go for 'things' too, and the minority, who hav laughed at the Constitution and construed it away, will hav no restraint for their enemies, and no defense for themselvs." He referred to Gen. Hancock as the only candidate who had given the true constitutional theory of our government and placed emphasis upon it. That his doing so should be taken as a fit subject for ridicule by the Republican press and politicians seems to him an emphatic warning in itself.

I pray my Liberal brethren to listen to him if they will not to me.

T. B. WAKEMAN.

Selections.

[From the San Francisco Argonaut.]

Saint Pecus.

FOLLOWING THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS.

The name of the church in our parish was Saint Pecus—in honor of God's "cattle upon a thousand hills"—and its sacred edifice was loftily imposing, as it arose from the east line of a quiet street on the opposit side from an open sand-lot. On a summer Sunday morning the shadow of Saint Pecus fell across the street, while the holy cross on the summit of Saint Pecus stretched its shadow over into the sand-lot, and, as the sun slowly went up higher into the sky, the shadow of the cross as slowly drew backward over the sand of the lot toward the street, and shortened its shade as it noiselessly crept home to the real cross on the "house of God."

The street in front of Saint Pecus was one of those quiet streets where policemen are seldom needed at any time of either day or night, and much less needed in broad daylight on Sunday; therefore the sporadic tramp who lay asleep in the sand of the open lot in front of Saint Pecus was not disturbed, nor was he disturbing. He was asleep, or drunk, or more likely he was partly both. He was lying with his face downward, or a little to one side; his bad hat was gaping toward his crown, a few inches away; his arms were outstretched on the sand at right angles with his body; his legs were lapped one over the other, with his toes buried in the sand. The shadow of the cross, veering to northward and drawing toward Saint Pecus, crept slowly upon the houseless sleeper until its arms were upon his outstretched arms, its head-piece flat upon the back of his head, and its main stem lining down his back and covering his feet. He slept on. The shadow of a tragedy over eighteen hundred years old seemed pinning him to the earth. Or was it about to lift him from his sin and degradation and carry him to Saint Pecus and salvation? No. The big bell of Saint Pecus began to clang out. The tramp awoke, wrestled himself away from under the shadow, and sat up, with his dilapidated boot-toes in front of him, and his heels in the sand. As he yawned he bored, with grimy knuckles, the morning sunlight out of his red eyes. Then he looked over the ground about him, and put on his distorted hat, and from under its uncertain brim, gazing around upon the general prospect, as he put his hands carefully through his hopeless pockets, his eyes rested upon the imposing front of Saint Pecus.

The bell was still clanging. The tramp clawed his unkempt hair, and said, "It is time to go to church." Then, as he sat in the sand, under the sun, he laughed—not a good laugh, not a bad laugh, but a laugh that was the echo of something dead.

"It is time to go to church," he repeated; "time for me to go to church! Ha, ha! So it is. I hav no place else to go. No money, no bed, no food, no home, no anything—not a damned thing. Everything costs money. Everything is money. There is no free show in this world—not a damned one. Unless—unless—it is religion. I've heard say that goes without money and without price. I s'pose that big bell is saying, 'Without monee! without monee! without monee! without price! I'll go to church—be damned if I don't. That's what everybody says. Yes, I'll go to church and hear a sermon, and turn over a new leaf."

He arose, brushed the sand off his clothes, made some effort to straighten up his hat and arrange his hair; tried, in a nerve-shaken way, to bring his shirt together across his red and tanned throat, and was unsuccessful in this latter effort. Then he walked across the street, and up the wide front steps of Saint Pecus.

As he entered the lofty open outer door, the vigilant, gentlemanly usher met him promptly.

"Do you wish to attend service?" asked the well-kempt and rather dapper door-keeper.

"Yezzir."

"Go right up stairs," pointing overhead.

"I can't hear if I go up there. I want to hear the words. Havn't heard a real sermon for years and years—and I'm hard of hearing."

"Well, go right up. You'll hear very well up there."

"Nozzir; no use. Can't hear a word up there. Lost half my hearing in the artillery, fighting for the Union. Let me get up close to the minister," and he made to the inner door as if he would enter the main body of the church.

"No—no—no! My dear sir, you cawn't go in there. The pews are all taken," said the usher, hastily intercepting.

"I don't want any pew. Let me sit on the altar steps, at the minister's feet; then I can hear him. We didn't hav pews in the army when we listened to the chaplain. Or I'll set again' the wall, to one side."

"You don't want to make a laughing-stock of yourself, sir, for the whole congregation?"

"Can't anybody hurt me, laughing at me," said the tramp. "And a congregation of religious ladies and gentlemen won't laugh at an old soldier, who has fought for their country, because he wants to get close to a sermon."

"Well, well, my dear sir, I can spend no more time talking to you. You must really now, you know, go up stairs, or go out," and the usher stood aside to let a bejeweled, befeathered, and perfumed family pass the door.

The tramp turned away, passed out through the lofty portal, down the wide steps, and into the street.

Once again in the street, he pulled his hat down to his eyes, tried to button his buttonless coat, as he met the parishioners coming to worship, and went on his aimless way.

Again he went through the hopeless pantomime of searching his pockets. Then he talked to himself:

"There is no free show. An empty pocket is outer darkness. If a man has not a dollar to put between himself and the world, his bung is out. If I put my hand in my pocket and find nothing, I'm nothing. If I can pull out a check for a million I am a distinguished citizen. There is no glory in war, no love in religion, no patriots in politics, no fame in big ideas, if you leave out the money. It is all money—all pocket. What account is a soul with an empty pocket?" Here he sneered and laughed. "An empty pocket can't build churches, nor pay preachers, nor own lands, nor influence elections. An empty pocket is only fit to 'rally round the flag' and die for freedom." He stopped in his walk and unconsciously went through his pockets again, with the same hopeless result. "Now, where'll I go?" he said. "I wish I could hav heard that sermon. They say he's a great preacher. I feel serious. An empty pocket's a serious thing. I could go out to North Beach and hear old 'Hallelujah' preach at Monkey Corner. No use in that. Old 'Hallelujah' has to hav money; and he is no square man. Heard him preach at Monkey Corner in 1872. I wasn't a tramp then. He was preaching about the marriage feast at Cana—said there was no drunk in that wine that Christ made. Then I asked 'Hallelujah' what was the use of making it; and he told me it was made to show Christ's power. And I asked him if Christ couldn't hav showed his power by making a good quality of pure water in an empty jug. Then 'Hallelujah' told me that it was written how 'one fool could ask more questions than ten wise men could answer.' And that was no fair shot, and no square man would shoot that way. Then, when he finished his sermon, 'Hallelujah' asked if anybody wanted to ask him any more questions. I asked him what made Jesus shake his mother at the feast of Cana. He said he didn't. I said I knew he did. He said, prove it. I said that when Jesus's mother went to him and told him there was no wine at the wedding, Jesus said unto her, 'Woman, what hav I to do with thee?' 'Hallelujah' said that was said because Jesus was devoted to the will of his father in heaven. And I said it didn't make any difference who or where his father was, he had no right to throw off on his mother. But, hell! what's the use of me talking, I've throwed off on everything, and everything throws off on me."

As he resumed his solitary walk, he passed by the half-door, open, of a saloon, and, as he looked longingly into it, he once more searched his pockets.

"No use," he said, shaking his head, "no use. But if I don't get a drink I'm off on the jim-jams—sure—and when I get the jim-jams my dead wife will come after me, with her old, calico, faded dress, and slouch bonnet, and piece of old black shawl, and no stockings on, and old shoes with no strings in them, and she'll shiver, and hav a cough, and ask me to come home. Home!" Here he threw his face up at the sky and gave a sort of whoop or howl, but instantly dropped his chin upon his chest and went on.

"I won't stand it," he said. "I must hav a drink of whisky, or kill myself. I won't stand the jim-jams any more. Go to the hospital? What's the use? When I had property I paid taxes to support hospitals; when I was a soldier I fought for other tax-payers. What does it all amount to now? I'm a dog. Go to the hospital to be treated like a dog, while big-money jim-jams in the next ward is treated like a gentleman. S'pose I go to the Sisters of Charity? I hav a sort of a right to go there. I paid my money to Dutch beer-man for beer; I paid my money to Irish whisky-man for whisky; back of that, long ago, I paid my money to high-toned American saloon-man for fancy drinks; and their wives paid my money to the churches, and churches pay it out to support charities, or maybe the liquor-dealers bought houses and lots from church deacons with my money, and deacons paid it over to build churches."

He walked a long way in silence, gesticulating as he went. Soon he began to talk again.

"Mercy!" he exclaimed. "There is no mercy—it is all strife. Pay or punishment—that's what it all is. There is no such thing as something for nothing. It is all talk when they say it is any other way. Everything must be paid for in this world somehow, somewhere, some time. Yes! Everything except—except—sometimes—a true woman's love for one man. That's the only thing in this world any man can get for nothing—and all men cannot get that. I had it once," he said, slowly, and very sadly; "I had it; and I hav it yet if there is any world where spirits hav the senses which the bodies had. If I knew of such a world I would go there and leave this damned body, with its appetites and its habits, to rot as it deserves to rot. I'll make the only move to go toward that world and take the chances; and I'll make it this day. I must hav death for nothing—for I hav only nothing. Jumping off a high wall is a cheap way to die, but I havn't any wall to jump off. I might steal a jump. Drowning is about the only cheap death, but then if a man has not paid his road-tax, nor his poll-tax, he does not own the right to the road that leads to the water. It costs money to die; it costs money to go to heaven; and it costs more money to go to hell. This life is all money—buy and sell—that's all there is of it; except what is stolen, and stealing costs money. I know what I'll do; I'll go down to the bay on government property—I've carried a gun and faced the foe many a day; the government owes us all the right of way to death—and I'll quietly tumble into the bay and out of the world."

By this time he had reached the slope of the hills which leads down to the restless waters. He approached the bank. He looked about him. He looked a long look up at the sky. Then he said, "If I had a stiff horn of ——no, damn the demon." And then there was the leap of a human body in the air, a plunge, a few bubbles, and the tide flowed in and out, regardless of the tragedy or the tragedian.

What is the use of producing the flinty "daily news" notice of his recovered body at the morgue? Why record the findings of the coroner's jury? It is a daily picture in this world. But the eloquent remarks of the sacred orator in the holy desk at Saint Pecus were very affecting when he pointed a moral with what he imagined was the history of this lost soul. How in the dilapidated pocket of his poor, wet coat was found a photograph of the man in better days, folded inside his honorable discharge from the war-wasted ranks of the armies of the Union. How, most probably, this man—this brave, honorable soldier—had fallen into the ways of unbelief and pursued the hopeless path of the fatalist, who says in his heart, "there is no God," when he could, by coming to the foot of the cross, hav found that hope, that consolation, that encouragement, which is to be found only in Jesus and his cross.

. . . . . .

On the following Sunday the shadow of the cross upon Saint Pecus crept noiselessly over the sand-lot; the big bell clanged; and the accomplished usher, in the vestibule of Saint Pecus, let in the respectable audience as pleasantly as if no desperate soul had ever turned from there to leap into eternity, where the tide comes in and the tide goes out—regardless of what Saint Pecus may say or man in his folly may dare to do.

J. W. GALLY.

---

[From the London Times.]

Expulsion of the Jesuits.

To the Editor, Sir: Having during the last three weeks enjoyed free converse with a number of French ecclesiastics, secular and regular, gathered, for health's sake, from various parts of France, I hav been much interested in hearing their views on the present "burning" politico-ecclesiastical questions—the expulsion of the Jesuits and the demand made by the government for inspection of the statutes of the other unauthorized religious orders. Some of your readers may, I think, be interested in their views also:

(1) All these priests are of accord in strongly denouncing the government for what they deem its unjustifiable action in expelling the Jesuits and demanding to inspect the statutes of the other orders, in order that their continued existence may be authorized or not. But (2) they fully admit that the government, from its own point of view, is acting in self-defense, though they deny that it has the law-right so to act. They frankly avow that between the present "Atheistical" Republican government, as they deem it, and the Jesuits and all who sympathize with them there exists a "guerre acharnés"—war to the knife—so far as a war of principles, aims, and teachings goes. They admit that the pupils trained by the Jesuits, if they remain true to their teaching, must be expected to prove devoted soldiers in this war against the existing government and institutions; that if a favorable opportunity should arise for an attempt to overthrow the present regime and set up monarchical or imperial rule in its stead, those trained by the Jesuits would, if faithful to their training, be sure to side with any such attempt. The following instance affords a fair illustration of what is meant: Last year the Jesuits succeeded in passing a large number of their pupils—about 100—into the military college of St. Cyr. I asked my priest friends, "May we not expect that, should a favorable opportunity present itself, these young officers would draw their swords and do their best to lead their men with them in order to overthrow the existing regime?" "Undoubtedly, we must expect they would do so," was the reply. Some frankly added, "From this point of view we can appreciate the policy and tactics of the government in getting rid of the Jesuits, as the most efficient trainers of their opponents; only we deny that, on their own professed principles of freedom, they hav any right to drive them out." "We freely admit," they added, "that if the Roman church could dominate, its principles must lead it to treat its politico-religious opponents in the like way. But we claim freedom for ourselvs in every country which professes to base its government and institutions upon political and religious freedom, while our own principles forbid us to allow such freedom to others, wherever we hav power to carry our principles into practice."

Whatever may be thought of the probabilities of this internecine struggle of principles passing from words to warlike deeds, there can be no doubt that the Jesuits themselvs occasionally giv color to the belief that they prepare the minds of their scholars for it. A recent instance shows this. The Jesuit pupils from Toulouse and from their divers colleges in that province recently went on a pilgrimage to Lourdes. Two trains were needed to convey them. The Lourdes journal thus recounts their coming: "They arrived in good order, to the sound of clarions and drums, chanting with all their soul of Christians and Frenchmen the sublime hymn of the 'The Banner of the School.'" This chant speaks for itself; I giv the original:

"LA BANNIERE DE L'ECOLE.

"Sauvez votre peuple de France,
Puissante Reine des combats!
De foi, de savior, de vaillance
Armez nos cœurs, nos levres, et nos bras!
C'est par vous que les fiers zouaves,
Derniers tenants des droits romains,
Pour les venger mouraient en braves,
Pour les prouver vivaient en saints.
Comme eux, nous sommes votre ouvrage;
Faites-nous ce qu'ils ont ete;
Lions aussi par le courage,
Mais anges par la purete."

It is plain that youths so trained are not likely to lack fervor and zeal in using their "arms," as well as hearts and lips, in the holy cause, should occasion arise, as divers of my priest friends feel and say it is sure to do, sooner or later. This aspect of the present politico-ecclesiastical conflict in France should, I feel, be clearly kept in view by all who would fairly judge the present action of the government in France. Much as we may regret that they deem it needful to treat the Jesuits and their supporters as direct foes to the state, we cannot wonder they should do so.

But (3) it is felt that the real range of the present conflict will extend far beyond to-day's question of the Jesuits and of the rest of the religious orders. All the clergy I hav spoken with hav one idea firmly fixed in their heads, viz., that the real aim at bottom of the present "Atheistical" government, as they habitually term it, is to uproot the Christian religion in France. They look upon the assault on the Jesuits as but the first move toward that end; they fully expect that they themselvs and the church at large will be the ultimate object. In proof of such intent they point to the cutting down of the stipends of their bishops and archbishops, and just lately of their French cardinals; also specially they note the action of the Paris and other municipal councils in secularizing the municipal schools by turning out the Christian Brothers and Sisters and substituting lay teachers, as well as by removing the emblems of Christian faith and teaching from the schools. All this, they remark, is done with the sanction of government, if not directly by its authority. They complain of similar efforts to get rid of the religious element from the administration of municipal and other charities, such as the "bureaux de bienfaisance" and hospitals. On this last point I feel their fears are not well founded. The infusion of a larger and more activ lay element in the management of public charities appears likely both to insure more thorough impartiality in their application and also to interest laymen more largely in such good works. Too often in France, where clerical influence has largely dominated in the administration, non-Roman Catholic poor hav hardly obtained their due share of public charities. They fail, however, to specify any distinctly unfriendly action toward the ordinary parochial clergy, but are afraid it will come later on. They take little comfort from reflecting that in bygone days the Jesuits hav been expelled from every Roman Catholic country in turn; that the "Most Catholic" monarchs of France, Austria, and Spain were they who jointly moved Pope Clement XIV. to suppress the order by his famous bull, while the other orders and the parochial clergy were left untouched. They fear times are now much changed; they would fear much less for the future of the church in France if they could feel sure that only the Jesuits, and even the other religious orders, were to be suppressed; but they are gravely afraid the present is a war—a persecution—against religion itself. I need not add that the Univers and other clerical journals incessantly do their utmost to cherish this belief and to represent the cause of the Jesuits and religious orders as one with that of the parochial clergy and the whole church. Otherwise, there are not lacking traces that the old medieval jealousies between the secular and regular clergy still are felt among the French clergy to-day. Thus one good cure, after strongly denouncing the government for its present action against the Jesuits and the other orders, frankly added: "I try to look at the question on the highest ground as affecting the rights and interests of the whole church; but, personally, I am free to own that if the government should remove the order now in my own parish, I feel that its removal would be good for the parish and myself. Their work often clashes with my own; divisions and jealousies occur; our peace and harmony are marred." He added, "There is room, no doubt, for restraining the number and modifying the action of the religious orders in France. Of late years they hav assumed a dominating position and influence which is not good for our bishops, ourselvs, or our flocks." I may add that, judging from what this worthy cure told of his varied experiences in his career, he was a really large-hearted and by no means a careless or idle parish priest.

(4) I will mention but one more point on which I hav touched with my clerical friends. I hav ventured to say to some of them, "Your cry of freedom, your protest against 'persecution' (the heading under which the Univers now daily recounts all the incidents of the Jesuits' expulsion, etc.), would surely meet with still more sympathy than it does in all countries were you but able to convince the world that you are not raising a one-sided cry; that you are ready and willing to do to all others as you would be done unto in this vital matter of freedom of conscience, teaching, and worship. But," I am forced to add, "apparently you are not willing so to do." Take one instance which fell under my own notice. Close to the frontier of France, in the little principality of Monaco, there are a few hundred German Lutherans, who during the last few years hav repeatedly petitioned the Roman Catholic authorities there to allow them to build a school and church of their own for the religious instruction of their children and their worship. But they hav asked in vain. Prince and bishop—not to add the large and influential body of Jesuits planted there—resolutely refuse such petitions; no freedom can be granted for such divergence from Roman teaching and worship. Now, it cannot be doubted that if the leaders of the powerful Roman church in France had lifted their voice to urge the prince and his clerical counselors of Monaco to grant to the Protestant minority there the same freedom they are now claiming for their own religious orders, everybody would hav felt that their present cry in France was consistent and sincere. But no such voice has been raised by French Roman Catholics.

Again, only the other day the cardinal-secretary of state in the Vatican vehemently condemned and protested against the action of the Roman municipality in selling a site for an Anglican church; albeit, so little sacred was this old conventual site in the late pope's eyes that he had no scruple in using it for a police-office and prison. Now, such acts on the part of the church of Rome strike outsiders as curiously, painfully inconsistent with her cry for freedom for herself elsewhere. Yet she has had in France large-hearted and illustrious sons—Montalembert, Lacordaire, and others—who would fain hav had this reproach wiped away, and would hav had their church show herself ready to grant to others the same freedom she demanded for herself. My priest friends, I am sorry to say, only smile at this view, and frankly avow their church cannot stand it. They say the school of Montalembert and Lacordaire is a thing of the past; that they are now counted not good Catholics; that Rome, by the Syllabus, has put down such notions; that if among their present ecclesiastical leaders there be any who share such ideas, they dare not utter them, knowing the prompt condemnation they would incur. Hence, they only repeat what I said above, "We must claim freedom for ourselves in free countries, but we must avow that our own principles forbid us to grant it to others, if we can avoid so doing." This gives a sad, hopeless outlook to the present conflict in France. One feels that the really earnest religious Roman Catholics are, by force of their principles, dead against modern principles of religious and civil liberty; that it is hard to see how they can harmonize faith and freedom, religion and country. Were it not for the hardship the government decrees must inflict on some few aged and infirm members of the Jesuit and other orders, one would be tempted to smile while listening to the clamor now raised about "persecution," for those who are most loudly raising it are, in truth, only being gently hoist with their own petard.

[From the New York Truth.]

Bible Revision.

Dr. DeWitt, one of the revisers of the Bible, says that he and his associates are compelled, in pursuing their work, "to decide on other ground than that of inherent fitness, and often to put aside manifest improvements in favor of the more ancient and familiar phrasing."

In other words, the revisers dare not correct errors where they are so radical that correction would appear to the devout to be an alteration of the inspired word of God.

This whole subject of Bible revision presents an anomaly. Children are taught to believe that King James's translation of the scriptures is the true and only revelation of the Supreme Being. Its words and phrases hav been studied, committed to memory, and applied to the affairs of life as divine commands. No wonder, therefore, that a superstitious awe for these, as pearls from the lips of Deity, should be shocked when uninspired men put others in their place, even though the reader is reliably informed that the latter are the better translations from the Hebrew and the Greek.

Ordinary believers do not look upon the Hebrew and Greek text as inspiration. They do not feel them to be divine. The very book that lies upon the pulpit, upon the center-table of the family circle, and from which Protestant Christians daily and reverentially read, is to them the holy book of God. Its very pages and binding are sacred, and, following the channel of their education from infancy, they refer to it as the one fountain of divine wisdom and instruction. No such reverential sentiment influences their emotions toward a Bible in the original text. It is little wonder therefore that a new translation, especially if it differs, though merely in phraseology, from the sacred volume of their childhood, should fail to impress them with an emotional faith in its divine origin.

And it is to avoid conflict with this sentiment that Dr. DeWitt and his associates find it necessary to frequently hold fast to the ancient and familiar phraseology, though at the expense of inherent fitness and manifest improvement.

The Catholic church is the only denomination of Christians that deals consistently with the Bible. It holds that the inspired book must always be explained by inspiration. Accordingly English translations are not put into the hands of the vulgar, but the original is delivered to the believers through oral inspiration. With that church, revisions and re-revisions are not necessary; the holy head of the church deals out divine revelation in the light of the inspiration with which he is officially endowed from on high.

The Jews, too, do better than our Protestant fellow-citizens. They are taught to read from the original, and thus they receive heavenly instruction in the very language in which the servants of Deity were influenced to receive it.

Assuming the Bible, as originally delivered to man, to hav been a work of divine inspiration, and even allowing the heavenly authority of that parliamentary assemblage which decided upon the authenticity of its books three hundred years after Christ, Protestants must yet concede a divine mission to translators and revisers before blindly accepting their work as a perfect transcript of the teachings of God.

These revisers, however, are unwittingly doing the world a service. Their acknowledgment that the book which Protestant Christians for generations hav held to be divinely perfect is in fact full of errors is a valuable contribution to the influence which is rapidly demolishing that superstitious belief in the divinity of the Bible which has in the past given the world bloody wars, persecution, and slavery.

A Hint.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKERS: Friends of truth, please let me ask you—all who wish to help the Liberal League in the best possible way, save perhaps to set about forming new ones yourselvs—to aid those who are doing this good work. Let us, if we can, do something to help organize the forty-two new Leagues in time for the next annual Congress, by sending money and stamps to our best workers.

Mr. F. F. Follett, of Rockford, Ill., who is going to devote his whole time henceforth to the work, wrote me last week that all the help he has received is one three-cent stamp.

As Leland says, we must organize, and to organize effectually money must be spent. Shall we ask a noble and generous few to bear all the burdens while we share equally in the harvest? ELMINA.

"A Fit of the Morals."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I was once neighbor to a lady who, when she heard of any social or sexual impropriety having been committed, would make a great ado about it, and put on airs of offended purity, when she had no purity of her own to boast of. When she was in these moods a young man used to say, "She has a fit of the morals."

Of course all the orthodox are pure, so they all look for impurity. Impurity is generally understood to mean sexuality unlicensed—among Infidels and Spiritualists. This we expect; but it seems strange and is deplorable that some of the leading thinkers, writers, and lecturers in the Liberal ranks should be—as they seem to be—seeking for sexual excesses, sins, and impurities among those who hav the same high purposes and aspirations they hav.

Abbot & Co. are so very pure that they, like my neighbor, are very liable to "fits of the morals." That is not a normal, healthy condition that induces fits of any kind. No man or woman ever became wiser, better, or purer in a fitful way, or made thereby others better and purer. Nature's methods of purification, like all other methods, are slow, regular, constant.

In my long experience and study of human nature I hav found it necessary to look closely to the practical life and conduct of those who make a great ado about some external expression, manifestation, or act of a sexual character not sanctioned by law or custom. If there is any significance to the words of Paul, "Unto the pure all things are pure," then I think some of the professed Liberals, like many of the orthodox ministers, hav no purity to boast of.

I care not how intellectual, "cultured," and respectable those gentlemen may be who hav troubled themselvs about Mr. Bennett's private letters, with the obvious purpose of injuring him and breaking up his business; I say their conduct is mean, cowardly, unmanly, contemptible, execrably infernal, and inconsistent with all their pretensions to liberality and toleration.

Gentlemen, did you ever think of Franklin's words, "If every man's faults were written on his forehead he would pull his hat down over his eyes." By that test where would your hats be? Whose hats would cover the most faults, even sexual faults, yours or Bennett's?

I am one of Underwood's "tag-rag and bob-tail," one of the low and ignorant who advocate THE TRUTH SEEKER and believe in D. M. Bennett, for I hav reasons to believe that he loves the truth and has done and is doing as much to spread it among the people as any other man. Many a man passes for being pure—all right sexually—because his inner desires, feelings, and passions, or outward manifestations hav not been brought to light. As unwise and foolish as D. M. Bennett's letters were, I wish there were no other Liberals who had a worse record. I hav no words to express my contempt and indignation at the course of those who are determined not to forgiv Mr. Bennett for those letters after his noble, manly confession and repentance. If you cannot forgiv him and work for and with him, do not go about and condemn the Bible for its inhuman and unjust doctrins. What better is your spirit than that of the priests, churches, and the Young Men's Christian Association?

O gentlemen, I pray you to cease your mad, unmanly, selfish, cruel, inconsistent course, and let us all unite in "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together," to open and keep open the way of human progress, that humanity may "grow in grace and a knowledge of the truth."

J. H. COOK.

Report from Rhode Island.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you please giv place for the following report for the state of Rhode Island? H. L. G.

H. L. Green, Esq., Ch. Ex. Com. N. L. L., Dear Sir: We beg to thus report for Rhode Island for the year that is now about to close:

Since our appointment we hav neglected no opportunity to make ourselvs familiar with our work. Our correspondence has been numerous, and we shall be better prepared for the new year than we are now.

We shall be unable to attend the grand meeting of the League this year, but we intend to put the expense of attendance upon League work at home. We shall leave no stone unturned to strengthen the cause here, and to achieve this end we hav arranged our business so that we can attend to this line. Our business will be of such a nature that we can feel the public pulse in regard to this very thing.

We see things bid fair to strengthen our cause here, and once let the West warm up and Rhode Island will not be long in the rear. By all odds we are now the most Liberal of all the New England states. We trust one thing will be attended to at our annual meeting, and that is fixing you a compensation, for the time has now come when it is needful to hav a man salaried to do our business for us, and I feel it should not be neglected. We favor Col. Ingersoll's idea of asking each candidate how he stands upon equality for all. Put the question fairly, and demand of them no dodging but a straight answer to a straight question.

With firm wishes for success, and with firm intention to hold on Rhode Island, I remain, Yours,

Hamilton, R. I., July 31, 1880. JAS. N. ARNOLD.

A Liberal Offer.

I hav promised our friend Bennett to dispose of one thousand copies of my debate with the Rev. Dr. Ditzler. I will agree to make a present of one copy to every person who orders two copies. I want the work to hav a wide circulation among Christians if possible, and care nothing about profit in its sale. Inclose one dollar for two books, and I will send the third free. Address 172 Clark street, Chicago, Illinois. W. F. JAMIESON.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1880.

[From The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.]

Judaism.—Continued.

REVIEW AND CRITICISM.

For a consideration and examination of the Jewish God Jahveh and the Jewish scriptures—the Old Testament—the reader is referred to the articles on Jehovah and the Bible, near the close of Volume I. A perusal of those chapters will assist him in obtaining a clearer view of the claims of Judaism as a revealed and divine religion. It may not be amiss to go back and briefly examin a few of the many points worthy of consideration. There has been not a little diversity of opinion as to whether Abraham is a myth, or whether there was once a man by that name, the father of Isaac, the grandfather of Jacob, and the great-grandfather of Jacob's twelve sons, from whom descended the nation of the Jews. He is an important personage, if there was such a person. Without Abraham, no Jews, no Jesus, no Christianity, and no salvation for the world. But some hav asserted that Brahma and Abraham are alike corruptions of Abba Rama, or Abrama, and that Sarah is identical with Saravasti, thus showing a Hindoo origin for the man and woman standing at the head of all the Jews. Abram is a Chaldean compound, meaning Father of the Elevated, or Exalted Father. Abraham is said to be a compound of Chaldee and Arabic, signifying Father of a Multitude. Colenso claims that Adonis was formerly identified with Abram, High Father, Adonis being the personified sun. The phallic derivation of the name and character is not difficult of discernment. Others believe the story of Abraham to be wholly mythical, as much so as William Tell, Robinson Crusoe, or Jack the Giant Killer, and that the story of Abraham and his descendants was not written till after the Babylonian captivity, when a need was felt of a national history of the Jewish people, and a nominal father or head of the tribe from which the people sprung. Others, again, concede that there was such a man as Abraham, and that he was a Bedouin sheik who lived in tents and had a large household, as many of those sheiks hav to this day. They hold, too, that this old shiek lived subsequent to the time of Zoroaster, who taught in Persia the doctrine of one eternal God, the creator of heaven and earth, who was above all idols and other gods of the pagan nations, and who made known his law and will to man to his chosen prophet on the top of a burning mountain—a la Moses on Sinai. Whether Abraham took his religious notions from the teachings of Zoroaster cannot be determined now with any certainty, but this is known, that Judaism is a much younger religion than Zoroastrinism, and that there were ample opportunities for the transfer of religious notions from Persia to Chaldea, and again to the land of Canaan.

Whether Abraham is a myth or a real peronage can probably never be known. It is most true his story was not written for more than a thousand years after his time, and much of the details had to be supplied by a fertil imagination, as the writer had no possible way of knowing what conversations Abraham had with Jahveh, Pharaoh, Abimelech, Lot, and all the others whom he is said to hav come in contact with; and while the writer was about it he could draw upon his imagination for all the details as well as a part. As to how it was, however, can never be decided with certainty. If Abraham is a myth—and the chances that he is are at least equal to the belief that there was such a man—then the story about Isaac, Jacob, his twelve sons, Moses, Aaron, Joshua, Samson, Job, Samuel, Saul, David, Solomon, etc., is also mythical. The story of all these was not written till a long time after they had passed off the stage, and what reliable data existed to make the story out of we hav no means of knowing. That an ingenious writer, with fair inventiv talent, could easily write out such a story is as true as that Charles Dickens was able to write the story of "David Copperfield," Eugene Sue the "Mysteries of Paris," Hesiod and Homer compose their songs about the Grecian gods, or the Methodist preacher Spaulding write the story of Mormon, which Joseph Smith is said to hav purchased and introduced to the world as another Bible.

Far more than half the stories, and far more than half of what is called history, are wholly products of human imagination, and never had any existence in fact, though the world has swallowed them with infinit gullibility, accepting them as truths and realities. Whether the ancient part of the Jewish story belongs to this mythical half every person has a right to fix in his own opinion according to the small amount of proof within his reach. That the Jews are a branch of the Semitic race, that they were cousins to the Arabs, that they were a nomadic, pastoral, semi-barbarous people, who once lived in the small mountainous country at the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea, called Palestine, is undoubtedly true, and that they were taken captiv to Babylon is generally conceded, but whether there ever was an Abraham, a Moses, a Joshua, a David a Solomon, must ever remain an unsettled question. A few facts are very damaging to the theory of the truthfulness, however, of the story:

1. There are no corroborativ proofs, save the existence of such a people, that they could not hav descended from some other source equally as well as their cousins, the Chaldeans, the Egyptians, the Phœnicians, or the Arabians.

2. The Egyptian records on their monuments, temples, obelisks, and on papyrus, contain no account either of the visit of Abraham to that country, when the king was said to hav fallen in love with his antiquated wife, from which cause serious trouble was brought upon Pharaoh and his household; or of the advent of Joseph, son of Jacob, whose ability to interpret dreams was so remarkable as to raise him from being a slave to the second position of power in the kingdom; or of the seven years of remarkable plenty, when Joseph was enabled to fill all the granaries of Egypt, and hav food enough during the seven succeeding years of famin, not only for that populous country, but "all the nations of the earth;" neither of the existence within the heart of that country of a people of slaves who in a little over two hundred years increased from seventy persons to three millions of people, who occupied the part of Egypt known as the land of Goshen, and nothing of the occurrence of those ten remarkable miracles known as the plagues of Egypt, by which the entire water of the country was converted into blood, the land overwhelmed with frogs, lice, locusts, and murrain which killed all the cattle, storms of fire which ran along the ground and killed all the cattle the second time; the locuts that eat up everything the storms had thoroughly destroyed, the killing of all the first-born of Egypt, of man and beast, from the king's household to the humblest resident Egyptian in the land, as well as all the cattle which, by the bye, had been twice killed before—and all this in one night, and no account kept of it. No record of the wonderful departure of this great body of people, after despoiling the Egyptians of all their valuables that were portable, making a forced march to the Red Sea, which in the most obliging manner opened for them all the way down to the bed of the sea, standing up in a solid wall on either side, allowing the millions of Israelites and their numerous live stock to pass over dry and safe, but returning back to its place as soon as the hosts of Egypt were in the heart of the sea, drowning every man of them, as well as once more causing the death of the horses which drew the chariots and had been three times killed before.

The Egyptians, according to the concurrent testimony of Egyptologists and ancient historians, were distinguished for their carefulness to make a record of every remarkable event that occurred in their country, and this habit was cultivated to such extent that they minutely recorded the products of their farms, and even the number of eggs laid by their domestic fowls. They were a literary people, a people that transferred as history to stone and papyrus the thousands of events of far less moment than the existence of a race of millions of slaves, of the wonderful plagues which visited the land, and the slaves making a hurried exit in one night; of the pursuit of the king of Egypt and his powerful army, not one of which survived to return to his home. Is it likely—let the reader decide—that all these marvelous events could occur and not a word about it all be recorded either on the stone monuments or upon papyrus, which was carefully laid away and preserved for the benefit of after generations? The Egyptians made record of the influx of the shepherd kings and people called Hyksos, who subdued them and reigned for many years over the country. This history the Egyptians carefully recorded, but not a word about the hosts of Israelites, of the death of hundreds of thousands of the first-born of the land, of the drowning of their monarch and all his army in the Red Sea. If all this had really taken place, is it not reasonable and probable that the Egyptian historians would hav known something about it, and that some record would hav been made of it?

Admitting the possibility of the Red Sea opening in the manner claimed; that three millions of people could subsist forty years in an arid desert, where water and verdure are the scarcest things known; that their clothes did not grow old nor wear out; that food should daily fall from heaven to keep that vast body of people alive for nearly half a century; that the river Jordan, when at high flood, condescendingly parted its waters, holding, with a firm wall of the aqueous fluid, the flood that must hav accumulated on the upper side, while three millions of men, women, and children, with all their cattle and luggage, could pass over; admitting that at the word of the man Joshua the sun and moon should stop in their courses for nearly the length of a day; admitting all these utter impossibilities, is it likely that this host of three millions of people could enter a land where were numerous kings, nations, and cities, and exterminate them with the sword, taking possession of the land, and no neighboring nations know anything about it, though the Phœnicians, an intelligent literary people, lived in the immediate vicinity, on the northwest, the Egyptians a short distance to the southwest, the Pelasgians and Ionians, who occupied the isles and mainlands of Greece, and who at that time were in vigorous existence, to say nothing of the Moabites, the Edomites, and the Arabians in the southeast? Is it likely, to repeat, that such events could take place and no neighboring nation know aught of them?

And after hundreds of years had passed by, and the glorious reigns of David and Solomon arrived, when a solid, well-organized nationality had been established, when fabulous wealth had been accumulated, surpassed by no other nation, when the gorgeous temple had been built, requiring the labor of 153,000 men for seven years, and an expenditure of wealth in gold and silver amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars; with the erection of the king's palace in keeping with the temple, and when a seraglio of one thousand women were kept for the king's individual pleasure, especially when this king was said to be the wisest man in all the earth, and whose fame and glory were known to all nations, is it likely that all this could exist and neither the Chaldeans, the Assyrians, the Egyptians, the Phœnicians, the Grecians, nor the Romans, all of whom were at that period in flourishing existence, know anything of it? No contemporaneous historian of any nationality, no literary man of any country at that era, seems to hav known anything of the great Jewish nation, of its wealth, numbers, and glory. Not a word of history in any nation existing at that time can be found anywhere. Hesiod and Homer knew nothing of the land of Palestine or the nation which inhabited it, though the latter often spoke of neighboring nations, of the Phœnicians, the Phrygians, etc. Xenophon knew nothing of such a land or people; Pythagoras knew nothing of them, though he passed over twenty years in Egypt, and possessed himself of the literature of the world. Neither Socrates nor Plato knew of such a land or people. Berosus of Chaldea, a cousin nation, knew nothing of them. Herodotus, the famous Grecian traveler, though he twice visited Syria, and must hav crossed the land of the Jews, and soon after the glorious reign of Solomon, when Jerusalem and the temple were in all their glory, yet he never heard of the famous King Solomon, his powerful nation, and all the brilliance which surrounded him. It is certainly most reasonable to conclude that had Solomon, in all his glory as a king of a powerful nation, surrounded by remarkable wealth and affluence, thus existed, some of the nations named and some of the writers pointed out would hav known something of it, and hav given some account of what they knew. Herodotus especially, as he wrote pretty full accounts of his travels and discoveries in Egypt, Syria, and Chaldea, would certainly hav mentioned the nation of the Israelites had they been as far advanced in civilization as represented, possessing a large and wealthy city, with a temple vieing with all similar structures in the world. As Herodotus saw nothing of all this, and said nothing of it, it is but fair to conclude that in his time there was no such people, no such king, no such city, and no such temple. We hav no contemporaneous history to corroborate in the slightest degree the Bible story of the wealth, populousness, and advanced state of civilization of that country. And however anxious we may be to believe all the unknown writers of the Bible tell us, we hav nothing to corroborate it, nothing to assure us it is worthy of our credence.

The diminutiv size of the country is another strong argument that no such nation could hav flourished there with the numbers and power claimed. A broken, mountainous country, filled with useless ravines and steril, rocky summits, but one hundred and forty miles in length, with less than an average width of forty miles, could hardly sustain a population of six millions of people, which, at the very lowest calculation, it must hav done to be able to turn out an army of fighting men numbering over a million and a half, which it is claimed David had in his kingdom, as ascertained by a careful census. It can hardly be possible that such a broken, steril country, containing but five thousand six hundred square miles, could produce such a people, or be able to sustain a loss of five hundred thousand men in battle in a single day as claimed (2 Chron. xiii, 3). These claims are opposed to the experience of mankind, the history of all other nations, and are in every way improbable. It is far more reasonable to believe that these wonderful statements were written out by some big story-teller within a few hundred years of our era, and that they hav not truth for a basis. It is extremely doubtful whether there were such men, even, as David and Solomon; and if they lived, it is very uncertain whether the nation over which they ruled was as populous as claimed, or that they possessed a large and powerful city, as Jerusalem is represented to hav been, or that the structure called Solomon's temple ever existed save in the brains of imaginativ and credulous human beings. There is not a particle of tangible proof in existence that Solomon's temple ever stood in Jerusalem. Prof. A. L. Rawson, who has made four journeys to Palestine, and has traversed every square half mile in the country, spending also much time in Jerusalem, assures the writer of these pages that there is not a stone left of the temple ascribed to Solomon, neither in the foundation walls nor elsewhere. In addition, he says there is not a stone or anything of the kind in the entire country in proof of an ancient Jewish civilized population once having occupied it. He found remains of Egyptian architecture, of Phœnician architecture, of Grecian and Roman architecture, but nothing distinctivly Jewish. He also entertains very grave doubts whether a temple was even built under Ezra, while he feels very positiv that Solomon and his temple are decidedly myths. He holds it as true that Herod built a temple in Jerusalem, and that that was the first of any importance that ever stood in that city. Let it be remembered that it is far easier to write fables and Munchausen tales than to make such wild vagaries truthful and reliable.

Attend the Congress.

Auxiliary Leagues should pay attention to the call for the Annual Congress issued by the President of the National Liberal League. Delegates should be appointed immediately that they may make arrangements for attending, and alternates should be selected so that if at the last moment the regular delegate should be unable to attend the substitute will be on hand. Matters of moment will come before the Congress. Polities will probably be hotly discussed, and various other questions will come up which will require a full delegation to meet and decide. There are over two hundred Leagues, and a thousand delegates ought to take seats in the hall on September 17th. Wright, Ingersoll, Wakeman, and Leland will be there, and it will be worth a trip from California to hear these alone. We expect the Congress will be a lively one, and hope all the Leagues will send full delegations.

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League.

To the Auxiliaries and Members of the National Liberal League,
GREETING:

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held at the West End Opera House, 431 W. Madison st., in the city of Chicago, Ill., on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next. All charter and life members of the National Liberal League, the President and Secretary of each local auxiliary and three delegates from the same are entitled to seats and votes in the Congress, and all annual members of the National League are entitled to seats, but not to votes.

As a President of the United States is to be elected this year, it is important that every one of the now two hundred auxiliaries shall be represented, and that a republic, every citizen of which professes that the state should be independent of the church, and the church of the state, shall no longer stultify itself by subsidizing ecclesiastical corporations in exempting their property from taxation, supporting religious instruction in schools, robbing the people of their time by Sunday laws, paying salaries for religious services, and exacting religious oaths as security for truth and fidelity to civil obligations.

If the National League has any voice, now is the time to hav it heard. The Constitution under which we liv consecrates the rights of speech and opinion and has no punishing power except for accurately-defined and proven crime; and the depositaries of this punishing power, national and state, hav their well-defined provinces and limits as servants of the people and protectors against all personal violence and fanatical persecution. The great question of the day is whether these bulwarks of individual liberty shall be swept away by the greed of power truckling to bigotry and superstition, or the voice and votes of a free and enlightened people shall teach political partisans that the whole is always greater than any part in the administration of our republic.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 9, 1880. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Pres.

Wesley and Paine.

Thurlow Weed in a recent article said: "Contrast the labors of Voltaire and Paine with those of John Wesley. Can it be said with truth that the former two made any one better or happier? . . Voltaire and Paine are only remembered for the evil rather than for the good they did."

Voltaire was the champion of the oppressed against the despots and priests of Europe. For this the Calvinists of Ferney remembered him and revered him, as is shown by a recent book by one of the pastors of Ferney, in which he pays tribute to Voltaire.

In 1775 John Wesley came forward to defend the king's demands upon the Colonies, saying: "No governments under heaven are so despotic as the republican. . . Our sins will never be removed until we fear God and honor the king." At that time the king claimed the right to force the slave trade upon the Colonies, to establish slave marts at the courthouses, to suppress manufactures, to impose taxes without the consent of the Colonies, to deprive the Colonists of the choice of their officers, to take away the trial by jury, to establish a condition of vassalage in the Colonies. John Wesley defended these demands.

Paine in 1776, when, in the struggle for independence, the odds were against Otis, Adams, and Franklin, and their followers, wrote and published his "Common Sense." That turned the tide in favor of freedom. It aroused the people, and they demanded their rights. The hesitating and time-serving joined the party of independence. The priests and tories were overmatched and driven to the wall. If independence was valueless Paine lived in vain, and his labors should be forgotten. But American freemen do not so regard it. They honor the man who championed their cause; and when they examin the falsehoods published by the church about Paine for nearly a century, they despise the men who libeled him.

The secret of clerical hate against Paine was that his free principles tended to abolish the sovereignty of the church as well as the sovereignty of the king. As Shirley, bishop of London, said when denouncing the invasion of prerogativ when Virginia attempted to adjust the emoluments of the church, "The rights of the clergy and the authority of the king must stand or fall together."

The church enslaved Indians and negroes on the plea that Infidels had no rights the church was bound to respect. In the New World the notion grew up that baptism freed negroes, but under the legislation inspired by the church it was enacted that baptism did not confer freedom. Gibson, bishop of London, threw the broad mantle of the church over slavery by his assertion that "Christianity and the embracing of the gospel does not make the least alteration in civil property."

Wesley championed the rights of the king; Paine, the rights of man.

More Comstock Outrages.

In another place we print a letter from H. L. Barter, written from jail, who has been arrested at the instigation of McAffee, Comstock's Western agent, for publishing in the LeClaire Pilot "Libra Dawn; a Sequel to Cupid's Yokes." We are not in sympathy with all the sentiments of "Cupid's Yokes," which we hav read, and so probably are not with the Sequel, which we hav not; but if, as one paper says, the worst parts are literal copies of paragraphs from the former book, we unqualifiedly pronounce Mr. Barter's arrest an outrage, and hope the sensible people of the United States will rally to the support and vindication of the imprisoned editor.

Need of Social Work.

A Liberal in a Western city writes us a letter, in which he laments the want of hospitality and sociability manifested by Liberals there and in other places where he has lived, especially toward newcomers. He moved there with his family six months ago, found out a few Liberal gentlemen and called upon them at their places of business, only one or two of whom ever returned his call at his place of business, and not a Liberal lady has called on his family. In marked contrast with their social unfaithfulness has been the conduct of the church people, who called in generous numbers, and extended the right hand of social fellowship, and invited the new-comers to attend church and social gatherings. Not to be outdone in the amenities and civilities of life many of these calls were returned, and invitations accepted, and our Liberal friend is beginning to wonder how long it will be before his family, in outward conformance with the customs of their associates, will want him to say grace at the table.

The church of to-day owes its success largely to social considerations, a fact that Liberals will do well to make a note of. No doubt thousands of Liberal families are annually lost to the cause by the frigid unsociability of some Liberals, and thousands more could be won over to our ranks by a very small outlay of social courtesy and civility. Liberal ladies ought to be as industrious and self-sacrificing in working for truth as the church ladies are in promoting superstition and error. Open your doors and hearts, and go to work, for you hav a grander gospel to proclaim and purer and loftier principles to animate and cheer you on than your orthodox sisters hav.

As long as the church is allowed the monopoly of social conquest Liberalism will work to a disadvantage.

AMONG the brightest of our exchanges is the American Art Journal, a paper which is making wonderful strides on its successful course. As an exponent of musical matters it stands without a rival on this side of the Atlantic, and its well-filled advertising pages are a good index of its standing among sagacious business men. Its constantly increasing circulation vouches for its popularity, and is a gratifying indication of the rapidly growing love of things musical in this country. We must thank the indomitable energy and earnest perseverance of its young editor and proprietor, Wm. M. Thoms, for one of the most valuable papers on music and musical literature published. It is published at No. 23 Union Square, New York, at three dollars per year.

One of Many Such.

DAVISVILLE, CAL., Aug. 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ, My Dear Friend: Inclosed please find postal order for $20, for you to use as you please.

If there are not enough sensible people in the United States to elect a sensible man for President, I would say, let us suffer until we become wiser. We will gain nothing by voting for the party that used every effort in its power to slaughter our republic.

I am neither a Republican nor a Democrat. I am waiting for a Humanitarian party to organize.

Truly yours, G. G. BRIGGS.

Mrs. Lake in Iowa.

Mrs. Lake lectured in Monticello, Aug. 8th, 9th, and 10th; in Anamosa, Aug. 13th, 14th, and 15th, and is to be at the Marshalltown Convention the 27th, 28th, and 29th; and at Streator, Ill., Sept. 10th, 11th, and 12th.

Parties desiring her services in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan will address her at once at Clinton, Iowa.

Another Outrage on Personal Liberty.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: On Tuesday, August 3, 1880, H. L. Barter, editor and publisher of the LeClaire (Iowa) Pilot, was arrested without a moment's warning and taken to Davenport to answer before U. S. Commissioner White to a charge of publishing and sending through the U. S. mails, a story entitled "Libra Dawn, or Dawn of Liberty," a sequel to "Cupid's Yokes," by Mrs. Maria L. Follett. Information was furnished by a Methodist bigot known as a preacher to Comstock's Western agency at Cincinnati. A spy named McAffee, of St. Louis, was dispatched to LeClaire, where he secured copies of the Pilot; information was filed with U. S. Attorney Lane of Davenport, and the arrest was made by Deputy U. S. Marshal Dixon. The whole animus of this outrage comes directly through pure malice on the part of so-called Christians of LeClaire, with the view of breaking up a Liberal Freethought paper located in LeClaire. In the absence of bail in the sum of $700, I am held to answer before the U. S. Court that will convene at Keokuk in December next.

I send you this information in advance of the Pilot, which will reach you next week.

The enemies of mental freedom in LeClaire are now busy taking advantage of my arrest to secure the foreclosure of a mortgage on the Pilot printing office in the sum of $300, and unless relief is obtained the material will pass out of my control next week, which may cause the suspension of the Pilot, temporarily, at least.

This infamous outrage on personal liberty leaves me entirely without means of support for my family (wife and daughter), who hav already been compelled to go out and seek employment for subsistence. The stroke has been more than I can bear, and almost complete physical prostration has been the result.

I hav been advised to appeal to the Liberals of the country for relief, but would almost prefer to go direct to prison and suffer the full penalty of the law rather than resort to such source for aid, knowing that Liberals hav already their hands full with cases similar to mine. I hav counsel employed to defend me before the court, the cost of which will be about $150, and I will only ask the Liberal men and women of America to aid me in defraying that one item of expense. Of course the result of the trial is yet to be determined some months hence, but as I hav employed eminent counsel, with no means to pay, I feel that it would not be asking too much if the friends of Freethought would remit such amounts as conscience or inclination might dictate to the editor of the Le Claire Pilot, Le Claire, Iowa, all of which will be duly acknowledged, and copies of the paper sent to each during the term of this unjust prosecution or imprisonment.

Liberal papers throughout the country feeling disposed to aid us in this unfortunate affair, will confer a favor by making a copy of the above and sending the bill to the editor of the Pilot, which will be paid at the earliest possible moment. H. L. BARTER.

All communications should be addressed to H. L. Barter, editor Le Claire Pilot, Le Claire, Scott county, Iowa.

Liberal News Items.

THE "posters" are going off like hot cakes. Send on the orders.

THE last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER was a very interesting one. "Let the chatter go on."

THERE will be no want for good boarding-places at cheap rates at the Hornellsville Freethinkers' Convention.

I AM pleased to learn that Mr. Thomas, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, will be at Hornellsville with a large collection of Liberal books for sale.

"WHY Don't God Kill the Devil?" by M. Babcock, just published at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, is the best thing of the season. Send twenty-five cents for a copy.

EVERY auxiliary Liberal League in the United States should be represented at the Liberal League Congress that meets in Chicago on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September.

LIBERALS residing on the line of the Northern Central Railroad should at once send to me for "orders" for excursion tickets on that road to the Freethinkers' Convention.

AN excursion car will leave Salamanca, N. Y., for Chicago September 14th that will convey delegates to the Chicago Liberal League Congress for ten dollars the round trip, with permission to remain in Chicago ten days.

THE Liberals in the various cities of the Union should at once make arrangements for excursion rates of fare from their respectiv cities to the Chicago Congress. By making up a party of ten, fifteen, or twenty, very low rates can be obtained.

THE Northern Central Railroad running from Canandaigua to Baltimore will sell excursion tickets from each of its stations, but the road requires each person coming over that road to first procure an order from me for a ticket. Our Liberal friends from the northern part of the state will find it their best way to go by Canandaigua to Hornellsville.

THE Liberal public can depend on one thing, and that is that the Hornellsville Convention will be made the largest gathering of the kind ever held in this country. From every section I learn of large parties preparing to attend. There will be but few states in the Union but will be represented there, and nearly all of the distinguished speakers in the Liberal ranks will be in attendance.

THE prospects are that the Hornellsville Convention will be the greatest Liberal gathering ever convened on this continent. I hear of parties coming from nearly every northern state and from a number of the Southern states; also from Canada. The arrangements at Hornellsville will be much superior to any ever made for any previous Liberal convention. Liberals everywhere, for a week leave your business and go to the great gathering of the intelligent men and women of America.

I JUST came home from Hornellsville, and I am pleased to learn that the best of arrangements are being made to entertain the thousands who are expected to attend the Convention. The first-class hotels of the city are the Osborn House, the Nicholas House, and the Delevan House. These houses hav agreed to entertain people attending the Convention for $1.00 per day, with the exception of a few persons who may desire their best rooms, and these will be charged only $1.50 per day. The other hotels in the city charge but $1.00 per day, and some boarding-houses will entertain people for from fifty to seventy-five cents a day. There will be many places where meals and lunches can be procured very cheap.

DR. SHATTUCK'S Opera House, in which the Hornellsville Convention is to meet, is one of the best in western New York. It is built of cut stone, and has a seating capacity of about two thousand. It has two large galleries that will accommodate many hundred people. But as it is anticipated that this large building will not accommodate all who will attend, the Hornellsville Liberal League is fitting up in fine style the large park for out-door meetings. This park is well shaded by large maple trees. It will be an admirable place in which to hold the meeting. Along the park is a wide strip of land on which tents can be erected by those desiring to tent out. H. L. GREEN.

Literary and Political.

Book Notices.

THE GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES. A historical work. By D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth street. 1880. 957. pp. Vol. II.

We hav here the completion of Mr. Bennett's remarkable work, while in prison. The vast and varied field of the religious world is spread before us, not only as other students hav presented it, but from new and original standpoints. Such a comprehensiv survey has not heretofore been given by so radical a thinker, and the old religions assume a fresh importance in the light thus thrown upon them, and the new relations discovered. Fetichism, Polytheism, Mythology, Phallism, Brahmanism, Buddhism, the religions of Persia, Chaldea, China, Thibet, Egypt, Assyria, Phœnicia, Greece, Rome, Germany, and ancient Britain are brought clearly to view, their fundamental thoughts and tendencies outlined, while the whole survey is concluded with a masterly criticism of Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity.

Especially noticeable is the treatment of Phallism, giving the latest results of historical study concerning that obscure yet all-important phase of religious development. The "tidal wave" of sex worship swept through almost every race, and was subtly present in the very highest acts of devotion. This certainly was a natural impulse of the human heart, perfectly childlike and pure, though afterwards degenerating into degrading ceremonies. But the male and female principles of life running all through nature, and quivering in the flesh and blood of man himself, and giving birth to strength and beauty, these must seem to the glowing soul infinitly beautiful and wonderful, and worthy of adoration—and this worship spiritualized will continue in finer expressions; for man is greatest when he bows in reverence to woman, and woman is noblest when she seeks her ideal excellence in manly attributes.

Mr. Bennett's treatment of this subject is exceedingly interesting, although the limits of his book do not allow him to giv more than glimpses of this profound and wondrous element of religious growth.

He shows us Judaism as it really is, not a sublime monotheistic religion, unique among all others, but a simple growth from Fetichism into the worship of a tribal God, and thence through slow degrees to the exalted religious outlook of Isaiah. In this prophet we come to the mountain-hight of Hebrew religion, but before that it passed through many a jungle of barbaric superstition. It was not by any means "fresh from heaven." Mr. Bennett exhibits the different phases through which this religion has passed, from the lowest to the highest, showing that in the lowest it was akin with all other religious developments, and in the highest was not free from many a falsehood. The transcendent idea of Judaism is not the oneness of God, but the glowing image of the Messiah, and through this ideal Judaism has been of immense service to humanity in the undying hope that it has given of the "kingdom of heaven," of the triumph of the beautiful and the good, and the fulfilment of the passionate longing for happiness and progress.

Mr. Bennett portrays with eloquent and facil pen the superiority in many respects of Mohammed to Jesus. The former was really the stronger man of the two, and while he had not the exquisit tenderness of Jesus, he had more sublime, heroic qualities; he was more the master of his circumstances; he had more creativ ability. Mohammed has been looked upon as an impostor, but we see in the picture given of him here, as well as in the pages of the best interpreters of history, that he was the expression of the struggling and tremendous life of his time. The religion of Mohammed triumphed through the natural force it possessed, not through any miracles, for Mohammed disdained miracles; and so deeply responsiv was his doctrin to the human heart that it did not, like Christianity, need a sword to carry it along; and this imperial, natural force of Mohammedanism is seen to-day, for in the East it is making a thousand converts to where Christianity is making one; and in that strange and mighty movement called Babism we see the inward life of this religion manifested anew, and with a wonder and power that puts to shame the most exciting revivals of Christianity. Nothing in the history of the world is so extraordinary as the growth of Babism. It is romantic and glorious as a poet's dream.

Mr. Bennett's exposition of Christianity is the most original and interesting part of the book. He shows in the first place the fabulous nature of the gospels; that they cannot be relied upon at all for authentic history; we know nothing about the authors, and their statements upon any point hav not the slightest outside corroboration. Christianity is evidently the outcome of a myth, and that myth floated down from the primeval world, and from many races and religions. Jesus was simply the starting-point of an "old, old story" retold. St. Paul's career did more than anything else to make him popular. St. Paul was really the founder of Christianity, for his ideal Christ—the creation of his own brain—had much more to do with it than the plain and simple Jesus who lived in Galilee.

Mr. Bennett clearly shows the vast, and indeed fundamental, influence of paganism upon Christianity. In fact there is more of Greek and Roman paganism in Christianity than of the Judaic ideas. Christianity, instead of being, as is popularly supposed, a "revelation" to paganism, owed most of its power to paganism. It was simpy a new paganism. It was a re-creation of the old heathen festivals, rites, doctrins, and institutions.

Christianity was purely the growth of its time, and answered the thought and life of its time and suited the fashion of its time. It was a religion made up from many sources, and was admirably adapted for the success it achieved; but its success was no more remarkable than the success of anything that for the time being answers to the heart and hope of humanity. What it has done it has done; and the end is at hand. Christianity, like all other religions, is a child of the past, and with the dead past it must be buried. It has no living mission. Born of a myth, that myth has now become a lie, and it must perish. The hypocrit takes the place of the martyr, and woe be unto him. Christianity is no longer a sincere religion; it is a respectable make believe. It cannot endure the wear and tear of modern thought. Its wine is drank up; its bottles must be thrown away.

All this, and many things more, Mr. Bennett shows in his book large enough for a library, the composition of which must hav lighted many a weary hour. What has been a joy to him is a benefit to ourselvs. This is an immensely valuable work, and should be in the hands of every Liberal. The information it contains is of the first importance, and its philosophy and scientific criticism are of the highest order.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

---

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav been reading, reviewing, wondering, and admiring thy Volume II. of the "Gods and Religions," until I am actually lost in amazement at the great and truly valuable work thee has accomplished. It is precisely such a book as I hav always desired to possess—an impartial, plain, and comprehensiv yet brief review of all the principal religions of the world, both ancient and modern. It will supply a long felt want of all Freethinking philosophers, and will be a more glorious memento of honor to thee than any medal ever given to the ephemeral hero of the hour by prince, lord, or king. It is a work of such powerful and all-comprehensiv thought as few minds are capable of. Just fancy one's self going back to the childhood of the world and studying the primitiv religions of its wild, savage, barbarous, and scarcely human inhabitants, whose intellectual capacity never rose above the most simple fetichism that imparted personality to inanimate objects, and whose highest morality consisted in revenge for injuries and self-gratification of appetite and passion; and gradually following the slow footsteps of the ages, during which mankind has progressed atom by atom to the present comparativly educated, cultured, and scientific station of evolutionary development, which is slowly but surely eliminating all devils, gods, and religions from the world's great book of life.

Surely the mind that is capable of doing this, and doing it, too, amid such surroundings as our Bennett was compelled to endure, "shut up in a single room, with twenty sick and dying men all around, with a limited number of text-books within reach, with the consequent heaviness of heart induced by the sense of wrongs inflicted by bigoted and deadly enemies in the imprisonment suffered," is one that we should all delight to reverence and respect.

The great biographer, our honored and ever-esteemed coworker for human progress and a broader and freer civilization, James Parton, says of the book these commendatory words, which all Liberals must cherish in memory as a tribute of precious incense offered to our hero and the cause he so nobly represents:

It strikes me dumb with wonder. How you could hav executed such a task, in such unpropitious circumstances, in the space of eleven months, passes my understanding. I should hav wanted twenty-five years for it, and then should not hav been half as interesting as you hav made it. Your work is one long exhibition of the weakness and cowardice of man, and shows how, in every age and in all climes, he has been cheated and plundered through his fears. What fools we hav been and what fools we are! Your example, I hope, will make many men not afraid to touch the idol and help level it with the dust. But when the idol is overthrown, the great problem of human happiness will remain. Never forget that.

I hav been running the leaves of the volume over, trying to decide which part of the book I like the best, and believe I shall giv the palm of interest to the chapter upon Essenism, as it is supposed to be the religion from which Christianity, our prevailing mythology, originated; itself being probably an evolution of the doctrins and beliefs of the Therapeuts of Egypt, as one can see a striking analogy between the three systems, and the gradual merging of identity as you trace them backward along the track of the ages.

A cheaper or more satisfactory work upon the great religions of the earth cannot be wished for than is here given us by D. M. Bennett, the great champion writer and publisher of Freethought literature,

"Who'd rather wear a crown of thorns
With souls that dare be free,
Than own the costliest diadem
At price of liberty."

Snowville, Va. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

---

[From the Boston Investigator.]

The second volume of this great work is quite as interesting as the first volume. It comprises 957 pages, and as the first volume relates chiefly to the gods, the second has reference to the religions of the world. A brief but comprehensiv description is given of the leading forms of faith, from fetichism so on to its culmination and development into popular Christianity, two hundred and fifty pages being given to a candid consideration of the latter form of faith and worship, beginning with its origin and tracing with bold and trenchant pen its many vagaries, interpolations, falsities, quarrels, saviors, persecutions, contentions, etc. This makes a very interesting part of an able and instructiv work that ought to be in every library in the land. Undoubtedly these two volumes contain a greater amount of useful information upon the subject treated than any other work of the kind ever published.

Mr. S. P. Putnam adds closing remarks commendatory of the book, which opens with a portrait of the talented and industrious author in prison garb, worn while a prisoner in the Albany Penitentiary. All who realize the injustice and cruelty of that sentence, whereby a citizen of the United States was locked in prison with criminals of all shades for thirteen long months, will be pleased to secure this work of Mr. Bennett and be glad to aid in its circulation, which should be as wide as the world; and no one can read it without feeling he has obtained his money's worth and much more in excellent and worthy reading, in instructiv and valuable knowledge.

I hav also been looking over a new Liberal hymn-book by Eliza Boardman Burnz. The selections and adaptations are all good and Liberal, the tunes popular and, some, inspiring. The book is in compact form, can be carried in the pocket, type and paper good, and bears the following mottoes: "The one sole sacred thing beneath the cope of heaven is man." "To do good is my religion."

This little book of hymns and songs, I should think, would be welcome to Liberal Leagues and progressiv societies. It may be obtained, I believe, of D. M. Bennett, New York. SUSAN H. WIXON.

Fall River, Mass., Aug. 4, 1880.

---

[From Truth.]

It is the second volume of a work which was written exclusively in prison by Mr. D. M. Bennett. The author acknowledges in his preface that the disadvantages under which he wrote the book—or rather compiled the materials forming it—were many. He was shut up in a single room with twenty sick and dying men all around, and with a limited number of text-books within reach, and with the consequent heaviness of heart induced by the sense of the wrongs inflicted by bigoted and deadly enemies. Of these disadvantages the last may, however, alone be considered to hav had a direct influence on the work, and that only in a limited degree. Mr. Bennett, as is well known, was sentenced to serve a term of thirteen months in the Albany Penitentiary by Judge Benedict, upon the charge preferred by Anthony Comstock of sending indecent matter through the United States mails. Mr. Bennett was found guilty of mailing a book entitled "Cupid's Yokes," by Mr. E. H. Heywood, which treated physiological questions in regard to the binding forces of human life from a purely scientific point of view. The true cause of the conviction is to be found in the fact that Mr. Bennett was an Infidel editor and publisher, and this, more than anything else, induced a "Christian" jury to return a verdict of guilty against him. Taking these circumstances into consideration, it is hardly surprising that a spirit of resentment at past injuries should hav pervaded the subsequent productions of Mr. Bennett's pen, and that the present work should not only be a history of the gods and religions, but also a determined phillipic against the Christian religion and its supporters. This spirit is clearly betrayed by the comparisons the author draws between the merits of Buddhism, the teachings of Confucius, and Christianity. Speaking of Buddha and Christ, for instance, he says: "Both taught the most severe self-denial, but Buddha went the farthest in this direction. Both hav tended to improve the morals of the nations which hav embraced them. Here again the palm must be accorded to Buddha, for in Buddhistic countries—according to the testimony of a Christian missionary—there exists a higher and more perfect state of morals than can be found in any Christian country in the world. Both are credited with having lived lives of self-denial, but in this respect Buddha has far the advantage in credit."

Of Confucius, the author says:

"He gave at least twenty times as many lessons as Jesus. He was a man of education; it is not known that Jesus was. He pronounced curses on none; Jesus did. He consigned no hapless mortals to hell; Jesus did. He did not manifest a spirit of revenge; Jesus did. He did not order his disciples to steal an ass and colt; Jesus did."

Thus throughout the book the points of difference between Christianity and other persuasions are shown to be in favor of the latter. However just and logical the author's arguments may therefore be, they unfortunately lose a great deal of their weight; that is, they offer weak points by the semblance of partiality in which they are clothed.

In other respects the book may be considered perfect, and fully justifies the hope—expressed by the author—that "it will impart more information on the subject of gods and religions than has ever been embodied in one work before."

The religious beliefs of poor humanity are carefully classed and dissected from the fetichism and animism of hundreds of centuries ago to the more complicated, but equally vague, religions of the present day. Most if not all of the author's information concerning the older religions is derived from works and documents of unquestionable authenticity, and where incidents or statements of any description are open to doubt, the author does not fail to mention the fact.

Passing over the descriptions of the many obsolete religions and coming to the author's treatment of Christianity, we find that the first point impressed upon the reader's mind is the vague origin and unauthenticity of the four gospels upon which the whole system is based. With astounding force of argument and indisputable authority the writings of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John are shown to be apocryphal and only worthy of credence in as far as they coincide with the authentic historical works of those times. Furthermore, entering into the merits of the tenets of Christianity, it is clearly proved that the system had not a divine origin, that it was not a dispensation from heaven, and that in every essential particular it is a mere plagiarism. This conclusion will be easily reached by the careful reader who will not fail to observe the innumerable points of resemblance between the teachings of Christianity and those of religions which existed centuries before Christ came on earth.

None of Mr. Bennett's arguments are absolutely new or original, for since Voltaire's time till the present day scores of men in various public ways hav braved the resentment of popular sentiment and exposed the weak parts of the Christian structure. But in offering the present work to the public the author has compiled and revised materials of the most varied character, and has enabled many to form a really correct idea on the subject of gods and religion.

Politics Again.

Our good brother Leland has it bad—that is, the Democratic fever. But it is always pleasant reading his spicy articles, and you almost lose sight of his extreme credulity where Democratic promises are concerned in your spontaneous admiration of his unsurpassed command of language and his dextrous use thereof in spiking an incautious opponent upon the horn of a dilemma.

Our friend makes great account of the "sweeping" character of the Democratic plank relating to separation of church and state. It is right here that the trap lies concealed. Those "sweeping" planks do not specify enough. They may mean anything or they may mean nothing. It is far more likely that it is nothing. It is passing strange that a man of Mr. Leland's acuteness of intellect should be so easily deluded by party clap-trap. Does he not know that even the God-in-the-Constitution party stoutly protests against a union of church and state? Does he not know that the phrase, "separation of church and state," is in the mouth of every man in the land, and that not one in ten uses it in the sense that we do? To illustrate: Some few months ago I got into a discussion with an old gentleman upon the relation of church and state. I told him that the mission of the League was to secure the complete separation of state and church. He opened mouth and eyes in astonishment, and stoutly averred that there was no such marriage in this country, that every man stood upon an equal footing with every other man so far as religion was concerned, that our Constitution guaranteed and our laws secured complete freedom and equality here. I mentioned the judicial oath, and called his attention to instances where men had been refused the right to testify in American courts of justice because of their Atheistic belief. "Why," he instantly replied, "a man who does not believe in God has no right to testify; he has no right to vote." And he believed in "separation of church and state for the good of each," brother Leland. His conception of the secular state was a government wherein the Atheist should hav none of the rights of the citizen. Just so with the Democratic party, its voters, as a mass, hav not a whit truer conception of what this much-used and abused phrase means. What does the Democratic declaration amount to, read in the light of the past actions of that party? Will Mr. Leland please tell us just how many millions of dollars the Democratic legislature of New York has filched from the pockets of the people of that state and put into the coffers of the Catholic and other churches? Giv us the figures, brother, please. They will be cool reading this hot weather, and would make a nice Demo-Liberal campaign document.

Brother Leland likes the Democratic plank because its demand is so sweeping, and don't like the Greenback plank for precisely the same reason. This is queer. He says of the Republican Garfield's letter that in specifying one thing he necessarily excluded all others; then he turns around and whacks the Greenbackers because they did not specify one and thus exclude all others, but said, "Tax all property." Sharpen that old goose-quill and try again, my friend.

Our enthusiastic new convert to Democracy says, "Just giv them [the Democrats] the chance of one Congress to do something." Whew! My dear sir, hav you forgotten that they hav had the House for nearly four years, and both Senate and House for nearly two? Don't you know that it was to a Democratic House that your and my petitions for the repeal of the Comstock laws were sent? What did it do? Echo answers: "Do? Nothing" But the President's veto? Was it afraid of the veto when it tacked its riders upon the appropriation bills?

But "Walker sadly confesses that the Greenbackers open their conventions with prayer." Exactly, and if the partisans of the Democratic and Republican parties would make the same frank confession it would be well for them. They would feel better for it. I am sorry that the Greenback party is even to that exrent the slave of the church power, but herein it is no worse than the others; and in other respects it is so much better that no comparison save that of contrast is possible.

Mr. Leland has suddenly accepted the "consensus of the competent" as his political guide. He is going to do just as the Congress of the League shall determin. Well, so am I—if it determins right. But I shall not vote for the party which, through two decades, has sought to make a man's right of citizenship depend upon the color of his skin; the party which in New York and other sections of the country has boldly voted tens of millions of dollars into the coffers of the church, and the party which, dominant in Congress, has done nothing to repeal the infamous Comstock postal laws. As to the Republican party, I am sworn to an unceasing warfare upon it. It is only fit for contempt. On the Greenback ticket, Chambers is a good man, but under our miserable electoral system we can only vote for one national candidate by voting for both. Let us hav a Liberal party or support the only reform party in existence.

Norway, Iowa. E. C. WALKER.

REMARKS BY T. C. L.

No, Bro. Walker—a Liberal fever, and got it good. I mean to go for the best interests of Liberalism even if every Republican should be turned out of office and the pious Weaver should not get an electorial vote.

Mr. Walker should know that I am no new convert to the Liberal political policy I am now advocating. I won't say I proposed, but I concurred in the same plan of action last year. I advocated it and wrote for it, and it was everywhere well received—not a ripple of opposition that I heard. The Astor House meeting was convened with that idea. The annual Congress of the League was fixed at Cincinnati, and called one month earlier than the year before, with the express and avowed purpose, and with general Liberal concurrence in that purpose, of operating on the election in Ohio against the Republicans and in favor of the Democrats. What has happened to make it wrong this year?

If you don't like the word "sweeping" I will say "inclusiv." Granted that all platforms and all planks mean nothing, then the Democratic "separation of church and state" includes more nothing than Garfield's "separation of church and state in everything relating to taxation," and includes more nothing than the Greenback "taxation of all property." Indeed he Greenback is the least inclusiv of the lot, because under it you can tax all property and then appropriate the taxes to support Sunday-schools and Bible societies. Under Garfield you could tax all but couldn't appropriate a cent to sectarian purposes. Under the Democratic the same, besides several other things hat you couldn't do. If the Greenback folks had just said, "Taxation of all property, including church property," they would hav specified "one thing" without leaving out anything. You see the English language furnishes facilities for various ways of specifying "one thing." Some folks know how to hit just the right way, and some don't. Besides, as platforms mean nothing, the pious Weaver, when he takes his seat as President, can swear by Almighty God that the God he swore by owns his own houses, and so they are not property. Only property that man owns is property. That is no more preposterous than the ruling that a Christian is not a sectarian. But to hav planked it down solid, "Taxation of all property, including church property," would hav headed off all dodging. To be sure it all "means nothing" anyhow; but then nothing is just as important as something. You would hav a high old time whirling the crank of your universe if you hadn't nothing to whirl it in. Would you like another and an extra fine point to the "goose quill," dear brother?

I never hav said there are no Democrats who believe in Comstock. There are a few, and one or two of them were on the Democratic Committee of the House before whom the petition of 70,000 went for the repeal of the Comstock law. Those one or two blocked the game. The Democratic Committee of this present Congress are made of different timber. Comstock tried to get improvements and extensions on his obscene patent from this Committee, but failed—one of the Committee, a Democrat, going so far as to denounce the admittance to the Committee-room of such a monster as Comstock, and emphasizing his protest by absenting himself from the Committee when Comstock was heard. The Liberals hav asked no legislation from this Congress, and none has been refused, so nothing can be predicated upon that.

Mr. Walker asks me to tell him "just how many millions the Democratic Legislature of New York has filche d from the pockets of the people and put into the coffers of Catholic and other churches." As to that I am an Agnostic—don't know—can't say. I am writing five miles from a statistic of any kind, and don't go around with my memory loaded up with that sort of lumber. Name any sum you like. I will concede it; and then go right on advocating the policy of putting General Hancock in control, not of a state legislature, but of the Republic. Besides, the Republicans are in power now in the state of New York, and are making just as good time exempting church property from taxation, stealing the proceeds of taxation on other property, and putting it into the coffers of the Protestant church as ever the Democrats did. Then when you get all through fooling with a little special pleading of that kind, you hav not made an ounce of impression upon my main proposition to organize a League of half a million or more of voters, then let that body of massed brains, united hearts, and helping hands use the two great parties as clubs to beat each other's brains out. In that process you hav got to begin voting some time and in some way. The best time to begin is now, and the best way is to take the Democratic outs and knock their heads against the Republican ins. Vote always with the outs till the inns get sense enough to respect the traditions of the republic in letter and spirit, then continue to vote with them as long as they are true to justice, equality, fraternity, and not a moment longer. I hav believed, and still believe, that there are well on toward a million of voters who can be stirred up to "such a sudden flood of mutiny" against both the old parties, and who will devote themselvs heartily to the project of voting solidly and loyally together as Liberals for either of the old parties, or for a new and independent one, as the Congress of delegates of the Liberal League assembled in any particular year shall designate. There's where my "credulity" is large, and there is where it may be "extreme" and at fault. But I don't believe it.

I see many advantages in uniting with the Greenbackers this fall; and if the Congress shall resolve that that is the best policy this year, I shall cordially submit. I shall not feel hurt or soreheaded in any way if Liberal politics should take that shape. But I think the policy of playing off the two main parties against each other has many more advantages and will secure the most immediate and satisfactory results. I am advocating what I deem the best policy. I could say much for the alliance with the Greenbackers, but I hav no time, nor THE TRUTH SEEKER room, for me to champion all the parties. Mr. Walker must hoe his own row, and he is doing it very admirably. I don't see why he should expect me to hoe mine and his too. Division of labor is the true economy. After the "competent" hav "consensed" and promulgated their decree, if the decree is Greenbacks, I will turn in and dig for dear life with him, though he says he will see the "consensus" teetotally damned before he will touch "de shubble" or "de hoe" for me and my policy. He will go into the Convention to rake in the bets if he wins, but will bolt and swear he wasn't in the play if he loses. The lovers of fair play hav appropriate terms for sportsmen like that, but I will not indicate them. When he thinks the subject all over, they will occur to his own just perceptions.

"Darkness Covers the Earth and Gross Darkness the People."

To all those who love truth above church or party these words are addressed: In the last few weeks we hav seen the amazing spectacle of a man who has been unjustly and wickedly imprisoned and from whom the prison garb has hardly been taken off, earnestly ask the people to support the very power that deprived him of his liberty. I am glad Bro. Bennett has freely spoken his honest feelings in his own paper, for it not only shows the condition of his own mind, but it has shown clearly the condition the people are in who hav responded to his words. Mr. Bennett holds the Republican party responsible for the enactment of the unjust law that put him in prison. It is true the law that imprisoned Mr. Bennett and others was enacted under the administration of the Republican party, but all these unjust laws are but the natural fruit of arbitrary, man-made governments founded in force. There has been but one party in power since the formation of that instrument of death, the United States Constitution, and that party is an unlawful party of oppressors, having no rightful authority whatsoever to rule over their fellow-men.

Cannot Mr. Bennett and all other good men and women see that it was law that has imprisoned and murdered the millions in the past? Not a villainous deed has been done for five thousand years but has been done in the name and under the authority of law. Will Mr. Bennett and the noble army of Freethinkers submit to be ruled by an arbitrary power called legislators? Says Stephen Pearl Andrews, "A liberty which anybody else in the universe has a right to define is no liberty for me; a pursuit of happiness which some despot or some oligarchy or some tyrannical majority has the power to shape and prescribe for me is not the pursuit of my happiness."

Who made the infamous Fugitive Slave law? A slave-holding oligarchy. Who enacted the equally infamous obscenity law? A tyrannical majority. Will Liberalists, reformers, submit to be ruled by an arbitrary tyrannical majority? It is lowering the moral standard to discuss the question for a moment which is most corrupt, the Republican or Democratic party. As Mr. Garrison used to say, "They are sold to the devil (the money power) and paid for."

We hav had but one party in power for at least fifty years, and that is this tyrannical majority ruling other people's consciences, which they hav no right to do. To reinstate the Democratic party in power again is only to allow another hungry pack of political wolves to gorge themselvs from the already depleted ruins of the people. The plea that if we vote for a new party we shall throw away our vote because they may not meet with present success is the selfish plea of policy. What hav we as reformers to do with the question of success? It should be a matter of principle with us, and we should stand by that principle if it take a hundred years to succeed.

There is no party before the people that a true reformer can afford to support. The platform of the Greenback party in moral principle is far ahead of either the other two parties, but even they must open their meeting with a blasphemous lie, a prayer to an unknown God. That one act, in the estimation of those who liv for a great moral principle, is enough to damn any party. Another important thing must not be forgotten: until the people outgrow their love for military glory and are unwilling to hav a military man for a leader, we hav no right to complain of oppressiv laws. The people are not ready for a truly reform party. They hav not suffered enough yet. As my esteemed friend A. H. Wood says, "Nothing short of dire suffering will heal the disease of the people." That is true. Five thousand years of priestly and kingly rule has made the people slaves; and these slaves will submit many years longer to be ruled by tyrants. And the greater the tyrant, the more they are oppressed, the sooner they will rise and demand their rights. Nothing can be done for the good of humanity by working with the old parties and taking an oath to support their blood-stained constitutions. When Charles Bradlaugh consented to become a member of Parliament and then took the oath of office, he became one of a party whose chief business ever has been, and is, to rob the people of every right worth living for. William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, two of the grandest reformers the world ever produced, never voted, but stood outside of all political parties, directing the people to a higher condition than joining hands with the worst of thieves and robbers under the false plea of doing good.

To all truly redeemed souls, men and women who hav ceased to hanker after political "flesh-pots," I say: Wait with patience a few years longer; our time has not yet come. Let Christians and politicians continue their war against humanity; ours is a work of love. We cannot take an oath to support their unholy government and blood-stained constitutions. It is ours to teach a higher condition than mere brute force, where the strong devour the weak.

Let us calmly and patiently wait, always earnestly protesting against this tyrannical majority's right to rule over us or set bounds to our right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Mankind are not to be redeemed, regenerated, and brought up to a state of true human brotherhood by the force principle. Never until the world is ruled by love will there be peace on earth and good will among men. In the fulness of time men and women, purified by suffering, will come together, not drunk, as were all three of the old-dispensation parties, but calmly, noiselessly, and with a spirit of fraternal feelings, without oath or prayers, form a new order of brotherhood, needing no swords or cannons or other death-dealing implements to support it.

The person who is to inaugurate this grand movement has not yet stepped to the front, but certainly will in the fulness of time. At the present time the people are without a leader. But this painful condition (painful to all but a very few) can last but a few years longer. A few years of suffering and purification will prepare the people for the reign of love which is to supersede the reign of force. For this good time sure to come let us labor and wait.

Yours against all compromise, SEWARD MITCHELL.

Letters from Friends.

OSHAWA, ONT., July 30, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please find herewith two dollars, for which continue THE TRUTH SEEKER as heretofore.

I notice Mr. W. F. Jamieson figures quite largely in the lecture field, and undoubtedly is doing a good work for the advancement of Freethought. I am unable to see the force of his logic as opposed to the philosophy or facts of Spiritualism. Evidently the process by which we determin the evidence that goes to prove that Spiritual intercourse is possible is somewhat different from that ordinarily applied in the analysis of sensuous subjects.

I remember a few years ago Prof. Mapes supposed he had discovered a good fertilizer, and was somewhat elated with the idea that ultimately the discovery would bring him a large fortune.

He had found a substance that had all the elements of bone, so far as he was able to determin by chemical analysis. Experiments were made in New Jersey, and I believe quite a quantity of this supposed fertilizer was shipped to England. It turned out, however, to be a stupendous failure, and his anticipated fortune suddenly departed. Prof. Mapes learned an important lesson by these experiments. He was taught that there was somethiog in bone that chemistry could not analyze by any crucible test. I presume Mr. Jamieson will not deny that bone dust is one of the best fertilizers.

So far as popular science goes, as understood at the present time, it does not recognize the facts of Spiritualism; indeed their crucible has not the modern improvements essential in the investigation. It seems that Mr. Jamieson not only ignores the facts, but the necessary condition required to get them. A medium must necessarily be a sensitiv person, easily affected by surrounding conditions, which must be all good to be successful; any little disturbance will defeat the whole thing.

Yet enough light has been discovered to convince us that there is a law in mesmerism and psychology which must be respected. A good number among the disbelievers in Spiritual intercourse believe that there are occult forces in nature not yet understood that will finally explain this mystery. Dr. J. R Buchanan has had as large experience in anthropology, probably, as any one in America, and his conclusions are worth considering, at least when we take into account the volume of testimony that comes from all classes.

I think the difficulty with Mr. Jamieson is he does not roost high enough to take in the philosophy of this subject. So long as he holds that spiritual intercourse is a stupendous humbug, he holds a relation to it that prevents candid investigation. A successful investigation of any question requires that we should approach it in childish simplicity rather than boastfully demand that the truth shall be forced on to our understanding. The truth can get along without him as well as he can without it. Yours truly,

H. C. WHITING.

---

CARTHAGE, MO., Aug. 1, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: As my brother's time is nearly run out, and we do not want to giv up the good old ship, I here inclose one dollar to renew subscription until we can send the full amount.

I hav heard of late quite a number railing out against you because you see fit to vote for Hancock. I do not call that good Liberalism. I say do not vote for party but for principle. If you think Hancock can bring about that which we Greenbackers are working for, why, I say, vote for him. This is yet a free land. Because my friend won't vote as I would like to hav him I am not going to cuss him and quit his paper for that. No sir; giv me liberty. I grant it to every one. If it has come to pass that we hav to be led to the polls like dumb brutes, and can vote only as others dictate to us, I think it is time to turn over a new leaf. I shall vote this fall for that principle which, though it may not win this election, I truly believe will, if it can honestly be carried out, save this nation from ruin.

Fraternally, Z. E. WHITFIELD.

---

NORDHOFF, ILL., July 21, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am very glad you are out of the Christian bastile, and as bold and courageous as ever. I don't mind telling you, now that you are safe and well, that I am glad they put you in. I wrote a letter to his fraudulency advising him, if he had any influence whatever in the administration of the government, to use it in getting the law repealed by which you were placed in prison. I was satisfied from the first that your incarceration would do more to advance the cause of free thought and discussion than any event which had happened in the last half century. I would like to order a number of books, but my finances are too low. Yours truly, FRED ROBINSON.

---

NEW ALBANY, IND., August 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: My address for the future will be Piedra, Conejos county, Col. We intend to build up a Liberal colony in that section, and if any good Liberals wish information, and are in earnest, they can address me, or J. Allen Evans. We wish to get enough Liberals interested to enable us to establish one of the best societies and a first-class scientific school. No long-faced priest need apply. Yours for light and right, O. C. LITTLE.

---

HAMBURG, N. Y., Aug. 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav received both volumes of your new work, and am very much pleased with them. I would not part with them for ten times the amount paid.

As it is time for you to take your departure for Europe, I wish you a safe and pleasant journey, and may you in due time return to the many dear friends you leave on this side of the Atlantic. Yours truly, E. M. SICKMAN.

---

PAINESVILLE, O., July 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find one dollar to help you and RAWSON over the Atlantic Ocean to the Brussels Liberal Convention. I hav delayed congratulating you on your safe arrival home and the glorious reception tendered you, but from your first start at Paris, Illinois, you know I hav been with you in heart.

Yours most truly, J. SEDGEBEER.

---

NORTHFIELD, MINN., Aug. 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Hurrah for Slenker! Cheers for Elmina, purity, and freedom! How many thoughtful ones will rally round the flag so bravely unfurled by our noble sister and dedicate their best forces to life's holier uses? While we reverently bow before the glorious truth so new to many, we ask the brothers and sisters who secretly scorn to raise a dissenting voice if they dare. Rather shield yourselvs in silence. THE TRUTH SEEKER has no need of that worst remnant of orthodoxy which so fatally retards growth in social and mental freedom. Education is the need of the hour. We feel that man will gracefully yield to the highest law and woman's purer love and finer intuition when the light is shed more luminously around him, and that relic of barbarism, the unhallowed knot, will be forever dispensed with. All hail the coming day!

SADIE RICE.

---

HURRAH FOR A REAL LIBERAL PAPER!

BERLIN, N. J., July 31, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I see that you hav opened your paper to politics, and believe you are right. I hav long believed that a real Liberal paper should be open to a free discussion of all sides of all questions relating to the happiness of the race, and hav desired to see some paper pursue that course, feeling assured it would eventually take the lead of all other papers. Hitherto all political papers hav been devoted wholly to articles of a party character, each one advocating only one side of a question and shutting out all else, and consequently such papers hav been like horses blind in one eye and always blundering out of the road into the ditch, some on one side and some on the other, and none of them ever in the middle of the road. You have started on a different method. You are giving articles on all sides. This is right, and if you continue that course you will succeed. But you must expect to meet with grumbling and snarling at best, and perhaps many whom you esteemed your best friends will cry "Stop my paper," and turn back like the "dog to his vomit," for it is a fact that there are as many bigots in politics as in religion, and bigots on all subjects always like to hav their own say and then close the mouths of all who do not agree with them, for they are not willing that all sides should be heard. But if a few such bigots get angry and forsake you, twice their number of better men will rally around your free standard and bring others with them. A true Liberal not only desires liberty to express his own thoughts but is willing for all others to do the same, however different their opinions. Yes, I am glad you hav opened your paper to all sides of the political question, and hope all your readers will suppress their prejudices enough to read all sides candidly and then decide to go the way truth points though they hav to forsake old parties and separate from old friends. This an age of progress. It is not enough for Liberal papers to kill Jonah's whale or point out the errors of the past; but they must lead in the future and be truth seekers in deed as well as in name, and this they cannot be without looking at both sides of every path they attempt to travel. Yours for all truth,

THE DEAF HERMIT.

---

BELLOWS FALLS, VT., August 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I received the second volume of the "Gods," and am very much pleased with the book. I hav now the volume you wrote in Ludlow Street Jail and the two you wrote while in Albany Penitentiary, and value the three volumes more than five times the cost of them.

Yours truly, N. MONROE.

---

EDDYTOWN, N. Y., August 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find one dollar to apply on my subscription.

I see you are noticed by Mr. Holland in his magazine. I confess I am somewhat surprised at his course in this matter, for I thought him quite too just a man, and somewhat Liberal withal. He has admitted some articles to his magazine of quite a Liberal character, so much so that they subjected their author, a clergyman, to disciplin by his brethren of the cloth. They appeared under the title "Modern Skepticism," and are ably written. The ground taken was that there are fairly two sides to the questions in dispute between the orthodox and their scientific opponents, and that if orthodoxy cannot stand on a scientific basis it must giv up and go under. That was too much for orthodoxy, so the author was called to account. I suppose Mr. Holland thought the Chickering Hall meeting afforded too good a chance to attack you and all your friends, and blacken your and their characters by calling bad names, for the glory of God and the good of his church. And then it gave a good opportunity to laud Anthony and show what a work of good he is doing in prosecuting and persecuting you. Such things make some people happy, and it seems to elevate them so much to see others pulled down!

Mr. Holland thinks, perhaps, that a lie well stuck to is as good as the truth, or he would hav allowed you to defend yourself in his magazine. I am sorry, for I shall not think as highly of him as I did. After all, is it not about what you might expect from his inevitable theological bias, as Herbert Spencer would say?

It will be a long time before Christians will treat their opponents with fairness and that charity they affect so much. The leaders know very well that a fair and plain statement of the facts would not answer their purpose at all.

I am glad your paper is so entirely open for a free discussion of any topics of public interest. I hav been greatly interested in the discussion of Spiritualism. It is a subject that will bear a great deal of discussion and leave something yet to be said. Denunciation, ridicule, and the cry of fraud will not explain anything. The facts remain, and if they can be explained by any other hypothesis than the one Spiritualists offer, let the explanation come. I hav not seen an attempted explanation that came within a thousand miles of it. Getting angry and calling harsh names certainly do not throw any light upon it.

Mr. Jamieson is anxious for a discussion with some Spiritualist. Really I do not see much ground or basis for a discussion. Certainly it cannot be settled by argument merely. At the bottom it is altogether a question of fact. Certain facts occur, or seem to occur. First let us settle this. The facts do occur; communications are received; material forces are manifested, intelligence is manifested not due to any person in the circle. Now all there is about it is for the opponents of the spirit hypothesis to giv an explanation of these facts not embodying that hypothesis. It won't do to cry humbug, fraud, and all that. If Mr. Jamieson is so sure the Spiritual hypothesis is not the true one, if he has any other explanation of the facts, will he please favor us with it in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER?

Yours for the right, always and everywhere,

W. H. GLIN.

---

MODESTO, CAL., July 25, 1880.

MR. EDITOR; I hav circulated THE TRUTH SEEKER among the friends of our great and fast expanding Liberal cause, with the request that they read and pass to the next neighbor. Let us keep the ball rolling, and let every Liberal friend do all he can to assist Bro. Bennett in his great and glorious cause of promulgating the truths of Infidelity. Sectarianism stands forth to-day as a great black cloud, enveloping the minds of thousands of our men and women. Press forward, Bro. Bennett, and loosen the shackles from body and mind of a poor deluded people that know not of true liberty. Clergymen are the cause of this They draw a line between good and evil, and, with an apostolic license, consign one class to their imaginary regions of darkness, wretchedness, and pain, while the other is elevated to the highest seat in the celestial heaven to hav their enjoyments by contemplating the miseries of damned souls in hell. So long as there exists a sectarian distinction between good and evil, so long will war, persecution, ignorance, vice, misery, and degradation exist. Meanwhile there will be the self-righteous, the self-sanctified, the "born again," and the religious hypocrit whose imperfections will be obscured from the gaze of natural eyes by a cloak of gorgeous wealth and pretended piety. So long as sectarian interpretations are confided in, so long will governments continue to be exclusiv in their enactments and privileges. The clergymau's interests compel him to preserve ignorance and repress the light of knowledge. A latent cupidity is generated through a clergyman's profession, that penetrates through all the recesses of society, and pervades the whole nation. It is the offspring of clerical policy, and the first-born of ignorance and hypocrisy. C. C. LUTHER.

---

OPEN LETTER TO CHARLES E. TOWNSEND.

WACONDA, KAN., Aug. 4, 1880.

Dear Sir: I hav just read your letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER on the "Eternity of Mind and Matter," and I am forced to acknowledge that I knew nothing about it; it is certainly as E. A. Chapman has told me about the existence of spirits, I am too ignorant to understand it. But then I am willing to learn of either him or you.

Just here will you try to explain to me the great first cause, nothing more. If I could only get that well through my skull I think that a great many other things, now quite obscure, would follow some time. I will just tell you as well as I can my symptoms as a necessity to a proper diag-t nosis of the disease. First, then, I cannot understand that there can be a first where there is no second, and that there can be a second cause for the same thing. Now, my learned friend, if you can just fix up this so that a very plain, ignorant Western man can see it, I shall feel much relieved, if not quite cured. I hav stated it in the shortest and plainest way known to me, so if my ignorance bars me from the solution I certainly am not blameable.

About the next president, it seems to me there is no use flinging the bloody shirt any longer; that is a dead duck Let us hav living issues and look well to them. If we demand a promis of the Democrats and they should giv it, they would lose more than they would gain, and then of course we must fall into the ditch with them. Let us giv them a united support and we shall win in these parts. Some Republicans are leaving their party and going to the Democrats, but it is not likely that Kansas will go Democratic. But it is possible, and if worked up the thing might win. So many are dissatisfied with the existing state of things that they will do almost anything for a change.

G. W. CHAPMAN.

---

SAN PEDRO, TEX., July 27, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Although never a subscriber to your paper, I hav had the pleasure of reading several numbers of it, and I would be glad that a copy of it could be put in the hands of every honest and truth loving church member in our whole land. I think it would hav a tendency to open the eyes of all such, and probably make them more liberal and tolerant to those differing from them in opinion. I was sorry to hear of your persecution by religious bigots. I am glad to see by your paper that there is a Liberal League at Dallas, Texas. There ought to be one in every town and county. Spiritualism and Liberalism are gaining ground here.

If any of your readers wish to make homes in Texas they will find it to their advantage to write for maps and general information to any of the land commissioners here. I understand that there are from six to eight hundred acres of public land here to be taken up as homesteads.

If any of your readers desire some beautiful shade trees I will send a small package of seeds of the "Umbrella China" to all who will send stamps to pay for mailing the same. This is a tree that I hav never seen outside of Texas. It makes such a dense shade that scarcely a ray of sunshine can penetrate through it. The tree is rather scarce in Texas for I hav been living here ten years and never saw one of them until last year. Wishing THE TRUTH SEEKER success, I remain, Yours truly, ALEXANDER KING.

---

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Through the valuable columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER we see frequently flaunting challenges from prominent trained debaters of the skeptical class to debate the subject of Spiritualism. Now, sir, for one, permit me to say, I like to listen to an intelligent debate with a view of eliciting truth, detecting error, and unfolding the pathways to knowledge; but at the same time I utterly abhor the animus of any debater, however verbose, whose chief glory is more in triumph than in absolute truth. It is in this view of the subject I esteem the challenges of Mr. Underwood and some others. These gentlemen know, as well as the writer or any intelligent Spiritualist, that the philosophy, so to speak, of Spiritualism cannot be decided or much advanced by mere elocutionary agitation, by mere talk, but rests wholly on the eloquence of facts—facts, intelligences, and phenomena demonstrating the truth of a continued existence after death. But these stubborn facts they (the debaters) profess not to hav seen, or flatly declare the testimony of all others in relation to the subject based on delusion or fraud, or when they are hard pressed, merely psychology, mental telegraphy, mind-reading, etc, etc.

There may be money to the debater in this flippant war of words, and no doubt there is; but for the advancement of truth I opine very little progress. I am grieved when I observe any special lecturer wasting his time and energies in so unprofitable a conflict. There may be many honest skeptics to this cheering philosophy, I readily admit—people who hav become skeptics by witnessing some boldly perpetrated, brazen fraud, or who may not hav had the opportunity to fairly test the truth of the subject. The truth seems apparent, the thinking mind has so long been imposed upon by the assumptions and trickery of priestcraft that it is no wonder mankind should be wary. It having been discovered that there is about one individual in fifteen who is absolutely "color blind," that is, who cannot discriminate between the common tints or ordinary pigments in common usage, why should it be thought incredible that even a greater proportion of our fellow-humans should lack the important property of sound discrimination between truth and error, or truth and sophistry?

At the first Spiritual seance to which I was invited many years ago at the house of an intelligent elderly lady, her pastor remarked to her, "Dear sister Williams, it is all electricity, nothing more, I assure you." "It may be electricity, as you say, doctor," replied Mrs. Williams, "but I am bound to know who is at the other end of the wires." I regret to observe that friend Underwood and scores of advanced philosophers hav not been so successful as sister Williams in finding out who is at the other end of the wires.

Some of your readers hav expressed themselvs so much interested in the few remarks you recently published of mine that I feel disposed to draw upon your kindness again. Like sister Williams, I was determined to find out who was at the other end of the wires. Permit me to add some of my experiences in my endeavors to nab the old fellow, whoever he was, and bring him to justice.

To please some friends who derided the idea of spirits, and asserted that all the communications received were but a reflex of our own minds; that, in fact, by some undiscovered hocus-pocus law in nature, through the tipping of a table, or by taps, or by any other process, we were only talking to ourselvs, etc, etc, I submitted years ago to the idea of trying the following experiment. Acting on this suggestion, I prevailed upon four persons who were rather inclined to favor this hypothesis to form a circle for spiritual investigation. We sat around an ordinary mahogany tea table. Two of the party I had found on a previous occasion somewhat mediumistic. The task I proposed was rather novel in its way. In a bold hand we wrote on a sheet of paper, "God is love." The idea was that we should all place or fix our minds on the above sentence, and if possible influence by our united wills the spelling out of the sentence through the tippings of the table. A tipping of the table soon commenced. Without inquiring for names, I simply asked, "Does the intelligence now present apprehend the nature of our experiment?"

Response: "Yes."

Ques.: "Are you willing to let us test our will power?"

Response: "Yes."

The label with the short, familiar sentence was laid on the table before us. We sat in silence for the space of two minutes ere the tipping recommenced, which was done strong and sharply. The alphabet being called over, to our surprise was given, "You can't come it." I must say I was considerably surprised, as I thought concentrated will power did at times influence all communications. We sat for the space of thirty minutes, but not another movement of the table could we obtain, or any response to our inquiries.

About three weeks after this event I was an attendant at another circle at Greenpoint, L. I., when a spirit through the raps invited me (calling me by name) to sit at the table, which being complied with, it inquired, through the raps, how I liked my trial, "God is love." Here was another surprise, inasmuch as the trial had never been mentioned out of my own house in Brooklyn. I could fill a good-sized volume with remarkable tests, family cures of ailments, friendly cautions, philosophical suggestions, foreshadowings, unfoldments which hav taken and are now taking place in the world. On the other hand, I could transcribe messages from the spirits, some of the most mischievous, ignorant, lying, and diabolical that could be invented to mislead the credulous.

I will state another test of will power. At the circle my friend Joseph Pooler was getting a communication from a Mr. Burns, a friend of his and former editor of the New York Sunday Dispatch, which was very satisfactory to him. After a short pause in the tippings of the table, it was tipped out, "No you don't, Joe," at which Mr. Pooler laughed, but explained that he was trying by force of will to compel the spirit to spell out some absurd nonsense, some gibberish of words having no connection with the matter communicated.

I should like it understood that I am a Materialist in the strictest sense of the word; and when our skeptical friends can understand that mind is matter, eternal and indestructible, and that its various manifestations are strictly in accordance with the unfolding laws of nature and are particularly controled by the universal law of attraction and repulsion, they will be surprised that they are wasting so much misdirected energy. DAVID BRUCE.

---

BERLIN, N. J., July 19, 1880

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav my dander up, and if you will allow me a little space in your paper I want to show my spunk—the little that has not been crushed out of me by numerous wrongs and outrages.

I hav been reading old Paul's divine revelations where he says: "I suffer not a woman to speak in the church. It is a shame for a woman to speak in the church. Let your women keep silence in the church. Let them marry, raise babies (if they can't contain), wash pots and kettles and dirty clothes, cook food, milk cows, make butter and cheese, sew on buttons, wrap up sore fingers and toes, sleep with tobacco and whisky-soaked husbands, and submit to them in the name of the Lord." This is what old Paul taught, and he has been pretty thoroughly obeyed until not a real healthy wife can be found in all our broad land!

He says if women want to know anything let them ask their husbands at home, but never presume to speak in the church. Heavens and earth! if half the wives never know anything except what they learn from their husbands their brains will never burst with knowledge.

"What did your daddy die of, my dear?" asked the kind-hearted Mrs. Partington of a boy who had lost his father.

"Of inflammation in the head," was the reply.

"Information in the head, oh, that was dreadful; my husband, poor man, died of information in the head, and I was afeared I should die of it too; but the doctor said there was no danger, for heads like mine never had information enough to die of."

Mrs. Partington is one who got her information from her husband, and half the women who look to their husbands for information never will get enough to die of. So I am down on old Paul and in favor of women's rights in all things, and shall speak where I please, whether in church or out, and if you will put this in your paper you will hear from me again. Yours for all truth, SALLY ANN.

---

ST. CHARLES, Mo., August 11, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am a constant reader of the Spiritual and progressiv papers. I never was a Democrat or rebel or Roman Catholic, and therefore think I am qualified to answer Mr. J. M. Roberts, who proposes to know all about mind and matter, Liberalism, and everything else.

I read an article in Mind and Matter of date August 7th inst., headed, "Are We a Liberalist? If So, of What Kind?" In it Mr. Roberts takes Mr. Bennett and others to task. He makes quotations from T. C. Leland, and tries to criticise them, in his usual bitter and unkindly spirit, and, as I know, very unjustly. Roberts writes some good things in his paper, but he puts me in mind of "the cow that gave the pail of milk, then lifted her foot and kicked it over."

I hav read Mr. Leland's remarks, and agree with him fully. I say further that no man but a knave or a fool would vote the present Republican ticket. Garfield and Arthur are both well known, and any man who reads Gen. McDonald's expose of the whisky ring and votes the Republican ticket afterward, I can hav no use for, but must look upon him with grave suspicion. Roberts seems to think, with those of old, "My party, right or wrong," a good dyed-in-the-wool Republican. I hav voted the Republican ticket, but when I found them out to be robbers I quit them, and now vote for greenbacks. Roberts seems to uphold all the villainous acts of his corrupt party, even to the Comstock law. But I hope he will see his folly and act as a consistent man and advocate of honesty and true progress. Why does he try to teach one thing and practice another? I do not consider him a Liberalist, by any manner of means, and he must be told so in plain language. He must learn that he is only one in this community, even though he be editor of Mind and Matter.

Yours for truth, J. M. HARRISON.

---

OREGON, Mo., August 10, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: The remarks of Mr. Leland on the shameful degeneracy of our politics from those of our British ancestors reminds me to call attention to a remark of Blackstone on the effort made to try offenders out of their counties in England. He says it was found a hardship too intolerable to be borne to compel suitors, witnesses, and jurors to go from Westmoreland to Westminster, and the effort was abandoned. Bear in mind that they never even dreamed of trying men out of their counties unless jurymen from their counties were taken to the place of trial.

Patrick Henry, in "Debates on the Constitution," spoke warmly against the grant to Congress of power to punish even the few offenders therein mentioned. I wish some one would copy from these "Debates" the remarks of Holmes of Massachusetts on that very subject. In what colors of gloom did he paint the times when the abuses we daily read of would occur! I hav not access to the volumes—Elliott's "Debates"—else I would do so. One of the delegates exclaimed, "God forever protect my country from such tyranny!"

Our courts are traps to catch citizens on charges where, instead of the mildest punishments being inflicted for slight offenses, the severest are employed, and often in direct violation of the very laws that create the offenses. An accusation that drags one great distances, and compels him to defend himself, at enormous expense, puts him at wonderful disadvantage, and to think that when acquitted he is not repaid his costs, it is too mean, too outrageous, to be spoken of. The thing is incredible, therefore the world pays no attention to it. Some one ought to get up a volume on the subject, mentioning cases, costs, etc., and then giv a few extracts from the Constitution and the debates on it by the framers, with the resolutions of Jefferson and Madison regarding this power of Congress. Every one of these acts of Congress is unconstitutional, and the tyranny has no parallel among civilized beings. HOLT.

---

OSCEOLA, IOWA, July 27, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Much diversity of opinion has been expressed as to political action which Liberals should adopt—whether to affiliate with Democracy and help to oust Republican corruption and its long adhesion to office (this is expediency first and principle second), or whether to go on independently as a third party, adhering strictly to principle, and trust to accumulated wrong-doings in the old parties to bring at least a remedy (this is principle first and expediency second).

I would say adhere to principles which both the old parties repudiate. The only great question between the old parties is, Who is to reap the spoils of office? Both are for hard money, which makes hard times. Both uphold bank corporations to control the currency and make it fluctuate to suit speculators. Both are for an aristocracy of weath and for a depressed, slavish labor. Both would perpetuate a national debt rather than pay it. Both would imprison for an opinion. Both would exempt church property from taxation. In short, both are averse to any reform of accumulating and long standing abuses.

If the third party temporize now, it is immediately on a level with the two corrupt factions, and lost for any future good. But if it holds on its way and sticks to what is right and just, Republicans and Democrats alike, who are good and true men, will leave the old parties and swell the ranks of the new, until a majority is in favor of "the greatest good for the greatest number." There is no such thing as an old corrupt party reforming itself. Reforms of any importance must come from a new party. The young party of to-day is growing vigorously, but if it becomes impatient, like the dog in the fable catching at a shadow and losing the substance, then its days are numbered, and premature death awaits it. Energy and time will win where impatience will lose. St. Paul's doctrin of expediency as a substitute for right has done a world of mischief. F. J. EMARY.

---

LAMAR, Mo., July 31, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: When your mind runs back to the forgery, perjury, and corruption of the prosecutors and court which consigned you to a living tomb, think not that it was a local persecution, stimulated by bad men who are in that vicinity. That same spirit is to be found wherever you find Christianity. Its very nature is to make men exacting, proscriptiv, dogmatical, and mean.

We hav had a little example of Christian love and forbearance here which is worthy of attention, and in itself sufficient to stamp the whole system with that same intolerance which pervaded the church in the days of the inquisition; the only difference is they hav not the power now to burn men for their opinions, but in some places they do hav the power to imprison them and destroy property, and wherever they hav that power they always wield it with as much alacrity as they did in the dark days of priestly rule, and the people will never get rid of that spirit, in the Christian religion, until they get rid of it.

We are starting a Liberal colony here, in Barton Co., Mo. We hav founded a town called Liberal, with every prospect of a grand future. Failing in doing us any harm by preaching against us, and lying about us, as only Christians can lie, they concluded they would destroy our town by petitions to the railroad company to remove the newly established switch and depot, to a point further east, which if done would ruin us. The reasons assigned for their dastardly conduct were that we were Infidels and were inducing that class of people to settle here, and they would not trade in a town where such people controled, as they do in Liberal.

The manager of the road, Hon. G H. Nettleton, quietly replied that he "knew of no reason why the station at Liberal should be changed, and it would not be done," thus squelching them in that effort to harm us and destroy our property by making it valueless. It had the effect to arouse public attention to their meanness, and it has strengthened our cause.

On Saturday and Sunday last, we had a grove-meeting. Four hundred took dinner with us, and all felt, as a person said, morally, mentally, and physically stronger.

Inclosed find three dollars for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER. Fraternally yours, G. H. WATSON.

---

MILNERSVILLE, O., Aug. 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find $1, for which please send me "Sixteen Saviors or None." I hav just finished reading "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," which is a powerful book and will help wonderfully in destroying superstition. At this place there was only one other person besides myself who believed in Freethought. We had a hard time of it at first, but I tell you we hav done a good work. Now we can count fourteen outspoken ones, and at least three or four times as many who believe as we do but are yet afraid to come out like men and stand up for these principles. But time will fetch them all right. The great trouble so far is that we two hav had to be at all the expense of getting books, tracts, papers, etc. If we could only raise money to pay for some lectures it would open up a fine field. What we need is plenty of tracts, books, and papers to distribute among the people. It would not be two years before the churches here would lose half or two-thirds of their members. Oh, yes, I almost forgot, What does "Superstition, the Religion of Believe or Be Damned" cost? Where can we get information in regard to organizing a Liberal League? Very truly yours,

W. B. ROSAMOND.

["Superstition" costs 25 cents. Instruction for forming Leagues can be obtained of H. L. Green, Salamanca, N. Y., while Mr. Rawson is in Europe.—ED. T. S.]

Notes by the Way.—From Iowa.

At Elgin, Fayette county, there are some good workers; among those we met, James Cooley and Peter Nicklaus. That stanch friend of the cause, W. M. Bennett, it was not my good fortune to see, he being some three miles out of town. There ought to be a good hotel in Elgin to fit the prices of fare in that village. Our friend Nicklaus kindly took us to Clermont, the post village of Larrabee, Duke of Fayette, who from the window of his ducal castle, perched upon the overlooking bluffs, can view his toiling serfs as they labor in the town and the valley of Turkey River to gather for him the golden sheaves of money. His neighbors wonder how he can absorb interest upon so much and pay taxes upon so little. It is one of the mysteries of Republican legislation. Let us cease to murmur, and be duly thankful that we liv in a Christian land and in a state dominated by the God-and-morality party.

We spent Sunday, the 1st inst., most agreeably in the hospitable home of our Positivist and Greenback friend G. L. Henderson, Esq., of Postville, Allamakee county. Mr. Henderson is a most pleasant conversationalist, and one cannot be lonesome in the company of himself and charming family. He is now writing a series of very interesting and instructiv essays, entitled "Evolution in Politics," for the Independence National Advocate. In traveling through this section of the state I find that Mr. Henderson has a fine reputation as a political speaker. Greenback clubs and committees would do well to employ him during the present campaign.

From Postville we proceeded over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad to Charles City, stopping only at Castalia, Ossian, and Colman. This is a fine section of the state, but the wheat crop is poor. As the train sped on over the prairies of southern Winnesheik, the views were generally beautiful, and one could but regret that men and women are so bound by the chains of superstition and ignorance that they are unable to derive one-tenth of the happiness from their sojourn in the lovely mother-land that they might under proper industrial, political, and social relations.

Arriving at Charles City we met with a most cordial welcome from that brave worker John Mahara. Many of the best Liberals here I did not see, as they are farmers, and this is just the busiest season of the year. At Nashua we enjoyed the hospitality of the veteran Thomas Tracy, and met some other good men who should be taking some wide-awake Liberal paper. To friends H. H. Hopkins and Mr. Livermore I am under obligations for favors extended.

A. Larkin, Esq., of Plainfield, is a thorn in the flesh of the weak sons and daughters of "Gawd." There are quite a number of people there who are beginning to do their own thinking.

I hav just received a note from Bro. Jamieson saying that he will be with us all through the Convention.

Mrs. Lake writes that Mr. Peck will be on hand to furnish us with some good music, probably assisted by a part of the Clinton Liberal choir.

Letters from all parts of the state are daily reaching me, in which the writers announce their intention of being part of the grand mass Convention.

This week large posters of the meeting will be sent to our friends all over the state, and to good Liberals in other states. Send for some at once, and immediately post them. Do not forget that all these things cost money, and that the committee justly looks to the Liberals of the state to assist in the good work.

A notice of the meeting is being sent to all the papers of Iowa. We mean business. Do you? For particulars, posters, etc., address either the undersigned at Marshalltown, Iowa, until after the Convention, or Col. M. E. Billings, Waverly, Bremer county, or H. W. Mercer, Winterset, Madison county, Iowa. Come up and counsel and rejoice with us. "He who can read the signs of the times, reads in them that the kingdom of man is at hand."

E. C. WALKER.

Alice Carey.

A poet born, not made;
By nature taught, she knew;
And knowing, still obeyed
The beautiful, the true.

Hers was the seeing eye.
The sympathetic heart.
The subtle art whereby
She hid all show of art.

She caught the primal charm
Of every common scene,
Of river, cottage, farm,
Blue sky, and woodland green.

Baptized in sorrow's stream,
She sang, how sweetly well,
Of true love's tender dream
And sad death's asphodel.

Her pensiv muse has fled
From hill and meadow brook;
No more her footsteps tread
Thy path, fair Clover Nook.

No more may she behold
The dew-crowned summer morn
On wings of sunshine gold
Fly o'er the bending corn.

No more her mournful gaze
On autumn eves shall mark
Red twilight's smoldering rays
Slow westering to the dark.

No note of joyous birds,
Nor April's fragrant breath,
Nor tears, nor loving words
May break the spell of death.

Sleep on, and take thy rest
In Greenwood, by the sea,
Dear poet of the West,
None hav forgotten thee.

—W. H. Venable in Cincinnati Commercial.

To Ingersoll.

Oh, "Reason, Observation, and Experience"—the three,
Of "Science" they most surely are
The "Holy Trinity."

So says that grand apostle, know,
Brave Ingersoll, the MAN
Who 'gainst black superstition, wars
His banner in the van.

'Gainst Bigotry, Intolerance,
'Tis war unto the knife,
With valiant Ingersoll, who says,
"Liv now while you hav life."

"Stale miracles" he will not bolt,
Rates gods as most unkind;
Believes in reason, common sense,
And will not "go it blind."

All honor to brave Ingersoll.
The man who dares to speak
Against the superstitions black
With which the nations reek.

With him we look for that good time—
Good time for us, poor clods—
When "Reason shall be King of kings,"
Shall be the "God of gods."

—Mamie Luke in Truth.

The Amateur Farmer.

I dream of a beautiful time
When the world shall happy be;
When the elephants and hyenas
Shall blossom on every tree;
When tamarinds and potatoes
Shall cease their dreadful roar;
When turnip trees shall blossom
In the garden for evermore.

I dream of a great republic
When the people shall all go West,
Sow plums and reap tomatoes
In the land they love the best;
Where pig iron and molasses
Shall bloom on every hill,
And chickens low in the barnyard
While gooseberries toil at the mill.

I'm weary of seeing the cabbage
Handle the rake and the hoe;
I'm weary of watching and waiting
For the grasshopper bush to grow;
I long for the time when spinach
Shall cope with bread and milk;
When hens shall lay potatoes,
And horses spin raw silk.

Oh! sweet were the vanished hours
When I wandered down the glen,
And wreathed my brow with tomatoes,
Or plucked the ripened hen;
While the donkey twined up the trellis,
And the cucumber chirped in the grass,
And the sweet potato whistled
To its mate in the mountain pass.

But gone are the days of childhood,
And manhood's dreams are mine;
Yet I long for the by-gone hours
As I sit 'neath this Turkish vine.
Oh! wreathe your blossoms about me,
And soothe my aching breast;
While the gooseberry plaintivly warbles
And lulls me to quiet and rest.

—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

Correspondence.

A gentleman, "Positivist," desires correspondence with a lady of a genial disposition, having literary, vocal, and instrumental musical accomplishments. Brunet preferred, and object matrimony. Address FAVORITE,
3 34 TRUTH SEEKER office.

To the Benevolent.

A young married woman, with a child, who has been abandoned by a graceless Christian husband because she entertains Liberal views, wishes to obtain an honorable position as housekeeper, or in some other useful capacity, to support herself and child. Address, STEADFAST, TRUTH SEEKER office, 2t32

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100.00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5.00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON.

GODSEND TO THE SEX

tf32 209 West 34th st., New York.

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.
Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size . . . . | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size . . . . | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

Wanted.

A widow of thirty-two would like to correspond with an educated Liberal-minded gentleman. Address SINCERITY, care of TRUTH SEEKER office. 4t32

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis

OF

Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13t27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius, as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructive work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

UPPLYSNINGENS TIDEHVART

(AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT).

A SWEDISH WEEKLY,

Devoted to the culture of Freethought, to the investigation of the religious systems of our times, and to the discussion of religious and social questions in general.

The only Swedish religio-philosophical publication in America.

TERMS PER YEAR . . . . $2.00

Exchange is desired with any other papers in any language.

ERICKSON & OLSON.
Grove City, Meeker Co., Minn.

For sale, in the Swedish language:

A BETTER RELIGION.

By FRANZ HERMAN WISTRAND,
Editor of the Truth Teller,
Lake Constance, Buffalo Post-Office,
Wright Co., Minnesota.

Published by ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Minn.

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.
tJan81.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL
AND
DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author, 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

LOVE VENTURES.

A rose tinted record of love in the tropics, with strange and startling adventures thereto belonging. Price, 50 cents.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante; Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2 00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 68 pages; price, 25 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.), $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

He was a clever man, St. Paul; and one can at this day learn of him.—Apraja.

Innocently to amuse the imagination in this dream of life is wisdom.—Goldsmith.

At present let us remove which is bad, which must always be done before good of any kind can spring up.—W. S. Lander.

Cant is useful to provoke common sense.—Emerson. For always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.—Shakspere.

If I am in the wrong, my errors may set the minds of others at work and may be the means of bringing both them and me to a knowledge of the truth.—Macaulay.

When I was a child, I spake as a child. I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things.—St. Paul.

A child's conception of the stars as angel-eyes may denote a clever imagination. Let him retain that idea when he becomes a man and it denotes idiocy.—Conway.

Poetry is certainly something more than good sense, but it must be good sense, at all events, just as a palace is more than a house, but it must be a house at least.—Coleridge.

I cannot directly or indirectly sanction the opinion that any particular faith in matters of religion is necessary to the proper discharge of duties purely political and temporal.—Lord Holland.

Wise man was he who counseled that speculation should hav free course and look fearlessly toward all the thirty-two points of the compass, whithersoever and howsoever it listeth.—Carlyle.

Life is but a day at most—
Sprung from night, in darkness lost;
Hope, not sunshine, every hour;
Fear, not clouds, will always lour.
—Burns.

If in those parts of the earth which were formerly inhabited by barbarians we now see the most splendid exertions of genius and the happiest forms of civil polity, we behold others which, in ancient times, were the seats of science, of civiliza ion, and of liberty, at present immersed in superstition and laid waste by despotism.—Dugald Stewart.

Dr. Humdrum has got the tallest pulpit and the quietest pews, the fattest living and the cosiest nook in all the land. How do you think he won it? Why, by letting well enough alone. He never meddles with sin; it would break his heart to hurt a sinner's feelings—he might lose a parishioner; he never dreams to make the world better, or better off. Go thou, young man, and do likewise.—Theodore Parker.

Milton went to the unive sity with a design of entering into the church, but in time altered his mind, for he declared that whoever became a clergyman must "subscribe slave, and take an oath withal, which, unless he took with a conscience that could retch, he must straight perjure himself. He thought it better to prefer a blameless silence before the office of speaking, bought and begun with servitude and forswearing."—Dr. Johnson.

For the drift of the Maker is dark, an Isis hid by the veil,
Who knows the ways of the world, how God will bring them about.
Our planet is one, the suns are many, the world is wide.
Shall I weep if a Poland fall? Shall I shriek if a Hungary fall?
Or an infant civilization be ruled with rod or with knout?
I hav not made the world, and he that made it will guide. —Tennyson.

I doubt if any one could draw a code of morals, a historical record, or a creed of faith from that conglomeration of fact and fiction, myth and fable, proverbs and poems, maxims and sayings, that some other person could not upset, controvert, and disprove from the same flexible, pliant, elastic, accommodating "source of all knowledge, light, wisdom, and truth." Now, my good pious friend, isn't it pretty near time thee gave up as a bad job, a useless job, and an impossible job the bolstering up of such a mass of superstitious nonsense as the Christian religion has been shown to be.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Proper dealing with evidence consists in two things. First, a full collection of it; secondly, the equal reception of it. With regard to the first, it is knowledge that is concerned; with regard to the second, it is fairness. . . Instilling opinions without the evidence and at an age when the parties into whom the opinions are instilled are incapable of understanding the evidence, is a practice which necessarily engenders habits of complicated misconduct toward evidence. It engenders a habit of neglecting evidence and the holding of opinions without regard to their evidence—a habit which is the foundation of all intellectual and moral depravity.—Westminster Review.

It is certain that the discoveries of universal law hav reduced prayer among us to an anachronism. It makes no difference whatever whether the prayer be for a moral or an intellectual or a physical benefit. If it is absurd for a man to set himself to acquire a fortune by praying for it, it is equally absurd for students to try and pass their examination by prayer instead of study—an absurdity which Protestants can see when for such help priests invite students to visit the fountain of Lourdes, but neither is more absurd than to pray for morality, for character, for virtue, or religion, all of which are equally dependent on the invariable laws of cause and effect.—Conway.

Odds and Ends.

Fish never bite as readily as musketoes.

The man who commits suicide before next December is a recreant and a traitor to his party.

The absence of debtors during the summer season makes it impossible for their creditors to afford to leave town.

That rock and rye was a favorit tipple in the olden days, we know from the fact that David put a little rock in his sling.

They toil and they spin and wash dishes, and yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like—a colored girl at a dress ball.

Sally Jones says when she was in love she felt as if she was in a railway tunnel, with a train of cars coming both ways.

The lady who goes into society to fight the battle of conquest has great trouble to keep her powder dry in warm weather.

Deaf lady: "What's his name?" Young lady: "Augustus Tyler." Deaf lady: "Bless me! what a name! Busthis Biler! Ezra, you must be making fun of me."

A Yorkville woman who was very fat took the medicin of a quack doctor to relieve her adipose, and was reduced sufficiently to enable the average pall-bearers to carry her readily.

"Hole on dar," said a colored man, hailing an acquaintance. "Does yer cross de street ebery time yer sees me ter keep frum payin' dat bill?" "No, I doesn't." "What fur, den?" "Ter keep from being axed for it."

Full many a gem of spurious ray serene
The spotless shirts of hotel clerks do bear;
Full many a simple, ignorant sardine
Believes them purest stones of value rare.
And that's where they're fooled.

AFTER BURNS—AND BITES.

Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us
To treat musketoes as they treat us
It would fra mony a suffering free us.
And giv our nails a chance to grow.

"What are you doing out there, my daughter, in the night dew?" said the kindly old gentleman on the piazza. "Practicing fencing," was the sweet reply, as she leaned over the pickets till her face was dreadfully close to William's.

A young lady remarked that she should like to hav the bicycles so arranged that she and her beau could both ride. Being asked where her fellow should sit, she emphatically remarked, "On the little wheel behind, of course." And still young men go on marrying

Girls, when your mothers attempt to giv you taffy, by coaxing you to learn to cook, think of that young lady of Chicago who took cooking lessons, and the night before she was to be married fried soft shell crabs for her Adolphus. The hot fat spattered in her face, and she had to be painted before she could be married.

"This is a nice time of night for you to be coming in," said a mother to her daughter, who returned from a walk at ten o'clock. "When I was like you," said she, "my mother would not allow me out later than seven o'clock." "Oh, you had a nice sort of a mother," murmured the girl. "I had, you young jade," said the mother, "a nicer mother than ever you had."

THE JILTED BUTCHER.

He tried in drink to drown his cares.
And there found no relief,
But daily grew more woe-begone—
You never sausage grief.

At last his weary soul found rest.
His sorrows now are o'er,
No fickle maid now troubles him.
Pork reacher, he's no more.

It is just lovely to sleep in the country these fine mornings, with a gobbler gobbling under your window, and a calf bellowing like a concert saloon baritone on one side of the house, while a cow, his mother, is hallooing mezzo-soprano on the other, and roosters are crowing, and the milkmaid is playing tambourine with the bottom of the milk pail, and drivers are going by whistling, and the parrot is yelling at the goat that talks back, and a half-dozen boys are throwing green apples on the roof to see them roll down, and the landlord is swearing at his wife at the back kitchen because she has put too many mackerel to soak for "them city hogs." The country is a real quiet place—for cemeteries.

One day last month, when trade was dull, a grocer's clerk procured a piece of sole leather from a shoemaker, painted it black, and laid it aside for future use. Within a few days an old chap from back in the country came in and inquired for a plug of chewing tobacco. The piece of sole leather was tied up, paid for, and the purchaser started for home. At the end of the sixth day he returned, looking downcast and dejected, and walking into the store, he inquired for the clerk. "'Member that terbacker I got here the other day?" "Yes, sir," "Regular plug terbacker, was it?" "Yes." "Well, then, it's me. Its all right here in my jaws," sadly replied the old man. "I knowed I was gettin' purty old, but I was allus handy at bitin' plug. I never seed a plug afore this one that I couldn't tear to pieces at a chaw. I sot my teeth in this one, and bit and pulled and twisted like a dog at a root, and I kept biting and pulling for six days, and thar she am now, the same as the day you sold her to me." "Seems to be a good plug," remarked the clerk, as he smelt of the counterfeit. "She's all right; its me that's failing," exclaimed the old man. "Pass out some fine cut, and I'll go home and deed the farm to the boys, and get ready for the grave myself."

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 3 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers, | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 8 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangeli | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 3 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 2 |
| 139 | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, MD. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

Was Christ a God?

Conclusions Drawn from Apostolic Writings.

BY F. MENSIGA.

Contents.—Questionable Dogmas, Superstition and Religion, the Appearance of Christ, the Life of Christ, Comments and Explanations of Jude, James, John, Peter, Paul (all his epistles), Acts, the Four Gospels, Revelations, a Summary, Erroneous Theories of Deity, Heaven, Devil, Hell, the Author's Intuitions, Evolution of Life. A work of strength and merit.

An octavo volume of 253 pages. Price, $1.50. Sold at this office.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages, Price, only 25 cents.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

Vol. 7. No. 35 { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, August 28, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. H. C. Peck, of Hanover, Mich., has been suspended from the ministry because he horsewhipped his daughter's suitor.

IT is reported that the Municipal Council of Paris struck "Robinson Crusoe" from its list of prizes for school children because of its religious tone.

THE Rev. F. C. Haddock has resigned the pastorate of the Congregational church at Waupaca, Michigan, for "a cause which it is as well to say nothing about at present."

MR. PROCTOR is now lecturing beneath the southern starry hemisphere and telling Melbourne audiences how much better behaved they are than their knowledge-seeking cousins in London.

IT is notable that, probably without an exception, the religious newspapers which express any preference whatever as to the two presidential candidates are earnest supporters of General Garfield.—N. Y. Mail.

ONE of the most surprising comments called out by Dr. Tanner's feat of endurance is this, which we find in the Boston Congregationalist: "We were not aware that our Lord's fasting (for forty days and forty nights) is regarded as among his supernatural works."

IT is amusing, very, to see the Republican Christian bigots honey-fugling around Col. Ingersoll just now. They want the power of his eloquence exercised in behalf of their ticket, and then, if successful, what? The penitentiary or the fagot? D. M. Bennett voted for Hayes.—Cloud County Blade.

THE judge of the Box Elder county (Utah) court, being applied to for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of an apostate Mormon, who had been put in a lunatic asylum through Mormon influence, said from the bench, "He is possessed of a devil, or he wouldn't hav left the true church, and a madhouse is the best place for him."

NOBODY need be surprised that one of the first visitors to Dr. Talmage in San Francisco was the Hon. I. S. Kalloch the worthy and esteemed adulterer and begetter of murderers, who is now the honored mayor of the Golden City. Wherever Talmage goes it is safe to bet on one thing concerning him—that he will be found in bad company.

THE Bradlaugh business wears quite another aspect in the eyes of those who saw it enacted, than what it will wear in the eyes of others. It is likely to make Bradlaugh's fortune. Since the row in the House of Commons over half a million copies of a shilling pamphlet by him hav been sold. The pamphlet had been years in print, therefore, and reached the public only to the extent of a few thousand copies.

A CASE resembling that of Bradlaugh occurred in the Hungarian Diet in 1789. Two Protestant Deputies refused to take the usual oath because it contained a reference to the Virgin Mary. Thereupon they were excluded from the deliberations, and proceedings were commenced against them for contumacy. But Charles VI. dispensed the Protestant Deputies from reciting in the oath the clause referring to the Virgin.

FOR participation in the insurrection of 1863-64, eighty-three thousand four hundred and thirty-four Poles were condemned to perpetual expatriation, and transported to Siberia or Russia's outlying provinces. Above ten thousand contrived to escape to foreign countries, but the greater number of these suffered the loss of their entire property, confiscated by the state, and hav abandoned all hope of ever returning to their nativ land. Three hundred and sixty patriots were hanged in cold blood by their captors. Fines to the amount of two million roubles were levied on "the Vistula provinces," and two thousand seven hundred estates were sequestrated and conferred on Russian nobles. All the public libraries were either destroyed or conveyed out of the country by Muravieff's orders, and the outrages committed on defenseless women and ecclesiastics constitute one of the most revolting records of modern history.

THE Salvation Army in England is called to mourn the sudden loss of one of its brightest lights. James Ward, who has been one of the loudest of the leaders, has forsaken his wife and eight children and has cast in his lot with a pretty servant girl, with whom he has eloped. The girl was one who had been in constant attendance on the meetings of the Army, and was considered a hopeful convert. Mr. Ward was considered to hav made great advances in holiness and to be considerably better than ordinary people.

FINANCIAL and social irregularities are what caused Rev. Philip Krohn, of West Troy, New York, to place his resignation in the hands of his church. Some time ago he blossomed out as a mine agent, holding out promises of fabulous wealth in the Antique Gold Mining Company of South America. He got $4,000 from Wm. H. Morse for shares, and now Mr. Morse wants to find the mine. Three months ago some of his parishioners suspected that he was sustaining improper relations toward a young lady of his church who had left home ostensibly on a visit to some Western friends, and the matter was investigated, resulting in finding the aforesaid young lady in a house on Fourth street, where she lived in retirement, receiving regular calls from the pastor. It is said that he has many times made improper proposals to ladies of his congregation, but he only got this one to accede to his requests. Although these charges hav been proved, it is said that he has received and will accept a call from a prominent Methodist church of Illinois.

IF Prof. Robertson Smith had any regard for the establishment of peace within the borders of the Free Church of Scotland, he would at once deliver himself over to the persecutor and bring his explosiv writings for fagots. The last General Assembly was supposed to hav settled all difficulties with him, but the Professor has not ceased to be a stumbling-block and rock of offense. His article on the Hebrew language and literature, in the Encyclopedia Britannica, like all the rest of the articles of this enfant terrible, is calculated, they say, to unsettle men's minds. He is even credited with having rent the church in pieces. Something that looks not unlike a preaching crusade is threatened. The Free Church Presbytery of Edinburgh has sat in secret conclave over the Hebrew article and another article in the Journal of Philology which has been unearthed by a reverend brother with a keen scent for heresy. The opinions attributed to Prof. Smith "concerning marriage in Israel," "concerning animal worship in Israel," and "concerning the worship of God in Israel," are reported to be gross and polluting, and the profane vulgar were considerately excluded from hearing the Presbyterial discussion.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE National Liberal League, whatever that may be, is to hold a convention in Chicago next month for the purpose of nominating a Presidential ticket. Wonder when the soap-boilers will come to the front with a national ticket.—St. Paul Globe. Here is a daily newspaper, speaking for one of the great political parties of the state, which does not know what the Liberal League is. And we question whether there are a half dozen editors of daily papers in the country who hav any intelligent notion of the purposes or the extent of the League, so blinded are men by their partisan intereste. There are about two hundred Liberal Leagues in the United States. Their principal objects are to secure the complete separation of church and state, the secularization of the public schools, the taxation of church property, the inviolability of the mails, and the repeal of the infamous Comstock law; and in short to establish in the United States free thought, free speech, and a free press. To say that we enjoy this freedom now is a lie of the Republicans and the church. The Liberal League proposes to do battle until this liberty exists in fact as well as in theory. At present the Liberals are divided. Some, like Col. Ingersoll, are pronounced Republicans; while others, like D. M. Bennett, who was the victim of the "bloodhound" Comstock, are actively at work for the Democratic ticket. Whichever party can satisfy the Liberals that its policy is best calculated to secure full political, civil, and religious liberty, will secure the bulk of the Liberal League vote.—Worthington (Minn.) Advance.

THAT unique institution of the Lord and abnormal excrescence of Christianity, the Salvation Army, are holding forth in Brooklyn with but moderate success against the legions of the devil. It is a noticeable fact that wherever this Salvation Army appear they find it necessary to call in a cordon of police to assist them in their divine work, and it is equally noticeable that one bluecoat has more influence in quelling the imps of Satan than all the hosts of the Salvation Army. In the work the other night three soldiers of the cross defied the devil, toadied to God, and painted the beauties of heaven, and the terrors of hell. Three more different looking soldiers were never enrolled in the same army. If the Almighty ever should, in the days of eternity, wish to relieve his angels from the monotony of harp-playing and riding on damp clouds, by giving them a burlesque entertainment, the Salvation Army will furnish him with all the material that he needs. Wherever this remarkable organization has appeared it has invariably attracted a crowd who regard its members as religious negro minstrels, upon whose faces the absence of burnt cork is freely made up by a mask of Christianity. The three individuals who led the van on this occasion were a wild-looking Dutchman, a ranting fat and greasy-looking Englishwoman, and a saintly-looking female, whose most noticeable features were a long, sharp nose, and exceedingly large pair of spectacles. These were the captain and lieutenants. The non-commissioned officers were a very red-nosed driver of a beer wagon, and the proprietor of a liquor saloon on a neighboring corner. The rank and file were the two policemen, one stationed outside to keep the street clear, and the other inside to compose the risibilities of the audience. The opposing hosts were a half-score of loafers and a building full of boys and girls who had come to see the show. The first speaker was the wild Dutchman, who spoke in such a funny manner that the audience roared and the fat and greasy Englishwoman arose in her fury and ordered the officer to take those people right out of the house of the Lord. This building was the house of the Lord, and she was going to preserve its dignity. The policeman complied with her request, and marched out two giggling little girls. The Dutchman ranted, but utterly lost the sequence of his discourse. He talked about the foolish virgins, and attempted a metaphor. "Der lamp is der profession," said he, "und der oil ist—ist—. Vat is it, you dink." He stopped and scratched his head, and then, as if inspired, sang out, "Der oil is der spirit of der Lord." He declared that hell was opening right under the congregation's feet, and unless they put oil in their vessels they could not "escape." He said that God was "yust," and a "gut bragroom," and that he did not care whether the audience had their names with them or not just so they came forward. The Dutchman was followed by the fat and greasy Englishwoman, who smiled benignly, and ordered a collection to be taken up. She was a spiritual bouncer, and literally bulldozed her hearers into quiet. Whenever she discovered any one laughing, she would call upon the officer and hav the offender unceremoniously ejected, at the same time loudly proclaiming that it was a shame they could not be arrested. On the platform she exceeded even Talmage in acrobatic display, and the fact that she apparently weighs about three hundred pounds, and wore the gaudiest and thinnest bonnet imaginable, totally discounted the holy howler of the Tabernacle. The virgin in spectacles followed, with a discourse by rote, which she had not learned very well, and consequently broke down in the midst of it. A convert from the house next spoke, and declared that God would hurl all sinners into perdition and at the same time cry out, "Ephraim, how can I giv you up?" The fat woman now declared that it was not the young man at all that was speaking, but God himself. This seemed to startle some of the audience, and they got up and left. She then told of many conversations and bargains she had with the Lord, in all of which he acknowledged her wisdom and acceded to her terms. More of such inspired effusions, intermingled with songs and prayers, and the meeting ended, to the intense relief of the two policemen, who had heartily tired of their Salvation Army service. But the work still goes on, and the greasy woman, the Dutchman, and the virgin rake in the pennies.—Truth.

Events of the Week.

TWO murderers were hanged at Santa Fe, New Mexico, on the 21st.

A LARGE paper mill was burnt at East Walpole, Mass., on the 22d. Loss, $75,000.

THE deaf mutes of this country hold a national convention at Cincinnati on the 25th.

FOURTEEN hundred weavers at Bolton, England, are on strike against a reduction of wages.

TWO trains collided at Long Branch on the 23d, severely injuring several persons but killing none.

THE government of Servia has ordered a hundred thousand American rifles of the best make. More war.

A MAN at Sunnyside, Ga., charged with abduction, was recently taken from the sheriff and decapitated by a mob.

EVERY few days, of late, fresh discoveries of gold and silver mines in the northern part of this state are reported.

OVER one million Chinese-made cigars hav been shipped from San Francisco to this city within the past thirty days.

A BOY recently sunk in some quicksand at Kearney, Nebraska, and his two sisters went to save him. All three were lost.

PRESIDENT HAYES and family and Gen. Sherman start on a trip to California, Oregon, and Washington territory this week.

DURING a political riot at Coffeeville, Miss. on the 21st, the Greenback candidate for sheriff shot and killed a Democratic negro.

EIGHT hundred hostil Sioux hav surrendered at Fort Keogh, and one thousand more are said to be on the way to giv themselvs up.

THE largest and costliest flouring mill in St. Louis was destroyed by fire on the 19th. Loss nearly three hundred thousand dollars.

THE five hundred workmen at the Rockaway Beach hotel succeeded in their efforts to get their money and hav been paid off in full.

A DUEL between the Mayor of Norfolk, Va., and an editor, was prevented by the arrest of the Mayor while on his way to the field of honor.

A BALTIMORE clergyman has resigned his pastorate rather than cease making Greenback stump speeches, having been given the choice by his congregation.

OLE BULL, the famous Norwegian violinist, who has been before the public for more than half a century, died at his home at Bergen, Norway, on the 18th, aged seventy years.

THE steamer Dessoug is on a dry-dock at Staten Island having the Egyptian obelisk removed from her hold. A large opening will be made in her bow through which to remove the immense stone.

A GANG of masked burglars, who hav been operating somewhat extensivly in Pennsylvania of late, committing several murders in addition to their other crimes, hav been recently captured at Allentown, Pa.

A PRUSSIAN swam from pier 1, this city, to Coney Island and back last Sunday for a wager of $500, defeating his antagonist, who gave up after swimming part way. The distance is twenty-five miles. Time, ten and a half hours.

FIFTY-SEVEN tramps were recently captured by the police of this city at a single haul. They were sent to Blackwell's Island for six months by a Christian judge, having committed the crime of sleeping in a lumber-yard, being unable to pay for a bed.

SIXTY thousand barrels of oil and much other property were destroyed by fires kindled by lightning recently in the neighborhood of Bradford, Pa. A hundred derricks were destroyed at Monroeville. The total loss will amount to nearly a hundred thousand dollars.

ONE million dollars' worth of property was destroyed by a recent storm along the Rio Grande. In Matamoras, on the Mexican side, three hundred houses were destroyed, and Brownsville, on the American side, fared no better. Several steamers and other vessels were wrecked on the Mexican coast by the same storm, and many lives are reported lost.

Communications.

Two Hundred Leagues.

Two hundred points of Liberal crystallization! Two hundred centers of revolt against ecclesiasticism! Two hundred Liberal flags hoisted, flaunting defiance in the face of priestly domination! Two hundred "hotbeds of Infidelity!" Two hundred texts for Christian ministers to preach at, and hold up as horrible examples of men and women who love truth better than sect or party, who love character better than reputation, who love honor better than respectability!

Two hundred Leagues! Now what shall we do with them, and what will they do with themselvs?

In the first place it will be the duty of each League to hold the fort in its own town. It should be activ, aggressiv, influential, right among its own Christian neighbors, and capture all the recruits, officers and privates, from their ranks that can be enlightened away from their standard. It should hold meetings, employ lecturers, start a library, circulate books, papers, tracts. It should amuse and instruct the children, especially on Sundays, make up sociables, keep the men busy and happy, and the women occupied and delighted. It is the sociability of the church that is the main support to uphold it. Outdo the church in the same attractiv influence.

Every local League should take a broad interest in the great world beyond its own little circle. It should hav a care for the progress and development of the great National League as well as its own growth. It should look abroad, for encouragement at home. It should know what is going on in other countries. It should not only take pride in the influence and work of our own Ingersoll, but it should cheer Gambetta and applaud Bradlaugh.

Europe is our country to a degree very near that of the United States, and whatever progress Liberalism makes in Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, and even Russia, overflows and helps forward our own. Bradlaugh the Atheist is doing more than any devotee of the Lord God Almighty toward vindicating the Second Commandment and putting swearing Christians in back seats and out of power in all kingdoms and all lands.

So much each League can and should do to promote its own growth. Then these two hundred Leagues are two hundred branches centering in a thrifty tree; so many children making up a growing family. Two hundred links to a chain, two hundred companies to be arranged and distributed into regiments, brigades, and divisions. The union and head of the whole is the National Liberal League. Its office is first to cherish and foster all its children, the Local Leagues, and see that they are streng, flourishing, busy, and happy. Second, to co-ordinate the strength of the individual Leagues into a compacted whole and wield its force as occasion offers, to spread light, to secure the blessings of liberty, to obtain good legislation, to prevent bad legislation, and repeal old and oppressiv laws—and for the promotion of all these ends a prime object of the League will be to elect good officers to administer the laws, and prevent the election of bad officers, to break and make them odious.

The League should look to quality, not altogether to quantity. It needs to be only strong enough in numbers to act as a balance of power—as a commanding critic on all administrativ movement and all legislativ action. With due care and culture and development the League may come to that position of influence that the President of the League will hav only to lift his finger to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Washington to suppress any contemplated piece of sectarian legislation or to promote any project of wise legislation for the general good.

For instance, there is another great World's Fair projected to be held in New York in 1883. Its projectors are now holding daily business meetings, and these meetings are opened with prayer. The question will come up again as it did in 1876 in Philadelphia as to opening the fair for the admission of visitors on Sunday. The League ought by that time to be able to say to Congress, You grant any privileges or appropriate one dollar to that fair unless it opens its doors for admission on Sunday and we will oust you from your places and giv the next Congress to some party who will keep to the spirit as well as the letter of the Constitution, which commands that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.

Will it be said that this line of action on the part of the League will eventually rally the whole church to one standard—drive Catholics and Protestants combined into one party? Let that combination take effect. Liberals will like nothing better. A solid church against a solid secular party will soon make an end of any influence of the church upon legislation. We would then hav an absolute separation of church and state for the good of each.

For the first time in the history of the world the science of politics is coming up to guide men's actions. The vote on any extensiv scale is a thing of modern developments. It never yet has been duly, adequately organized. To organize it requires brains, foresight, calculation, appreciation of far-on consequences. That chess-player is best who is not deceived by the immediate capture of an unimportant pawn, but sees and calculates, or perhaps is able to force five or six moves ahead. All the Liberals hav to do is to organize the intelligent vote of the country. Leave to the two great parties the expense, trouble, fuss, feathers, lanterns, shouting, hurrahing, sky-rocketing, bribing, colonizing, and otherwise manipulating the great mass of voters, mostly the dogged partisan, the unthinking clannish-voting citizen held captiv by bosses and paid in promises of inspectorships in the customs with once in a while a hard-wrung performance that comes as unexpectedly as a random twenty-five-dollar prize in a lottery. Leave all this to the two great parties. We Liberals will arrange, co-ordinate, and direct the thinking brains of politics, the upper ten thousand voters in every state, and they, shifted to this side or that, will dictate all political policy.

"Belonged to wind and world the toil
And venture, and to Guy the oil."

Now it remains for every Liberal voter who has got a head on him, an apparatus to think with, to say whether he can take in such an idea. Will you join such a host—you reader, the personal holder of this article before your eyes and peruser of its views—will you drop all partisan, right or wrong, unreasoning devotion to either of the great parties and will you join this elite balance of power?

There must be many towns and neighborhoods where Liberals hav been long talking, agitating, determining, at some convenient season, to organize themselvs into some kind of Freethinkers' association. Now is the day and now the hour to do it. You can now place yourselvs where you can do the most good. Forget not the assembling of yourselvs together. Take out a charter from the National Liberal League and become one of its activ, working auxiliaries. The Annual Congress of the League will meet in Chicago on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September. It may hav delegates from more than two hundred auxiliary Leagues there. It will be most happy to meet delegates from two hundred and forty-two auxiliaries, just double its force last year at Cincinnati, and it will shout and be delighted to hear from three hundred. Send up delegates from three hundred local Leagues, and this Congress will exert an influence on politics and on moral and religious opinions that will excite attention and command respect. Five delegates are permitted to represent each League, which would giv a representation of fifteen hundred delegates. It will be a grand sight when fifteen hundred delegates from local Liberal Leagues convene anywhere in the United States. It may be done this very year at Chicago if Liberals everywhere will take hold to organize local societies and send up their representativs.

If the Greenbackers are so anxious for our vote and influence, let them organize local Leagues, adopt our platform, and send up delegates. Perhaps they might capture our Congress. Let them try it on. Let Bro. Sparks, too, at Alton, Ill., organize his sixteen Republican Liberals and his two Democratic Liberals into a League and send up a Republican representation to speak for the Republican side of the question and look after Republican interests. It will be a free, orderly, friendly debate, and we are going altogether for the side that makes the best show for general Liberalism. We will talk it over and then perfectly harmonize and agree. We are not like unto other men, these poor Publicans and Republicans and Christian statesmen, for instance, who quit work and go a fishing because our side is not nominated. Since the fellows who once got religion so bad that they couldn't get over it, bolted and left us at Syracuse, there will be no more splits, no more strikes nor lockouts.

Anyhow, we are two hundred Leagues now. Send up three hundred and make it a new Thermopylæ.

T. C. Leland.

What is Thought?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav many times asked myself the question, "What is thought?" I hav read and pondered over the thoughts of others on this subject, but never till now hav I been able to find a satisfactory answer. Men of science, especially those who believe matter comprehends all there is in and of the universe, declare that thought must be substance. Like Christians, they make their proposition, fix their stakes, and then all reasoning, whether logical or otherwise, must harmonize with and sustain the same. I hav pursued a different course. I first reason, and then make my propositions as results. I believe this question is capable of a scientific demonstration.

I too believe that matter is the universe, that there is absolutely nothing outside of matter. Annihilate matter, and you annihilate God. Intelligence, electricity, magnetism, heat, all would be gone. All space would be but a blank, cheerless, desolate void of impenetrable darkness and cold.

Not the faintest shadow of a thought could possibly be found throughout the vast universe of nothingness, for thought cannot exist apart from substance. Thought is simply a manifestation of intelligence, and intelligence is always identified with, therefore a part of, substance. It is claimed that thought is the fruit of intelligence, therefore, like the apple, is as much matter as the parent tree upon which it grew. Now I cannot think so. I do not think thought is substance, nor would I say it is nothing. I believe it is simply a manifestation of intelligence, just as walking is a manifestation of the physical man. Walking or distance is not substance, therefore thought or thinking may not be. I believe that thought is simply a condition, just as sweetness or sourness are conditions of matter. Conditions or properties of matter affect us agreeably or otherwise as they act upon the nerves of sensation. A sharp point or edge is not agreeable. Anything that possesses the power to disintegrate or displace the flesh is not agreeable. Aquafortis would be very painful, for it possesses the power to cause disintegration to a remarkable degree, but power is not substance. Sharpness is not substance, therefore sweetness or sourness may not be. A smooth substance is agreeable, but smoothness is not substance, therefore, properties of matter are simply conditions or modes of manifestation. Milk may be either sweet or sour, first one and then the other; the same identical substance, but with changed conditions or having different modes of manifestation. Wine ripens with age, but the substance is the same. Only the properties or conditions are changed, so that the mode of manifestation to the taste is different.

The universe is dual in its nature. It is visible and invisible, ponderable and imponderable. All properties or conditions belong to the invisible or imponderable. It is utterly impossible to tell how properties or conditions of matter affect the nerves of sensation except by analogy. Sharpness is painful, smoothness is agreeable; therefore we may infer that this holds good as a rule throughout all the nerves of sensation. It is impossible to tell if an apple is sweet or sour by any other sense than taste. Chemical analysis, even, will not reveal the mystery, and yet the lingual nerves very quickly recognize and respond to the difference.

Having, I think, proved that properties of matter are only modes of manifestation and not substance itself, I will now consider man, belonging to whom we find the phenomenon of thought. We find something in him which we do not find in the apple. In man we find organized individualized intelligence, and this intelligence produces thought. Whatever it is within us which thinks, and is not found in an apple, is invisible and imponderable, therefore thought is the manifestation of intelligence. Intelligence, therefore, must be substance. Intelligence is not a manifestation, because thought or thinking would then be a manifestation of a manifestation, or a condition of a condition, which is impossible. We are compelled, then, to conclude that within man is an individualized intelligence which is composed of substance, and we choose to call this the spirit or real man, dwelling within its "tabernacle of flesh."

Having now proved that man is a spirit, and that spirit is substance, it now remains for me to show how the spirit manifests itself, or produces thought, and I am done.

The spirit being invisible to the material eye, is, of course, imponderable, is adapted to and en rapport with the invisible and imponderable universe of matter which we believe pervades all space.

I shall now claim, and I think prove, that the spirit excites or impresses the imponderable or spiritual matter precisely as the sun does the universal ether. If light is a condition, then thought may be. Scientists no longer claim that light is substance transmitted from the sun, and the time is at hand when it will no longer be claimed that thought is substance transmitted from the soul. We are now told that light is a condition, a motion, an undulation or vibration of the universal ether, and that these little waves travel with inconceivable rapidity in straight lines from the sun. Throw a stone into a pond of water, and at once is seen a beautiful illustration of the undulations produced by the sun, and which to us appear as light. Nothing is ever transmitted by undulations. A chip would not be moved laterally an inch by the action of the waves alone in a million of years. Waves are simply the alternate rising and falling of the molecules of which the medium is composed. The molecules never travel laterally, but always vertically. In water the molecules move in obedience to the law of gravity. Analogy teaches that the molecules of ether must move in obedience to some similar law. Nothing is transmitted. All we can say is, the original impact required the expenditure of a certain amount of energy. Some would claim that energy is transmitted, but I cannot discover that energy is anything but condition. Analyze it, and my opinion is confirmed. Start a wave, and it travels across the Atlantic. No one, I think, will claim that substance has traveled with that wave across the ocean. Something lifts a molecule, gravity then seizes it and endeavors to restore the equilibrium. In doing so the momentum which it accumulates carries it below its true or original position. This, by the law of hydrostatics, displaces and lifts another to the same distance above as this went below; this new molecule, then, falling, lifts another, and so on, the molecules oscillating up and down, like a pendulum, until the equilibrium is finally restored. If energy is substance, then law and gravity are substances. In steam the energy which drives the wheel is simply the property of elasticity of the compressed molecules. Elasticity is not substance. The energy of a tightened rubber cord, or the bounding of a ball, is elasticity. If we expose ourselvs to the action of the law of gravity, without support, we at once find ourselvs falling in obedience to law. No energy on our part is required to reach terra firma. Set up a row of bricks, exactly balance the first so that a hair will cause it to fall, and at once the whole row falls. This is the energy of gravity, and gravity is not substance. Each brick is acted upon by gravity, and gravity alone.

We are compelled, then, to conclude that energy, when analyzed rationally, vanishes like many another myth into absolute nothingness. We must not forget that law is condition and not substance, and not a molecule of matter was ever stirred but in obedience to law.

Having, through fear of controversy, disposed of the myth and stumbling-block, energy, I will proceed with my subject.

Undulations seem to be the rule of the universe. I am not certain but by this law many mysteries heretofore unexplained could be readily solved. Agitate any substance, whether fluid or solid, and at once knowledge of the disturbance by corresponding waves is transmitted to remote distances. The telephone proves that by undulations of the magnetic fluid messages are transmitted over the wires. The brain is the telephone, the nerves electric wires, and, without doubt, by the undulations of the nerve-fluid our spirits receive messages from the outer world. It is a wonderful fact that the peculiar undulations correspond so exactly with the cause that absolute knowledge of the same is conveyed. By the nature of the undulations we can tell, absolutely, whether a pebble, a rock, or a steamboat disturbed the waters. In the atmosphere which surrounds us and the earth this wonderful fact is even more beautifully illustrated. The finer the medium the more wonderful the phenomena which attend the undulations. By the nature of the undulations of the air we are able to read with marvelous accuracy of events that are transpiring about us. Every wave or vibration is laden with knowledge. Listen to an orator or a musician, and the air fairly quivers with knowledge and melody. The air of a summer evening is alive with the music of tiny insects. The tinkling of the distant bell tells us of the flocks of sheep or herds of cattle that browse upon the distant hillside. The chirping of the cricket, the croaking of the bullfrog, the rumble of the cars or distant thunder, the singing of birds, the shriek of the steam whistle, the boom of cannon and roar of battle, the blast of the dinner horn, the rush and roar of wind and water, the hum of factories and cities, and melody of music, whether made by fife, drum, brass band, organ, piano, flute, violin, or human voice, all voice to us the wonders of earth by and through the vibrations of the air. The undulations of the universal ether, as excited by the sun and reflected from various substances, convey to us volumes of knowledge. They tell us of the shape, size, color, and nature of all things. Nature is indeed a wonderful teacher. She talks to us with a thousand different tongues. How, indeed, can we help growing wise when we consider how lavish nature is of her wisdom. She has no secret that she would not gladly reveal. Beautiful nature, how like a mother she deals with us, ever bestowing upon us, unasked, her choicest blessings!

In view of all this, may not man, the highest type of intelligence, reverse this process and giv his knowledge back again to nature? May he not manifest his presence and thought, in a similar manner, by this same universal law? Knowledge or thought may be imparted, but his treasures are never diminished. May not the spirit, which is imponderable, excite the atmosphere of spiritual substance surrounding, by thought undulations, which are transmitted precisely like those caused by the sun, the pebble, the bell, or telephone, and all spiritual intelligences within the limit of those thought-waves be able to read their peculiar significance? How grand and beautiful the thought that we are living suns or intelligence, spiritual suns from whence emanate and radiate thought vibrations that illuminate the fields of earth with the glorious light of truth and knowledge!

This is my idea and explanation of thought. As I see it, it is not substance, but condition; and if I hav been able to analyze this wonderful manifestation of the human soul, and find the truth, it is because of the unfoldment of my spiritual nature, which enables me to receive and read the significance of the thought-waves which come to me from the realms of spirit life. E. A. Chapman.

Lowell, Mich., Aug. 3, 1880.

Dr. Tanner's Fast.—What it Teaches.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The case of Dr. Tanner seems to be so little understood either by the public or the medical profession that I think it proper to offer a few explanatory comments. I hav had nothing to do with the management of Dr. Tanner's fast, as skepticism demanded that he should be watched by the jealous eyes of strangers. I communicated his proposition to Dr. Hammond, to gratify Dr. Tanner, but I regarded it as a waste of time to negotiate with Dr. Hammond in the expectation that he would ever risk a dollar in defense of his pretended skepticism, which proved to be idle bluster when brought to the test.

I regarded the whole experiment of Dr. Tanner as a very unnecessary matter if intended for the benefit of physiologists who really understood the human constitution, and therefore knew that such things had been done before and could be done again. But they are a very small class, and the entire medical profession, under the pessimistic skepticism of medical colleges, has been educated into an artificial and pedantic ignorance of the capacities of the human constitution and the real philosophy of biology.

The medical profession needed an infant school to teach a few of the simplest facts of vitality in a demonstrativ way, and Dr. Tanner has very successfully established his forty days' kindergarten in which he has taught some physiological facts which they might hav found in the books they hav neglected to read. They hav discovered that they were unanimously and marvelously ignorant of the principle concerned in fasting, which, however, I hav not space to explain in a newspaper communication. They can all laugh together over their unanimous blundering, for there is hardly anybody left to remark, "I told you so."

It is all very funny. As Puck says, "What fools these mortals be!" Dr. Tanner for fasting six weeks was denounced by many an ignoramus as a fraud, until his anger rose to the boiling point. But he could not find on the whole horizon a foeman worthy of his steel until Dr. Hammond made his thousand dollar banter, which he maintained grandiosely until Dr. Tanner followed him up and compelled him to subside rather awkwardly.

The density of the public ignorance about fasting is amazing. Dr. Tanner was called a fraud, an impostor, a fool, an Infidel, for attempting a performance here which he had already gone through with in Minnesota. All this, however, only added to the eclat of the performance, and now that it is successfully concluded it is discovered that Dr. Tanner has won fame and money so easily, and managed the whole affair so well, that if there are any fools it is not Dr. Tanner, but the millions whom he agitated about a very safe and simple performance.

It is a tempting opportunity to write an essay on medical ignorance, and as the subject is very extensiv (for the great learning of the profession in some directions is mingled with pedantic ignorance in other matters), I shall confine myself to a single specimen—the ignorance of medical editors which was displayed in their super-serviceable zeal to demolish Dr. Tanner.

The editor of the Medical Record of this city intimated that the whole fast was most probably a farce, because he could not explain some of the phenomena, which ought to hav been intelligible to any tyro in physiology. The British Medical News followed the lead of the New York editor, and made the same remarks, "The supposition is that the whole thing is a farce."

What was it that justified an editor in attacking the honor of a physician in good standing, and either the honor or the common sense of the many highly intellectual physicians, including medical professors, who were watching the case with the most jealous vigilance? Simply that he did not understand how Dr. Tanner could increase in weight without eating, or how his inactiv skin could hav failed to perform a certain regular amount of exertion which is considered the proper average, although the amount of perspiration is known to be the most variable of all secretions, and Dr. Tanner's skin was so inactiv as to need a vapor bath to rouse it.

To gain four and a half pounds in four days was pronounced incredible, notwithstanding Dr. Tanner swallowed ninety-two ounces of fluid more than he discharged. Why was he so irregular and unreasonable as not to throw off these ninety-two ounces through his skin as the editor expected?

The editorial assumption is that the increased weight, independent of eating or drinking, is impossible, and also that it is impossible for the skin of a starving man to become inactiv. Let me quote a little elementary physiology for the benefit of those who may hav been misled by these remarks and prejudiced against an honorable experiment.

The learned Dr. Watson says that a lad whose weight had been reduced to ride a Newmarket race gained nearly thirty ounces in weight in one hour, although he drank only half a glass of wine. Dr. Jurine, a well known physiologist, affirms himself to hav gained eighteen ounces in one night without taking food or drink. Dr. Carpenter, whom none will dispute as a physiological authority, reports the case of a jockey whose weight had been reduced to the proper standard for riding, but who as the time of the race approached was found too heavy. His weight had increased six pounds, although he had done nothing to increase it but drinking a cup of tea.

In all these and similar cases the increase is due to the oxidation of hydrogen in the blood, forming water, which is retained. Such absorption of oxygen generally occurs during the night. In diabetic cases the increase of weight by absorption of oxygen and production of water always occurs. In a case reported in the transactions of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Edinburgh, the increase by absorption of oxygen and production of water amounted to 113 pounds in thirty-five days (which, however, was discharged), nearly as much in one day as occurred with Dr. Tanner in four days. I need not multiply examples of what is familiar to well educated physicians. To assail Dr. Tanner's integrity because the phenomena of his case were just what a scientific man would expect is a specimen of the general unfairness and ignorance of the skeptical party.

I say the phenomena in absorption were just what we should expect, for there is an excessiv absorption of oxygen in animals living on a flesh diet, as has been proved by experiments on dogs; and in cases of abstinence, when the body is feeding on itself, the predominance of absorption is nearly as great.

There are many interesting aspects of this case of fasting which Dr. Brown-Sequard and other medical dignitaries do not perceive, because they look at it only in a mechanical way, and do not perceive the laws of vitality which it illustrates. Jos. Rodes Buchanan.

1 Livingston Place.

Junius and Paine.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Col. Ingersoll thinks that Junius was "a coward, a calumniator, and a sneak." I apprehend that the Colonel would hav a harder task to prove it than he ever did to maintain a hopeless case in a court of law. There is nothing, I aver, in the authentic writings of Junius on which to base the charge that he was either a coward or a sneak. And it would be easier to prove that Thomas Paine was a calumniator than that Junius was. Every tory who read Paine's Letters to Lord Howe (Crisis ii, 5), and every anti-republican who rejoiced in his arraignment before Congress for exposing the rascality of Silas Deane, doubtless denounced him as a calumniator.

The letters of Junius were printed in the Public Advertiser, whose proprietor, Woodfall, never knew who wrote them, but presumed he was a man of rank and fortune. Had he known or even suspected that Junius was a lowly excise-man, living on a salary of fifty pounds and compelled to keep a horse, what chance would the writer hav stood of getting his letters printed? Absolute secrecy was necessary, not only for such a man to get a hearing, but to insure his own personal safety. Discovery would hav threatened his grand purpose, driven him out of office, and endangered his life. His audacious publisher was tried and convicted; and though the verdict was nullified by informality and nothing further was done, yet had Junius been revealed, who doubts that a prison would hav been his fate, unless a violent death had awaited him at the hands of aristocratic assassins?

Junius a coward and a sneak? Then was Paine also; for the two characters parallel in every known particular. But let us see.

When Paine was summoned before Congress in 1779 and asked if he wrote certain anonymous articles about Silas Deane, he answered that he did. He was directed to withdraw, and a motion was made to discharge him from the office of Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs. But the motion was lost. Then Paine asked for a hearing, but it was denied him. The next day he sent in a letter in these words:

I cannot, consistently with my character as a freeman, submit to be censured unheard, therefore, to preserve that character and maintain that right, I think it my duty to resign the office of Secretary to the Committee for Foreign Affairs, and I do hereby resign the same.

Any want of moral courage in that transaction? Any characteristics of a sneak?

Now take an example of physical courage. In a private letter to Benjamin Franklin, dated May 16, 1778, after giving a detailed account of military operations near Philadelphia, Paine speaks of a plan proposed by him to burn the enemy's shipping. He says:

I proposed to him, if he would get a boat properly charged with combustibles and take a bateau in tow sufficient for three or four persons, that I would make one with him and two other persons who might be relied on, to go down on that business. One of the company, Captain Blewer of Philadelphia, seconded the proposal; but the Commodore, and what I was surprised at, Col. Bradford, declined it.

Any lack of physical courage there? Any signs of a sneak? Well, then, if it be true after all that Paine was Junius, won't you be sorry, dear Bro. Ingersoll, that you ever charged Junius with being a coward, a calumniator, and a sneak? Wm. Henry Burr.

Washington, D. C, Aug. 13, 1880.

From a Third Party Dreamer.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Were you not a little too hard on us unpractical ones who dreamed of the creation of a third party? You called us hard names. That was not right toward well-meaning fellows like us. It made us groan in the spirit, and we ask revenge.

Do you not know that in the time of the Revolutionary war tories must hav called the rebels unpractical? It was the day when Thomas Paine's words were ringing through the land. "These are the times that try men's souls!" said he; and the doubts and weakness that were gaining over even the brave defenders of liberty fled away as evil spirits before the voice of the good. Do you not remember that Abolitionists were called unpractical, as well as any other contemptuous thing? When men, fired up by enthusiasm, feel it is time to ride over difficulties, timid ones are always ready to cry, Unpractical! not worth listening to!

You stated in the last Truth Seeker that as much as $100,000 or even $200,000 would be needed for organization. Is that the stumbling-block? Then, indeed, we are unpractical. What, three, four, and even, as some state knowingly, five hundred thousand Liberal Freethinkers in the United States, and can't raise $200,000 to unfurl the banner of independence to the hydra of cant and political corruption combined to throttle us! Well, I will engage for one to giv $5 toward starting the fund, and if more is needed after the hat has passed around, I shall throw in five more. Now let 39,999 more average the same, and at first ballot even we shall hav our budget. If that can't be done, then I say too, Good-bye, National Liberal party or life-spark.

But that is not the soul of what I want to say, so listen: My ideal would hav been, and would yet be, a Liberal party in the full signification of the term—a party that would champion political, social, and religious liberties at once. More, I believe its creation possible. A little heroism would kindle the beacon, and wandering thousands would rally round it. Of course, all Liberals in religion would not follow the party. They do not elsewhere, whether in France or England. Most of them, however, ultimately would. It is not sufficient reason to smother a nascent and needed party for the sake of a half-dozen objectors who may threaten to leave it to its fate.

But, if the sentiment of the "big heads" of Liberalism is found to be against this third party, let me say that for one I shall wave all personal preferences and vote with the Liberal element as directed by the Convention. This I consider my duty, as well as the duty of any far-seeing and truly enlightened Liberal. I shall think that Liberalism has missed the opportunity of the hour—a great one in my judgment—but, if it so chooses, I will trust to the strength of its cause for ultimate victory, and make the best of it by voting for any party, as may be decided, so that my vote goes to show the strength of the Liberal movement. Hav I written to no purpose? I hope not. Yours fraternally,

Edmund Gastineau.

P.S.—Let me add that while I take nothing back of the above, yet among the different parties the Republican is the one that should be tabooed by us. I say this with no love for misnamed Democracy. E. G.

Destructiv Influences.—Doubtless countless myriads of living creatures come into existence of which by far the greater part must be destroyed. One aphis may be the parent of 5,904,900,000 individuals in five generations, and when these are swallowed up by lady-birds and other enemies in mass, it is no minute individual variation that can avert their fate. The unchecked produce of one pair of herrings would stock the Atlantic in a few years, until there was no room to move; and when these are ingulfed by shoals, as a mouthful for the Balanaptera, they make as little struggle for their existence as the grass can make that the ox licks up, or the vegetation of a district that is devastated by locusts. It is the unwritten law of nature that one race must die that another may liv; this other, in its turn, subserving the same end, and so constantly until the cycle is completed. Without this law, against which there is no appeal, nature would be a chaotic impossibility. The destructiv influences are so predominant that the carnage is indiscriminate and without struggle.

English steel pens are almost exclusivly made by women.

The Comstock Laws and Democracy.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The next reason assigned by our friend W. S. Bush, in urging us to vote for Garfield, is that there is no good ground to suppose that the Democrats will repeal or modify the United States Comstock laws. He says:

"I cannot see that a change of administration will effect a change in the postal laws. If Comstock is stripped of his power under the state laws he will be shorn of his power to spy upon the liberty of the press. Repeal the charter of the society he represents, and his prestige is at an end. He will hav the same right and power which belong to any other citizen, and no more."

Now let us reason together and see if these things are so.

First, let us not forget that the above words and the whole letter of Mr. Bush is an admission that the Republicans, who passed those United States pastal laws, will never change them. Nothing of that kind is ever to be expected or hoped for. A vote for Garfield is a vote for Comstock; there is no other conclusion. It is greatly to Mr. Bush's credit that he don't try to put us under any illusion. He boldly defends, therefore, the constitutionality and policy of the national Comstock legislation, with what result the reader will judge from my last two letters. Is there not something wrong about the advice that asks Liberals to go to the polls to vote with and for Comstock and his friends? Imagin Howard Crosby and D. M. Bennett, Col. Ingersoll and Anthony Comstock, walking up arm in arm and voting the same ticket for the same policy and the same postal laws! Would you not think of the geese who fellowshiped with the cranes?

Mr. Bush's rejoinder would probably be, Imagin Cardinal McCloskey and Col. Ingersoll voting the same ticket; would the Democratic "happy family" be less ridiculous?

I answer it would not be ridiculous nor incongruous at all for the reason that both parties would hav agreed on the Democratic platform to lay their differences of belief out of politics in this Republic, and to keep the laws so that each should hav equal rights under them in all respects. A union of the most opposit men and beliefs for such purposes is the true triumph of republicanism.

But more on this point in our next letter. Let us now see what Mr. Bush's actual remedy for Comstockism is. He says "if Comstock is stripped of his power under the state laws" he will no longer be a "spy," etc.

But it is plain to everybody, and practically admitted by Mr. Bush, that the Republicans are not intending to "strip" Comstock of his power under the state laws. Mr. Bush's remedy, then, is that we should vote for Garfield and the Republicans in national affairs, and vote for Democrats for state governors and legislators, so as to get the state Comstock laws repealed. Let the reader think how impracticable and ridiculous this is!

Everybody knows that the Republicans will not repeal the state laws and leave the others. Besides, how can we elect the state Democratic ticket in the "pivotal" state of New York without great danger of electing Hancock too? Even if we could get the state laws repealed by the Democrats, and the national Comstock laws sustained by the Republicans, would we not be doing an absurd thing in thus turning over the whole of this peculiarly domestic subject to the general government? What the Liberals hav been contending for is that this subject is one that the states ought to administer, as it does other criminal laws. It is claimed that the general government should not use the post-office as a trick and trap to get offenders under a United States jurisdiction, and that in so doing it usurps an unconstitutional and most dangerous power. Are we ready to giv up this position? Shall we giv up everything to a rudimentary empire?

This brings up the main reasons why I think the Democratic party will at some reasonable time revise this whole subject and put it upon constitutional and safe grounds. In a word, that party adopts our premises as to the general government's jurisdiction, and the conclusion we draw must in time be drawn by them. General Hancock and the Democratic press generally place the greatest emphasis upon the view of the government opposed to centralization and the enlargement of federal criminal jurisdiction by indirect construction of the Constitution. For example, in this morning's New York Herald Ex-Governor Hoffman, now absent in Europe on business, expresses the position of his party as follows:

"I cannot express merely partisan views of men and things, for I hav passed out of activ politics. I must speak, however, if at all, as a Democrat, for I hold fast to all my Democratic principles, which include home rule, honest money, free ships, a tariff for revenue, freedom of elections from the control of centralized power at Washington, whether Republican or Democratic. No soldiers at the polls. To the states and to the federal government all the rights the Constitution givs to each—no more and no less. In other words, a government as strong as the Constitution and no stronger, and to the Supreme Court the respect due to it as the expounder of the Constitution, as long as it does not attempt, under cover of judicial interpretation, by partisan decisions to revolutionize the government itself."

"The real danger to American affairs is the tendency to centralization—to hav a government stronger than the Constitution. The Republican party has allied itself to and encouraged the growth of this tendency. It looks first to placing in the hands of the government administration at Washington, which happens now to be Republican, absolute control over the machinery of elections, with a view to perpetuating party power. Next, to enforce its authority and protect its partisan officials by the aid of the army, which has no proper place in a republic except it be remote from the polls. After that it looks to the control of telegraphs, savings banks, railroads, and other great corporate and business interests heretofore free from governmental interference, and then—a strong man at the head of the government. It is strange this tendency to centralization exists only in the American republic. All over Europe the people are fighting against it and crushing it out, and in its best fortified places the life of the 'strong man at the head of the government' is hardly worth a day's purchase now. It is time this danger to popular rights had a check in America."

Every Democratic paper and politician takes this ground. When these views prevail in the national councils consistency requires that the postal laws should be limited to postal purposes. It will be necessary, of course, to show that provision has been made to punish real offenses by the state and common law tribunals, and that there is a general recognition of the fact that the law can be safely repealed. This it will be the duty of the Liberals to show, and then I believe the Democrats will repeal those laws or modify them to what may reasonably be called postal purposes. They cannot admit the premises and avoid this conclusion if they are held firmly before the country on that issue, as the Liberals can hold them if they will.

Another reason why I think the Democrats will at a reasonable time revise those laws, is that they are not their laws, nor is Comstock their pet or appointee as United States special agent, nor under any state laws. The Democrats hav never gone into this business of uniting church and state in a moral censorship over the mails, either in the nation or the states. Comstock is the child of Calvinistic theocracy, adopted and appointed to office by the Republican party only. The Democrats hav every reason of party custom and policy to make a clean sweep of the old party office-holders and policy.

A still further reason for thinking that this may be done is that the Democratic press and many prominent Democrats are really capable of intelligent reasoning on this subject. I do not say that no Republicans can reason on this subject, but they are very rare birds, and I am not sure that they exist at all. Let me illustrate their logic and apply it to the last prosecution under these laws.

It seems that a Dr. Buchanan has been running a bogus medical college in Philadelphia for the purpose of issuing medical diplomas giving the title of "Dr." without any substantial medical education back of it. "The United States of America" had him arrested and held to bail in an enormous sum. The Doctor started to visit his daughter in New Jersey, and on the way jumped off of the ferryboat in mid-river and is supposed to be another case of suicide. The New York Herald of the 18th continues the story thus:

"But whether he is dead or not, it is now conceded that he is out of the jurisdiction of the United States District Court. He was held in $10,000 bail on the 10th of June last by the United States Commissioner, and a true bill was found against him yesterday by the Grand Jury for using the mail to assist in his bogus diploma trade. The United States District Attorney applied to Judge Butler in court this morning to hav Buchanan's bail forfeited."

It seems that under these laws death is an ordinary result We are told that Comstock boasts of 15 cases—"better dead than alive," but this "Dr." is supposed to hav escaped, being a worthy pupil of Comstock in deception.

But to our point. Suppose that a Liberal citizen begins to inquire what part of the Constitution givs the United States the jurisdiction over the medical college business in Pennsylvania? It occurs to him that these colleges, being organized under state laws, or, at least, being in that state, should be suppressed by its authorities. He thinks that if the United States gets its jurisdiction because its mails hav been used to "assist" in this crime, it has, or ought to hav, jurisdiction in all other crimes in which the mails "assist" or are "misused."

He ventures to ask a distinguished Republican orator and statesman if these laws giving the United States this power to discriminate and punish according to the sentiments and purposes of mailed matter are not unconstitutional, and abridgments of the freedom of the press. Does the statesman undertake to reason and show that such laws are Constitutional and safe? No. He replies with the knock-down argument, "I don't care a damn whether the Constitution is constitutional or not. I never appeal to state rights. The doctrin of state rights has been the excuse for every outrage since the government began. It repudiated the paper money of the Revolution. It was the mother of secession and rebellion; anybody who appeals to it is the abettor of traitors and rebels; I am going to vote for Garfield. Democrats are Bourbons!" If our inquiring friend survives this and applies to a distinguished semi-Liberal Republican editor, he gets set down upon in this way:

"You ought to encourage all laws and efforts to put down this 'bogus' college business instead of trying to excuse it. You know very well that the mails were never designed to carry bogus diplomas. They are contraband everywhere. The states cannot get at them in the mails, and therefore the United States must get at them there, and punish the senders. You are the abettor of swindlers and rascals, and probably no better than they. If you hav a diploma as lawyer, or doctor, it is probably bogus, and thus your interest in this precious scoundrel is accounted for. I leave all Leagues and societies of which we are members. I am holier than thou. Never dare to let your shadow cross my path again."

If the inquirer, leaving the "Liberal" Republic statesman, and press, turns to the "religious" Republican press, e. g., the New York Independent, he gets the "true indignation of righteousness." Joe Cook, the favorit bulldog, is let loose in columns of blackguardism and falsehood, accusing the poor inquirer of indecencies and crimes unspeakable. If a modestly-worded denial of these offenses is sent in to that paper with the deprecatory plea for, at least, a hearing, the denial goes to the waste-basket without a word, the bulldog is called right out again, and the poor fellow is told that he is merely "vermin," or vermin excuser, and ought to hav been in hell long ago.

These illustrations scarcely exaggerate the kind of treatment I and others hav received from Republicans in trying to get this Comstock legislation understood. From beginning to end we hav been treated by Republicans as though we were not human beings, much less free and equal citizens of the republic. We hav stood it all calmly from the assurance that we were right and that the day of justification would come. It will come in time, and from the Democracy, and I believe only from them. I believe so because their papers and statesmen hav generally treated us decently and hav largely agreed with us. Take the Democratic press of this city as an example. The Democratic paper of largest circulation is the Sun. It has never failed to bear witness against these laws, and demands their repeal on the grounds that they are unconstitutional and unsafe.

The sprightly little paper, Truth, is next in circulation, and it takes the same grounds, and is a constant thorn in the side of Comstock and his theocracy.

The World, Express, and Star hav repeatedly taken similar grounds; while the daily Eagle, of Brooklyn, is as clear as a bell on the subject.

The Republican papers may occasionally criticise some of Comstock's doings unfavorably, as the Tribune has done but when the test comes they always side with the theocracy and their laws.

As to the Democratic statesmen, they are generally outspoken in regard to the unconstitutionality of this indirect way of extending the criminal jurisdiction of the general government. The committee who waited upon Congress in this matter assure me that with few exceptions they had no friends there but Democrats. The names I could giv, but it would be invidious to name a few among many.

Well, but says Mr. Bush, "Why didn't they then repeal or modify the laws?" I answer that it was not a reasonable time to agitate or pass upon the subject. The members generally could not in the stress of business be brought to consider a minor matter over which a veto certainly impended from a Republican president. The people were not educated so as to demand or sustain action in the subject at all. Even the Liberals (and alas, Mr. Bush!) were not clear on the subject, and could not unite upon what should be done, and had not educated the people up to the question.

But the reasonable time will come. It will be when a Democratic Congress revises the whole postal laws and system, which must be done in a few years. Then the views of the Democratic press and statesmen we hav referred to will be heard effectivly if the Liberals stand together and giv them support. Then the postal laws of our country will be for postal purposes, and not a general criminal bureau.

The people and the states will by that time learn to protect themselvs from obscenity and frauds, and even bogus colleges, without the trick and device of making them United States offenses through the post-office.

But why does Mr. Bush say we must not try to help the Democrats to do these things? Because they are "Bourbons!" We will consider that next week.

New York, Aug. 20, 1880. T. B. Wakeman.

The Religious Amendment.

It has been claimed that the Republican party attempted to put God in the Constitution, and were prevented by sixteen Democratic Senators who voted against the joint resolution. This statement is neither fair nor true. Dec. 14, 1875, James G. Blaine introduced a joint resolution in the House of Representatives, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following be proposed to the several states of the Union as an amendment to the Constitution, namely:

Article XVI. No state shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any state for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations.

This was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and was not reported back to the House until Aug. 4, 1876, after Mr. Blaine ceased to be a member of the House. It was amended, adding this sentence, "This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislativ power in the Congress" On its passage in the House the vote was, ayes, 180; nays, 7; not voting, 98.

Gen. Garfield voted aye, while Blackburn and J. Proctor Knott and other Democrats voted nay.

It was referred in the Senate to the Judiciary Committee and reported back; amended, and as amended was lost by a vote of 28 yeas to 16 nays.

The proposed Art. XVI. thus defeated is as follows:

Art. XVI. No state shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under any state. No public property, and no public revenue of, nor any loan of credit by or under the authority of, the United States, or any state, territory, district, or municipal corporation, shall be appropriated to, or made or used for, the support of any school, educational or other institution, under the control of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination, or wherein the particular creed or tenets of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination shall be taught. And no such particular creed or tenets shall be read or taught in any school or institution supported in whole or in part by such revenue or loan of credit; and no such appropriation or loan of credit shall be made to any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination, or to promote its interests or tenets. This article shall not be construed to prohibit the reading of the Bible in any school or institution; and it shall not hav the effect to impair rights of property already vested.

Sec 2. Congress shall hav power, by appropriate legislation, to provide for the prevention and punishment of violations of this article.

It was not defeated because it provided that "this article shall not be construed to prohibit the reading of the Bible in any school or institution," but because the church was a domestic institution, and like slavery, ought not to be interfered with by the nation. In short, the proposed article interfered with state rights.

Senator Kernan preferred to "leave the states to manage their domestic institutions as the people of each state may choose." Whyte, of Maryland, Stevenson, of Kentucky, Bogy, of Missouri, concurred. Eaton, of Connecticut, insisted the question was a state right, "one of her sovereign rights." Salsbury, of Delaware, protested against the amendment "in the interest of Christianity." No Democrat voted for it. The immortal 16, who voted "No," are Senators Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Jones, of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Kay, McCrary, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Randolph, and Stevenson.

The Democratic platform, interpreted by the men who made it, means nothing. They deny one of the cardinal demands of the Liberal League. The tendency of the party is shown by a bill passed last winter in the Senate, reported by Wade Hampton, to transfer the arsenal property of the United States at Charleston, S. C., valued at a very large sum of money, to the Institute of the Church of the Holy Communion, an aristocratic and sectarian school. The Democratic party is not in favor of Freethought. Its statesmen, holding that religion is a state institution, hav disfranchised Infidels from the witness stand and from office. In Arkansas, a person who denies the being of God cannot hold any civil office in the state, nor be competent to testify as a witness in any court. In Delaware, unbelievers are not allowed to testify. In Maryland, a witness is competent provided he believes in the existence of God, and that under his dispensation such persons will be held morally accountable for his acts and be rewarded or punished therefor, either in this world or the world to come. No person can hold office who does not believe in the existence of God. In Mississippi the Constitution provides that no person who denies the existence of a Supreme Being shall hold any office. In North Carolina it is provided that all persons who shall deny the being of Almighty God shall be disqualified for office. In South Carolina a person who denies the existence of a Supreme Being is not permitted to hold any office. The Constitution of Tennessee provides that no person who denies the being of a God or of a future state of rewards and punishment shall hold any office in the civil department of the state. In Texas the Constitution provides that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification for any office of public trust, nor shall any one be excluded from holding any office on account of religious sentiments, provided he acknowledges the existence of a Supreme Being.

The party which has, in the most solemn form of legislation, stripped Infidels of their equal rights with other men in most of the Southern states has nominated General Hancock, and the vote of the solid South is relied upon to elect him. Liberals, as such, hav nothing to hope from such a party, nor from the candidate who has said in his letter of acceptance that the President is simply to execute the will of Congress.

The Liberal League has framed a broader platform than this. At the last Congress it

Resolved, That we deem it expedient for the Liberals of this country to act as a political organization for the accomplishment of the following objects:

1. Total separation of church and state, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2 National protection for national citizens in their equal political, civil, industrial, and religious rights, irrespectiv of race or sex; to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3 Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular republic; to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

This resolution cuts up by the roots the dogma of states' rights. If then the members of the Liberal League are to be committed to the support of Hancock and English, and to follow the lead of Eaton, Stevenson, Wade Hampton, and Whyte, of Maryland, it will be necessary to recast its platform, re-unite its principles, and avow that the regulation of religious matters is one of the sovereign rights of each state. Are the Liberals ready for this change?

The Republican party alone has proposed to separate church and state by an amendment in the Constitution blotting out the sectarian and bigoted limitations of state constitutions and laws. It is not honest to charge that party with voting to put God in the Constitution. The rights of man, if worth protection, are entitled to national protection. They should not be left at the mercy of the Southern Democratic states, where the shot-gun and fraud determin who shall make and enforce the laws. In many of these states the Infidel has no protection for person or property. He can neither make the laws nor obtain a standing as a witness in the courts. I know of no better way to redeem them than to stand by the party which has put itself upon record in favor of the broadest enjoyment of personal and political rights. A party whose leader in the House in 1876 introduced the Blaine amendment, whose leading Senators advocated it in essentially the same form in the Senate, and would hav carried it but for the adverse votes of the Southern Democratic Senators.

Liberals know where Garfield stands. Will they support Hancock, who has put himself in the hands of their South-

W. S. Bush.

Two New Innocents Abroad.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Half seas over—wholly seized is what we hav been—and here we are in company with nearly two hundred mortals—some of whom think they are, or ought to be, immortals—everyone trying to look and act as if a trip at sea was a very charming experience. "My doctor said a voyage would be just the thing to build me up [she was already built up by her dress-maker] and so I took passage in a Kewnarder; and, oh dear me, I left my darling little Poody Poody at home." Poody was a dog three months old.

Old gent with gray hair had run away from business just to rest, and meant to take a run through Ireland, a turn among the cathedrals of England, a week or two in Paris, skip up the Rhine, slip through the Alps into Italy, and then a few days in Switzerland, and then home again. He evidently meant to squeeze half a lifetime of good sight-seeing into a poor little month of thirty-one days or so. "My church sends me hover hevery year, you know, and it is quite the correct thing;" and so he is going for the seventh time to pick up a few more airs (not musical) with which to muddle the brains of his people, who pay him to gather spiritual food. He gathers—he knows what—and nobody else need inquire.

We hav a goodly host of notables on board. A real live baronet, Sir Bache, who did not leave his dog, and the steward said, "If it had been henny one helses dog there would hav been a 'ell of a row, you know." Then Peter Cooper's son-in-law, Mr. Hewitt, ex-Postmaster-General Cresswell, Hon. Washburne, ditto Pratt, doctor this and that, parson this and that, with wives, daughters, dressing-maids, and steamer chairs.

Poor Bennett tried to do his duty and eat his money's worth, but failed on the very first trial. He took a hasty step to the side of the boat and spent the better part of three or four days in quiet contemplation in the retirement of his birth. It is an old trick of the steward to tempt passengers to stuff—in the interest of the fishes—when of course they tax the ship's provisions very lightly the rest of the voyage. Rawson is a more sly old fox, and eats his grapes and chickens quietly, moderately, but very surely, not having failed to be in his seat at the table at every sound of the gong. He also does regular duty walking up and down the decks, generally escorting some lady, and eloquently orating to the great disgust of several younger and better dressed men, who are sour with envy. He varies the exercise by hitching arms with the Jesuit father from Naples, and horrifying him with glowing accounts of the progress of the Freethinkers' Federation of Belgium, and the great Congress to assemble there soon; and also by cornering Mr. Hewitt, Mr. Cresswell, and other old wise politicians, and startling them with the magnificent array of two hundred Liberal Leagues in English and one hundred and ninety-eight in the German language, and the glorious prospects of the secular idea in the country.

My duty has been to watch over the manifest destiny of three women, four chairs, fourteen shawls, wraps, umbrellas, and the numerous fixings usual and necessary to do a trip in the ocean steamer, and to engineer them into places where the drizzling rain will soak them and the wind shake their bones—a line of conduct no one in their senses would follow at home. Think of my wife going on the roof of our house in Thirty-eighth street, sitting on one side of a chimney in a waterproof, under an umbrella, in a stiff wind and a driving rain! She would say I was an idiot to do it in New York, but everybody does it here. There is another thing that everybody does, or does not, which is to walk with ease and dignity. Such wild dives into your neighbor's ribs, tumbles into the side of the passageway, or rushes at the dining table, would be queer anywhere else but on board ship. Mr. Bennett looks wise, with paper pad and pencil, coaxing his wits for an idea; but he is probably watching for porpoises that sometimes tumble over the waves near the vessel, or trying to count the flocks of gulls or Mother Carey's chickens, that are always in sight. Of course he varies these duties by watching the games of checkers, dominoes, and chess, in the smoking room.

The Spaniard's violin, with piano accompaniment, is a delightful addition to the evening's pastime; and Dominie Maynard's lecture on cathedrals added something to the cash-box of the Sailors' Orphans' Home. We are a busy world here "on the briny." Up with the daylight, watching for sunrise, with which we hav been favored only twice in eight days, with only one real sunset with a clear golden orb; looking for vessels which come along one, two, three, or more a day; and for meals that are a tediously long time between; studying the bill of fare that outdoes the Brevoort House; answering the leading questions of the gentleman from Connecticut, who is evidently in duty bound to biograf every one of us, and boring the ship's officers with questions they hav answered to other green passengers many, many times before. Well, what do you suppose we can do? We can't go round the corner to the drug-store for candy or perfume (the bar is really down stairs near the engine), nor to the next block to drop a letter (the purser says Queenstown is the first letter-box on the route), nor can a poor man go to the store "to meet a man." All those quiet games that I hav played on the wife for years—or until she grew too knowing in city ways to accept my announcements without a provoking smile—are here of no avail. She feed the stewardess and was shown all over the ship within the first two days, and is always ready to inform me where this and that place is to be found; she knows the catalog of books in the library, how to get a cup of coffee early in the morning with an orange (which she insists is a rational morning toddy), how to quietly drop into a snug corner of the saloon when the ship is plunging and rolling like mad, and pretend to be deeply engaged in a book when she is really trying hard to "keep it down." She knows just when it is safe to try a walk up and down the deck, or a game at shuffle board, having studied the roll of the vessel. She is a treasure. I believe I said before that she is my wife.

She tells me the Vanderbilts are represented here. Awful to think of—so many millions—not of the family, but of money. And other notable families, for instance, the Beecher's. Awful to think of—not the family, but what they hav done; and the Washburnes—awful to think of—not anything they hav done, but their number and ubiquitous presence everywhere; and the preachers, both for their number (five in this one boat), and what they might do if they tried; that is awful to think of; and the doctors—but they are really too awful to think of as to what they might do.

Well, here we are, Friday morning, on the coast of Ireland; and it is a great relief to see something solid after seeing so much movable stuff in the shape of sea water. The coast here is rocky, with a thin coating of soil, few houses, fields divided by stone walls, and no trees. We passed a watch-tower built by Oliver Cromwell, now looking like a deserted castle, with two towers and gables, securely walled in, on a high rocky point. The telegraph station signalled us at 4:30 this morning, and probably our arrival will appear in the New York Herald this morning, of course five hours later, or 12:20 Thursday. A goodly number of our company go ashore at Queenstown to do Ireland, I among the rest. I hope to see our pilgrims, Bennett and Rawson, at Brussels, but, if not there, in New York later in the year.

Viator,
A Fellow-Passenger of B. and R.

George Chainey.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I predict that the Liberal cause has recently gained a most valuable acquisition in the person of George Chainey, who has so bravely dared to be true to his own convictions and leave a lucrativ position in the Christian church and step out on to the platform of Freethought, where he can be free to utter his honest convictions. And I do hope that the Liberals of America will giv our noble brother a hearty welcome and keep him constantly engaged in the lecture field.

I am pleased to announce that Bro. Chainey will be at the Hornellsville Convention, and there giv his new and remarkable lecture entitled, "Theology is all the Baseless Fabric of a Dream."

I take the liberty of quoting the following from a letter I just received from Mr. Chainey. It is evident by this letter that he "means business" and will not be idle. He writes from Sturgis, Michigan:

Dear Friend: I left home August 7th on a lecturing expedition. I spoke twice at Covington, Indiana, August 8th, to two very fine audiences. Liberalism has captured the very best people of the town, and they are talking of organization. I spoke at South Bend, Indiana, August 12th, to a fair audience. Learning that the meeting at Schoolcraft was postponed, where I was expected to speak on Sunday, the 15th, and hearing that Sturgis was a Liberal town, I came out here. I found the Spiritualists and Liberals in possession of a fine church building, in which I arranged to speak morning and afternoon, and at the close of the second lecture they requested me to speak again in the evening. A representativ of the Burr Oak League being present, I was induced to pay them a visit, and last night spoke to a schoolhouse full of people in the district where they hold their meetings. I hav been delighted in finding the Liberals in all these places to be the best people in point of character as well as intelligence. I intend to work my way on from here to Hornellsville, calling at such places where there are Leagues. Can you refer me to any places around Hornellsville where I might secure engagements if I should arrive before the Convention?

I refer the latter portion of the above communication to our Liberal friends of central and western New York.

H. L. Green.

The Fourth New York Liberal League will hold a meeting at 231 West 37th street, Tuesday evening, August 31st, for the election of officers and the appointing of delegates to the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League. A full attendance is specially requested.

E. M. Macdonald, Sec.

New Theory of Lightning Strokes.—Prof. Colladon, of Geneva, has made some interesting observations on the course of lightning when it strikes trees and houses. He holds that the great discharges which injure trees and houses seldom or never happen while the lightning has an unobstructed course—which it has along the thin upper branches of the trees, where birds and their nests are often left quite uninjured by its descent. But it is where the electric current reaches the thick stem that the tree becomes a worse and worse conductor, and it is here, therefore, that the tree is what is called struck, i e, here that the electricity, failing to find an unobstructed channel to the earth, accumulates in masses, and gives out shocks which rend the tree. And the same is true of houses whose lightning-conductors stop short of the ground. Prof. Colladon has also shown that the close neighborhood of a pool of water is a great attraction to the electric current, and that the electricity often passes down a house or tree till it is near enough to dart straight across to the water; and he thinks that, where possible, lightning-conductors should end in a spring or pool of water. Prof. Colladon believes that lightning descends rather in a shower—through a multitude of vines, for instance, in the same vineyard—than in a single main stream. It divides itself among all the upper branches of a tree, and is received from hundreds of atmospheric points at once, instead of, as has been usually supposed, from one. Electricity is a rain, a number of tributaries from a wide surface, not a single torrent.

In 1845 the first telegram was sent.

Discussion.

What Objections to Christianity?

MR. MAIR'S FIFTH LETTER.—CONTINUED.

Pardon me if I tire your patience by quoting Mr. Malcom's concluding remarks on the religion of Buddha and its influences:

"No false religion, ancient or modern, is comparable to this. Its philosophy is indeed not exceeded in folly by any other, but its doctrines and practical piety bear a strong resemblance to those of holy scripture. There is scarcely a principle or precept in the Bedagat which is not found in the Bible. Did the people but act up to its principles of peace and love, oppression and injury would be known no more within their borders. Its deeds of merit are in all cases either really beneficial to mankind or harmless. It has no mythology of obscene and ferocious deities; no sanguinary or impure observances; no self-inflicted tortures; no tyrannizing priesthood; no confounding of right and wrong by making certain iniquities laudable in worship. In its moral code, its descriptions of the purity and peace of the first ages, of the shortening of man's life because of his sins, etc., it seems to have followed genuine traditions. In almost every respect it seems to be the best religion which man has ever invented.

"At the same time we must regard Buddhism with unmeasured reprobation if we compare it, not with other false religions, but with truth. Its entire base is false. It is built, not on love to God, nor even love to man, but on personal merit. It is a system of religion without a God. It is literally Atheism. Instead of a heavenly father, forgiving sin and filial service from a pure heart as the effect of love, it presents nothing to love, for its deity is dead; nothing for the ultimate object of action but self, and nothing for man's highest and holiest ambition but annihilation.

"The system of merit corrupts and perverts to evil the very precepts whose prototypes are found in the Bible, and causes an injurious effect on the heart, from the very duties which have a salutary effect on society. Thus, to say nothing of its doctrines of eternal transmigration and of uncontrolable fate, we may see in this single doctrine of merit the utter destruction of all excellence. It leaves no place for holiness, for everything is done for the single purpose of obtaining advantage.

"Sympathy, tenderness, and benevolence would become extinct under such a system had not Jehovah planted their rudiments in the human constitution. If his neighbor's boat be upset, or his house on fire, why should the Buddhist assist? He supposes such events to be the unavoidable consequence of demerit in a former existence; and if this suffering be averted there must be another of equal magnitude. He even fears that by his interfering to prevent or assuage his neighbor's calamity he is resisting established fate and bringing evil on his own head.

"The same doctrine of merit destroys gratitude either to God or man. If he is well off it is because he deserves to be. If you do him a kindness he cannot be persuaded that you have any other object or reason than to get merit, and feels that he compensates your generosity by furnishing the occasion. If the kindness be uncommon, he always suspects you of sinister designs. In asking a favor, at least of an equal, he does it peremptorily, and often haughtily, on the presumption that you will embrace the opportunity of getting merit; and when his request is granted retires without the slightest expression of gratitude. In fact, as has been already stated, there is no phrase in his language that corresponds with our 'I thank you.'

"The doctrine of fate is maintained with the obstinacy and devotedness of a Turk. While it accounts to them for every event, it creates doggedness under misfortune and makes forethought useless.

"Buddhism allows evil to be balanced with good by a scale which reduces sin to the shadow of a trifle. To sheeko to a pagoda, or offer a flower to the idol, or feed the priests, or set a pot of cool water by the wayside, is supposed to cancel a multitude of sins. The building of a kyoung or pagoda will outwipe enormous crimes and secure prosperity for ages to come. Vice is thus robbed of its terrors, for it can be overbalanced by easy virtues. Instances are not rare of robbery, and even murder, being committed to obtain the means of buying merit. All the terrors, therefore, with which hell is represented do but serve to excite the observance of frivolous rites. The making of an idol, an offering, or some such act, is instituted for repentance and reparation for all inward excellence and every outward charity.

"It ministers also to the most extravagant pride. The Buddhist presumes that incalculable merit in previous incarnations has been gained to give him the honor of now wearing human nature. He considers his condition far superior to that of the inhabitants of the other islands in this system and his chance of exaltation to be of the most animating character. Conceit therefore betrays itself in all his ways. The lowest man in society carries himself like the 'twice-born' Brahman of Hindostan" (Travels in Asia, pp. 213, 214).

Egypt, in whom Infidels have so often reposed confidence, has invariably proved a dangerous witness against their cause. It seems a fatality that you should have chosen to array her polytheistic conceptions as a source of the monotheism of the Bible, and the many names you quote with their transparent mythological meanings would cause their immediate rejection by every reflecting mind.

If you had adduced the ancient Egyptians, those who were her merchants and princes in the time that Joseph wielded an authority next to the king, and those who before his time helped to highten her wonderful civilization and heap her shrines of opulence and luxury; if you had adduced their religion as very similar to the religion of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, I would admit that you had sound scholarship and Biblical truth on your side. I have not a particle of doubt of it myself; it is the teaching of the book of Genesis, and is amply supported by the inscriptions on the monuments and many of the papyri texts. But if you allege this as the source, you must admit either the antiquity claimed by Jews and Christians for the Pentateuch, or its complete originality, because the knowledge that the Egyptians once were monotheistic was not known for from at least fifteen hundred years before Christ, until its discovery by recent Egyptologists.

For the proneness of the human race to idolatry and neglect of the true God soon effaced all knowledge the early Egyptians had of him. Temples to the honor of false gods, and prayers to the sun, moon, and the forces of nature, became the "rising faith," with abominable rites and ceremonies, books of superstition and priests of idolatry, and all knowledge of him who was still providentially watching Egypt was blotted from their minds and hearts for over a millennium of years. And it is to this dark period of the grossest superstition and polytheistic pantheism that you recur and derive Christianity.

There is the parade of the names of Neph, Ammon, Pthah, Khem, Ra, Set, Osiris, Isis, Horus, and Typhon. It seems to be a fixed principle with you that if there exists any country with a mythology (and what country has none?) you have immediately discovered a source of Christianity, and the more unlike the conception the more certain the origin. It is scarcely patriotic for you to have so sadly neglected the Cisatlantic gods and myths. Our own aborigines would have supplied you with many equally certain derivations, while Mexico and Peru would conclusively prove that Christianity sprang from their inventive faculty.

One would think the mere repetition of the myths of Egypt, even aside from the tracing of their origin and meaning, would show your assertions untenable; in fact, to be the most grotesque absurdities. Let me quote from P. Le Page Renouf, an Egyptologist of no mean authority. He says, in the Hibbart lectures for the past year: "The Egyptian deities are innumerable. There were countless gods in heaven and below the earth. Every town and village had its local patrons. Every month of the year, every day of the month, every hour of the day and of the night, had its presiding divinity, and all these gods had to be propitiated by offerings. I several times made the attempt to draw up an index of the divine names occurring in the texts, but found it necessary to abandon the enterprise. What can all these gods mean?

"Nothing can be more clear than that under the name of God the Egyptians did not understand, as we do, a being without body, parts, or passions; they are described as suffering from hunger and thirst, old age, disease, fear, and sorrow. They perspire, their limbs quake, their heads ache, their teeth chatter, their eyes weep, their noses bleed, 'poison takes possession of their flesh, even as the Nile takes possession of the land.' They may be stung by reptiles and burnt by fire. They shriek and howl with pain and grief. All the great gods require protection. Osiris is helpless against his enemies, and his remains are protected by his wife and sister. . . . All the gods are liable to be forced to grant the prayers of men through fear of threats which it is inconceivable to us that any intelligence but that of idiots should have believed. . . . The entire list of the gods of the first order is easily reduced to two groups, the first representing the sun god Ra and his family, and the second Osiris and his family. It is most probable that neither Pthah nor Ammon were originally at the head of lists, but obtained their places as being chief divinities of the capitals Memphis and Thebes. Both these gods are identified with the sun god Ra, and so indeed are all the chief local divinities. The whole mythology of Egypt may be said to turn upon the histories of Ra and Osiris, and these histories run into each other sometimes in inextricable confusion, which ceases to be wonderful when texts are discovered which simply identify Osiris and Ra. . . . Whatever may be the case in other mythologies, 'I look upon the sunrise and sunset, on the daily return of day and night, on the battle between light and darkness, on the whole solar drama in all its details, that is acted every day, every month, every year, in heaven and in earth, as the principal subject' of Egyptian mythology.

"There can be no controversy about the meaning of Ra. Ra is not only the name of the sun-god but is the usual word for the sun. In other mythologies the sun-god is borne in a chariot or on horseback; in Egypt his course across the sky is made in a boat. The sky (Nu) is accordingly conceived as an expanse of water, of which the Nile is the earthly representative. Ra is said to proceed from 'Nu, the father of the gods.' His adversary is Apap, who is represented as a serpent pierced with the weapons of the god. The conflict is not between good or evil, but the purely physical one between light and darkness. . . . The myth of Osiris, though much more elaborate, has the same meaning. Osiris is the eldest of the five children of Seb and Nut. 'He is greater than his father and more powerful than his mother.' He wedded his sister Isis whilst they were yet in their mother's womb, and their offspring was the elder Horus. Set and Nephthys, another wedded pair, are their brother and sister. In this myth the antagonist of Osiris is Set, by whom he is slain, but he is avenged by his son Horus, and he reigns in the nether world, like the Indian Yama, and judges the dead from his throne in the hall of the Two-fold Right. And this he does daily. . . . . The parents of Osiris are Seb and Nut. Seb is the earth, Nut is heaven. Seb is identified with the earth in the older texts, and in the later ones 'the back of Seb' is a familiar term for the earth. . . Nut is the name of a female goddess, frequently used synonymously with other name of the sky, and she is as frequently pictured with her arms and legs extended over the earth, with the stars spread over her body. The marriage of heaven and earth is extremely common in mythologies. . . . From the union of Seb and Nut sprung the mild Osiris, the sun, Isis the dawn, wedded before they were born, and the fruit of their marriage was Horus—the sun in his full strength. Set, the destroyer, is also the son of Seb and Nut, but his triumph is in the west; he is Darkness, and his spouse Nepthys, a deity of mixed character is the sunset. There are traces of a legend according to which Osiris mistook Nepthys for his wife Isis. Nepthys, who loved him, encouraged the illusion, and from their embraces Anpu (Anubis) was born. Anubis, like his mother, is a deity of mixed character, partly belonging to the diurnal, partly to the nocturnal powers. It is said of him that 'he swallowed his father Osiris.' I believe that he represents the twilight or dusk immediately following the disappearance of the sun. . . But Horus also is one of the names of the sun, and had his myths quite independently of Ra or Osiris. The most prominent ones in comparatively later times describe his victory over Set or the monster Tebha (the Typhon of the Greeks). But the victory of darkness over light was appropriately represented by the myth of the blind Horus. An ancient text speaks of him as 'sitting solitary in the darkness and blindness.' He is introduced in the royal ritual at Abydos, saying, 'I am Horus, and I come to search for mine eyes.' According to the 64th chapter of the Book of the Dead 'his eye is restored to him at the dawn of day.' . . . The conflict of light and darkness is represented in many other mythical forms. . . Set, though the antagonist of light in the myths of Ra, Osiris, and Horus, is not a god of evil. He presents a physical reality, a constant and everlasting law of nature, and is as true a god as his opponents. His worship is as ancient as any. The kings of Egypt were devoted to Set as to Horus, and derived from them the sovereignty over north and south. . . . It was not till the decline of the empire that the deity came to be regarded as an evil demon, and that his name was effaced from monuments, and other names substituted for his in the ritual."

These myths are, according to my opponent, the sources of the worship of Jehovah, and suggested the idea of the conception of Christ, who is also probably a mythical personage. I fear that the thoughtful reader will find his patience exhausted ere this, and perhaps suspect that we are trying to see how far we can impose upon him.

For what strength or purpose is there in an argument by an analogy of which I could prove that Thomas Paine derived all his theology from the Bible. And as regards the argument for the Buddhistic origin of Christianity, an exactly similar treatment would prove that you also derive your creed from that book which you hate. Jehovah distinctly expresses his abomination of the gods of Egypt, commands the Israelites not to worship them, and it is to some extent part of the design of the miracles of Moses to prove the superiority of Jehovah over the gods and idols of Egypt. The Israelites, ever ready to disobey his commands and worship the Egyptian gods, suffered many judgments on account of these idolatrous passions and practices, and yet, according to you, sir, they derived their idea of Jehovah from these very idols and gods, conceived a character opposite to their thoughts, made him issue commands contrary to their desires and natures, and taught their children to look upon their breaking these commands as a shame and lasting disgrace on themselves, etc., etc., and your argument is sound reason, while a belief in Christianity is either hypocrisy or credulousness.—[To be continued.]

Is not Comstock the Man—of Truth?

COMSTOCK DEFENDED AND THE VAIN ATTEMPT OF THE NEW YORK "HERALD," DAILY "TRUTH," AND OTHERS TO TARNISH HIS CHARACTER REBUKED BY A WESTERN FRIEND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 10th, I find the following, quoted from the New York Herald:

In an interview published yesterday Mr. Anthony Comstock, agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, is thus quoted:

"Why, sir, in one school up town I found in the possession of fifteen boys pictures and books that I would blush to show you. In another school I found a number of girls, from ten to fifteen years old, whose minds had been debauched by these obscene books and pictures. And when I find such things I go to their fathers and tell them about it, but even they refuse to believe it until I show them the very books and pictures I hav taken out of their childrea's hands. And when I make charges against these men I cannot take the young boys and girls out of the schools and put them on the witness stand. No; I take their place and appear as the complainant."

Upon the same subject the daily Truth is quoted as follows:

A few days ago Anthony Comstock stated, in conversation with a Truth reporter, that he had found in the hands of many school children books of the most obscene nature. He even went as far as to say that he had taken some of these books away, and had shown them to the children's parents. These statements, appearing in Truth, aroused a veritable sensation, and since the commencement of the week the matter has been vehemently discussed by the daily papers.

Then follows several interviews with Mr. Jasper, Jr., Superintendent of public schools, in which he joins with the papers to discredit Comstock's statements and proves him to be a liar in claiming that obscene pictures and literature circulate among certain young people.

I believe this attempt to discredit Comstock does him a cruel wrong that should be corrected in the public mind by a fair statement of facts and circumstances which go to prove that this attempt is not well founded, and as no one else has come to the front to defend him I will feebly try to do so in my own crude way, typical of that generous hospitality and friendship, void of dissimulation and hypocrisy, which is so characteristic of Western home life.

In the first place, Comstock is the immaculate conception of the Young Men's Christian Association, the blazing star of Protestant Jesuitic conspiracy against liberty of thought and speech and press; the agent at four thousand dollars a year, with a smart chance for twice as much more in blackmail, for suppressing "obscene" books and pictures, or peradventure, in squinting at the free sale and circulation of "Nana," or any other alleged "obscene" publication by a wealthy publisher, for a consideration. I do not charge or believe this to be the case with him—only point to it as among the possibilities of any one holding his office. Comstock must make a show for his money. The society that employs him, even with the pure Colgate at its head, would rather somebody else should raise the money to pay the salary and expenses. So Comstock must raise some outside funds. To do this he makes frequent pilgrimages to the large towns and cities of the West. He was in Cincinnati and Chicago a few months ago, and it was reported that liberal sums were subscribed for the use of his mission. He takes with him the budget of obscene pictures for exhibition and use (as he does when he goes before a committee of Congress). He calls special public and private meetings, at the latter only the invited come, and he knows how to pick out the right ones. He tells his horrid story of how the youth of pious parents, and especially students of female seminaries are being corrupted by having sent to them through the mails such obscene pictures and reading as he represents and has in stock. He tells how it is supposed to be done. Some scoundrel by some means gets a catalog list of the female seminary students, or the names of the children of wealthy pious people, and then sends along the vile stuff to their address. Then when Comstock comes along and calls his meetings the parents of the victims of infamous practice and others are sure to attend, and when Comstock portrays the impending ruin to the children by the receipt of such vile literature, and impresses the importance of shelling out the contents of their bocket-books to help him suppress the stuff, they are pretty sure to come down handsomely enough to keep him in the field.

Now begins to loom up several important queries as to who sends this obscene matter, and for what purpose. Let us consider the matter in the light of reason, facts, and motivs. First, the publication and sale of vile pictures and reading matter is unlawful, and hence such matter with limited and clandestin sale has to be sold at high figures to make it pay the cost, and is not published, with all the risks, to be given away in the manner Comstock represents it to be, and sent broadcast to students and female seminaries and schools, and to others. Not much.

Second, It is not at all reasonable that the publishers of obscene pictures and reading procure the catalogs of Christian female seminaries to send their matter free to, especially to those seminaries where, if the teachings of Christianity are of one-half the beneficial influence claimed, the publishers would be the most likely to be promptly exposed. They must tell where more of the stuff can be got, and thus expose their nefarious trade and place of business, for the giving away a few copies to create a greater demand would be of no avail unless they told where more could be had, and thus deliberately and designedly invite Mr. Comstock or some one else to prosecute them.

The act of sending this kind of matter in the manner it is sent does not look like the work of those who hav such stuff for sale, and hav to hunt their customers on the sly. Even the American Bible Society never sends out or givs away any of its publications unless a fund is raised for that purpose, and other publishers act from the same standpoint of interest to make the business pay. This is business from a business standpoint.

Then the important question is, Who is the party or parties that sling obscene matter over the country through the mails as a free gift, and especially in places where it would most likely not be wanted, like a female seminary, or to the children of "first class" pious families, the very places that would most likely arouse alike both public and private indignation of a most influential character? It does not look like the work of the publishers of such matter, for their interest would be to avoid publicity while they operated in quiet, secret ways, and through clandestin agencies to work their stuff off. In fact, this is the very way Comstock reports them as operating "on the sly," mostly.

Now can anybody assure the public that Comstock is not the "broth of a boy" that does this free circulation of obscene literature, or by his pals, to help work up his meetings and booms, and his salary for suppressing obscene things? Is not this the very thing, this stuff going to such places, that causes parents to plank down the cash to pay Comstock's salary, and keep him in the "obscene" business, while he uses his powers through a corrupt court to persecute men solely for their opinions as Infidels, in the name of his "obscenity" mission?

Can anybody show that anybody else has any equal motiv or interest in circulating such stuff as a free gift to the youth of the country? And is not this the very lever power by which Comstock livs and raises his salary? Does any one else secure any benefit in any way by the free circulation of this vile stuff?

I think Mr. John Jasper, Jr., the Superintendent of Public Schools, and the daily press are all mistaken in trying to show that Mr. Comstock did not find vile literature with certain youth. Perhaps, as stated, he has no authority to enter a school and search the scholars and take the matter from them there; but suppose he had sent it to certain ones whom he knew, and should accost them on their way home from school, or in other places, and find the stuff with them, would not his statement remain true and Mr. Jasper and the papers be in the wrong? Of course they would. Hence I defend Mr. Comstock against the attempt to discredit his word in the matter referred to. Those jealous of him, or envious of his exalted, pure life, and Christian example, or his bitter enemies, might say that any man who, like Comstock, would go to a New York Greene street bagnio and hire prostitutes to strip naked and dance and posture before his ravishing eye for more than an hour to gratify his peculiar and refined taste, while he was enjoying his $4,000 salary for "suppressing obscene" exhibits, would be just the man to falsely claim that he had snatched obscene books and pictures from schoolboys and girls.

Some vicious-minded people might claim that Comstock would be just the man to make these charges and travel over the country exhibiting his stock of obscene pictures to confiding parents of pious youths (who had mysteriously got a picture through the mails) in order to hoodwink the said confiding parents into hunting for their bottom dollar to shove into the fund from which he drew his salary and expenses.

When Comstock's pal and right bower in the suppression of obscene pictures goes to a photographer and tries to hire him to take pictures of nude females, offering to furnish the subjects for the pictures, there are some people vile enough perhaps who might suggest that the stock of obscene pictures to send free over the country was getting short. But these things would only show that there were jealous, or envious, or bad people yet in the world, or that Mr. Comstock has made enemies in the duties of his office. It will not do for Mr. John Jasper, Jr., Superintendent of Public Schools, nor the daily press of New York to impugn the character of Mr. Comstock for truth unless they can offer something better than they hav yet done. They seem to forget that he is the agent of Colgate's anti-vice society and the pet of the Y. M. C. A., and that those parties would not employ an improper agent to punish and suppress Freethought and "Infidelity" by using the "obscenity" dodge through a corrupt judiciary. Such things can't possibly be and right and justice endure.

All this effort of Mr. Jasper, Jr., and the Herald and other daily papers, to discredit the agent of the Y. M. C. A.—on a $4,000 salary to suppress vice—undoubtedly comes from their forgetting who Mr. Comstock is—that he is an improvement on David of old, who was "a man after God's own heart." If you will read in holy writ, second Samuel, chapter vi, you will find that old David performed a grand old bare-back dance before the Lord to such a disgusting point that even the concubines of his harem severely chided the king of Israel for "shamelessly uncovering himself in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants." But David told them to mind their own business, for he would even be more vile than that. It is very probable that the king of Israel—servant of God, and the "man after God's own heart"—was slightly drunk at the time. But not so with the agent of the Y. M. C. A.; he did not strip and dance before the prostitutes to be rebuked by them for "obscenity," but he went, like a little man, and hired them to strip and dance before him—his royal highness, the agent of Colgate's Society and the Y. M. C. A. This surely indicates a great improvement on David of old, and shows that Comstock, the agent, etc., must be purer and more refined, and more "a man after God's own heart" than old David, the king of Israel, was. Such a man ought to be free from the sinister attack of Mr. Jasper, jr., and the New York Herald and Truth and other papers unless they can show something more inconsistent with Mr. Comstock's acts, motivs, interests, or character.

The poet says:

"But we are all men,
In our own natures frail; and capable
Of our flesh, few are angels."

Yet in all ages of the world nature has produced here and there what seems to be exceptions to the general rule, brilliant meteors shooting across the dim vista of thought with horoscopes that left indelible lines in the destinies of nations and peoples, Socrates, Aristotle, Plato, Lycurgus, Pythagoras, Apollonius, and so this age has produced a Comstock, agent for the Society for Suppressing Vice, including obscene pictures, Infidelity, and all kinds of heresy in theological dogmas.

"His life so gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, this is a man!

Shakspere, with only one amendment, had a further just appreciation or vision of him, in Romeo and Juliet:

"He bears him like a pretty gentleman.
And to say the truth, the Y. M. C. A. brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-governed youth.
. . . . . .
He was not born to shame;
Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit,
For 'tis a throne where honor may be crown'd.
. . . . . .
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so.
. . . . . .
Take him for all in all,
We shall not look upon his like again."

Comstock will outliv this last concerted onslaught by the Herald, Truth, and Jasper, on his character, for

"Chaste as the icicle
That's curdled by the frost of purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple."

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again," you bet, and the glorious work of suppressing Infidelity, free thought, a free press, and free speech will go on in the name of suppressing "obscenity." Let the Herald and Jasper & Co. desist in their efforts:

"Gnats are unnoticed wheresoe'er they fly,
But eagles gazed upon by every eye."

In some of his methods the agent may be misunderstood by the present generation; but

"The sweet cordial we receive at last,
Is conscience of our virtuous actions past."

Comstock has been wrongfully interpreted in reviving the exploits of old David king of Israel—his motiv has not been comprehended as part of his mission in suppressing obscenity, while

"Bold in the cause of God he stood
Like templar in the Holy Land;
And never knight of princely blood
In lady's bower more bland."

He stood to witness "obscenity" and inspire him on in the necessity and duty of suppressing it. And has he no other friend who dares to publicly defend him? As Shakspere says:

"Such a house broke!
So noble a master fallen! all gone! and not
One friend to take his fortune by the arm
And go along with him!"

High heaven forbid! and I rely upon your liberality in giving both sides a hearing on all questions to publish in your own columns a friend's defense of one you deem an enemy. Yours for truth and justice, W. S. WOOD.

Attempts to Suppress Dr. Kinget's "Health Journal."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: No. 1 was pronounced by the Young Men's Christian Association as obscene, and the printer, Mr. Bramwell, doing business corner of Canal and Center streets, New York, with whom a contract had been made to set up and print said Journal, being intimidated by the above false representation, and advised by that Association to abandon the contract, rejected the work after detaining the form and manuscript for nearly two weeks, thereby incurring considerable loss to the owner of the Journal.

No. 2 of the Health Journal was presented at the general post-office with the request to the officer in charge of the department, Mr. Blakesley, to register the Journal as second-class mail matter. A copy of the paper was detained for several hours and then returned, Mr. Blakesley informing our messenger that the Journal was rejected as improper or unfit for publication, or words to that effect. We desire to know why we should be persecuted and our business interests injured. Our paper is devoted to popular physiology, to sanitary and social reforms. Its object, on every page manifest, is to elevate and improve the popular mind and stimulate it in the pursuit of lofty and ennobling subjects calculated to improve the morals and better the condition of the people. T. R KINGET, M.D.,

317 East Fourteenth St., N Y.

The Liquor Traffic.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I feel a deep interest in the welfare of the human race. I consider there is no work more noble, more important, that a human being can be engaged in than to try to improve, to elevate, the human race. I consider your paper a powerful weapon against superstition.

I am sorry to say that I fear some of the Liberals are in favor of too much liberty. I think there is not enough pains taken to root out the liquor traffic. We cannot hav any where near a perfect state of civilization as long as the liquor traffic exists. The Liberals must all know as well as I do that anything that causes as much crime and suffering as strong drink should be discouraged and abolished. We cannot say too much against it. I remain yours for the cause of truth and justice, J. A. CHANTLER.

Welland, Ont.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1880.

Letter from the Editor.

MIDDLE OF THE ATLANTIC,
1515 MILES EAST OF NEW YORK,
MONDAY, Aug. 9, 1880.

DEAR FRIENDS AND READERS: This is perhaps a fitting place for me to begin my first letter to you. We have now made half our passage to Liverpool, and I have had a little taste of ocean life. It has not been the most pleasant that could be imagined in the way of weather, it having rained every day so far, and to-day the worst of all. On Saturday night last the sun set rather pleasantly, and a rainbow was plainly visible for half an hour in the eastern horizon, which, according to the old adage, "A rainbow at night gives sailors delight," betokened better weather, but probably all signs fail in wet weather as they do in dry. The wind was not in the right direction, blowing strongly from the northeast, it having been in all the different points of the compass during the day. Previous to this it had mainly been southwest and warm since leaving New York. The northeast wind has continued up to the present time. Yesterday, Sunday, was quite rainy, during the early part especially, and this morning the nor'easter was most decided, and the rain came pouring down in great profusion. It ceased, however, before noon, but the clouds were low and threatening afterward.

We embarked in the rain when we left New York. The friends who accompanied us to the steamer to see us off had a good chance for the damp. They mostly bid us adieu at about 3 P.M., supposing the steamer would soon leave the dock; but as some one on the way from Philadelphia had telegraphed for the steamer to wait, it did so, and it was fully half past four when the iron leviathan was loosed and backed out in the current and began moving down the bay.

We have a goodly number of passengers, nearly two hundred in all; about one-third the number are ladies, twenty are children, and the remainder belong to the coarser part of creation. You must understand, too, that we have some distinguished characters aboard, among them may be named Sir Bache Cunard, Bart., Hon. John A. J. Cresswell (formerly Postmaster-General) and wife, Judge O. C. Pratt, wife, and daughter, of California (the Judge was one of the possible dark horses at Chicago in the Republican convention), W. B. Washburne and wife, Hon. Abram S. Hewitt of New York, Dr. H. F. Biggar of Cleveland, with several other doctors of medicine and doctors of divinity. Conspicuous among the latter are the Rev. Newland Maynard, D.D., F. R. H. S., of St. Paul's Episcopal church in Brooklyn, Rev. H. F. Allen, Rev. J. W. Backus, Rev. H. P. Gurney, Rev. A. H. Vallete, a Jesuit, besides several fledglings in theology who have yet hardly taken the prefix Rev. Among the doctors of medicine are Dr. H. L. Cooke, Dr. H. C. Haven, Dr. C. W. Haddock, Dr. A. F. A. King, etc. Among the jovial passengers is Mr. L. Bravo, Consul at Porto Rico, accompanied by his wife, daughter, and son. A majority of the passengers are Americans, while a goodly proportion are English, the most of whom are returning from a visit to America. There are also a number of Spaniards, with a Frenchman, Italian, and German now and then. Thus it will be seen we have a diversified company, with a due amount of professional talent.

This steamer, the Gallia, is said to be one of the best that traverses the ocean. It is the latest in the Cunard line, has been running some sixteen months, and is now making its fourteenth trip. It can comfortably accommodate over three hundred saloon passengers, and all its appointments are first-class. Its length of hull is 430 feet, the deck 450 feet. The motive power is furnished by three large cylinders fully six feet in diameter, and its engine is 700 horse-power. The screw which propels it weighs fifteen tons. The steering is done by steam, thus saving the heavy labor of four men turning the large pilot's wheel. The capacity of the steamer is 3,080 tons. There are thirty-two seamen, besides the officers, to attend to the sails and do the work of sailors. Including stewards, cooks, waiters, and dining-room men, the entire force of the steamer consists of one hundred and sixty persons; three of these are women, stewardesses, who attend to the wants of the female passengers, looking after their rooms, etc.

The board afforded the passengers is equal to the first-class hotels. We have beef, veal, mutton, chicken, turkey, snipe, reed birds, four or five kinds of fish, oysters, eggs in all styles, with all the fruits and vegetables of the season, including pears, plums, peaches, apples, grapes, blackberries, bananas, etc. They must be kept where it is cool, for they come upon the table every day fresh as anywhere in New York. The milk, also, is sweet and fresh, and is said to be the same all the way over. Waiters are in abundance at the table. The dishes are changed three or four times at dinner—first soup, followed by various courses. Breakfast at 8 A.M., lunch at 1 P.M., dinner at 6 P.M.

The Cunard line must be very wealthy. They have now twenty five steamers in service, including the New York and Boston lines, the Gallia alone costing over a million dollars. The John Bull element is very perceptible among the officers, sailors, waiters, and all. Nearly every one is English, and they appear to discharge their several duties faithfully. No line, probably, is better managed than the Cunard. It has been running steadily for forty years, and it is claimed they have not lost a passenger in that time, so we can naturally feel rather safe, though storms do prevail.

I experienced my installment of the inevitable sea-sickness rather early. We took our first dinner while passing out of New York harbor through the Narrows and past Sandy Hook. When dinner was over we went up on deck and found the steamer, obedient to command of the waves, was already rolling, rising, and falling, etc. Mr. Rawson and myself seated ourselves to take a good view of Jersey and Long Island as they retreated from sight. Several ladies were soon attacked with sea-sickness, and one after another made rapid steps to the ship's side and paid tribute to the vasty deep. Perhaps I am of a sympathetic nature, for it was not long before I felt the premonitory symptoms that I would be compelled to join in the same unpleasant exercise. I struggled to suppress these symptoms, but suppression was out of the question. I too, was compelled to visit the ship's side and over the railing make a heave-offering to Neptune. Having eaten a hearty dinner my offerings were repeated and somewhat profuse. I could not desist till my stomach was completely empty, and still retching continued. I cannot say I hugely enjoyed the sport. But misery loves company, and I therefore was not utterly wretched, for many others were similarly engaged. I rather begrudged Mr. Rawson's equanimity of stomach. His stomach did not rebel, and he felt but very slight sickness. He, however, has crossed the ocean eight times before and is far more used to the tossing of the waves than myself, who never was on the ocean proper before.

I found the recumbent position was best for me. When I descended to our room and took refuge in my berth, I soon became quiet. I continued this on the following day, as the sea still continued rough. I also subjected myself to Dr. Tanner's course of self-denial. I did not go to the table during the day, and, save a roll which Mr. Rawson brought me, I fasted. I still had company. While occupying my berth I could occasionally hear others heaving and retching in a way to awaken my sympathy. But on Friday we were all better, and nearly all were able to go to the table. I had no more sickness until to-day, when the increased disturbance of old ocean brought back the sickness again. I ate but one meal—lunch—and could not retain that; I gave it to the fishes and concluded to go without.

Tuesday 10th. This is the first pleasant day we have had. The sun rose brightly this morning, and has shone pleasantly all day, though the northeast wind still prevails. The passengers have mostly been on deck, though the air has been cool and overcoats rather pleasant. This wind is direct from Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla, and is very different from the oppressively warm air of New York and vicinity. The change is marked.

The passengers resort to various expedients to while away the time. Many read, more converse and walk the deck, while numerous games are resorted to by others. Among the games are cards, chess, checkers, dominoes, with the more active games of quoits, shuffle-board, etc. When a vessel or steamer heaves in sight (which is rather seldom) all hands are occupied in seeing as much of it as possible. Those who have glasses use them to discover the name of the stranger, if visible. When within two miles or so signal flags are raised by each vessel, designating the nationality. On some days we have seen but a single vessel during the entire day; to-day we had three sailing vessels and a steamer all in sight at one time. One passed within a mile of us—a French schooner. I almost wonder that, on this vast highway between nations over which so many constantly pass, we do not meet ships and other vessels more frequently. It would seem that one, at least, should be in sight nearly all the time; but the highway is so vast, and there are so many chances for vessels just beyond the reach of our vision, that it is perhaps not strange that we see so few of them. From the deck we can probably see the water fifteen to twenty miles all around us. Ships can, of course, be seen at a greater distance—large ones perhaps twenty-five miles away. The most that can be seen are the crested waves unceasingly tossing in every direction. To change the monotony of this we can, as often as we wish, watch a dozen or two of Mother Carey's chickens, a black active bird but little larger than barn swallows, which at nearly all times may be seen in our wake, occasionally picking up crumbs and bits that are thrown from the steamer. These birds are something of a puzzle to me. Here they are, fifteen hundred miles from land, and here they live, constantly on the wing. Where they make their nests, and where and how they lay and hatch their eggs and rear their young, is hard to say. To-day we saw a large, dark bird, like a turkey-buzzard, sailing around near the vessel. Some thought it was a species of gull, which abound in portions of the ocean, and I could not decide to the contrary. They are also ever on the wing Tireless indeed must be their pinions! I have heard it remarked that sharks were seen following us, their fins occasinally rising above the water, but I did not see them. The only fish I have seen were on the table, and those were brought from New York. I have looked several times down into the blue sea as far as possible as we pass along, but have seen no fish. I apprehend they are not plentiful in these deep waters.

Heaving the log is attended to every few hours. This old-time process tells the speed with which we are traveling. The log is a thin wooden quarter-circle of five or six inches radius, loaded with lead on the arc, to cause it to float upright in the water. This log is attached, kite-fashion, by three cords, to the log-line. When the log is thrown overboard it remains stationary in the water, unwinding the log-line from a reel held by one of the sailors. An officer holds a minute-glass and times the log-line as it runs over the stern of the vessel, thus learning the speed of the vessel. Our speed varies from thirteen and a half to sixteen knots, or nautical miles, an hour. To-day a sweepstakes bet was gotten up by several of the passengers as to the number of miles the steamer had made in the twenty-four hours ending at twelve o'clock, noon. Each man "chipped in" half a crown—which is about sixty cents—on the result. A high and low limit is set, and the intervening numbers marked on bits of paper and put into a hat. They are then picked out, one at a time, by one of the party, for each of the persons entering into the sport. The fortunate holder of number 342 drew the sum of twelve dollars, which formed the "pot"—342 being the number of miles the captain announced had been made within the preceding twenty-four hours. Considering the strong head wind, it was very fair speed. Some days when the wind was southwest and the sails were set we made three hundred and sixty miles in twenty-four hours. The attraction of risking half a crown was not sufficient to induce me to embark in that species of lottery gambling. It, however, served to amuse the young sports, who are constantly seeking something to enliven the tedium of the passage.

One thing is very observable, and that is that our watches all fall behind every day, however well-behaved they may have hitherto been. My watch, though low-priced, has been a good time-keeper, but now I have to set it forward twenty-five minutes or more every day, to keep up with the ship's time. This is because we are traveling toward the rising sun, and every day is shortened nearly half an hour. When we return the days will be correspondingly lengthened, and our watches will have to be set back as much as they now require setting forward. If we were traveling due north or south no change would be required. If we did not change our watches, upon arriving in London we would find ourselves more than three hours behind, as that city is more than three thousand miles east of New York. Still the earth will keep up its constant turning for thousands of years to come, as for thousands of years in the past.

On Sunday, at regular church time, we had religious service in the dining-room, which is sixty or eighty feet in length, by the width of the ship the other way. The larger portion of the passengers gathered in, I among the number. The ship's second officer read the regular Episcopal service from the prayer-book, the more devout of the passengers uniting in the responses and in reading the alternate passages. Two chapters in the Bible were also read, and numerous prayers as well. No singing or sermonizing was attempted; but from all that could be discerned, God was just as well satisfied with the effect that was made as though a quarter of a dozen hymns had been sung and a long sermon delivered. He is doubtless less difficult to please than many imagine. If even the Episcopal service had been omitted he would hardly have complained or showed any anger.

Last evening at 8 o'clock the Rev. Newland Maynard interested the passengers by a summary of his lectures on the cathedrals of England, this being the subject of some five or six lectures which he recently gave in Chickering Hall in New York. He is a good speaker and made himself quite interesting in describing the ancient Episcopal edifices with their numerous statues and paintings of the saints, and sketches from church history treasured up in their sacred repositories, and regarded with so much veneration by thousands. At the close of the dominie's lecture a collection was taken up in behalf of the widows and orphans of the sailors and mariners. It was cheering to see greenbacks and gold pieces helping to form the liberal sum thus collected from the audience.

It must be remarked with reference to the Rev. Newland Maynard that he is a very genial, companionable man, and by the zest with which he enters into pitching quoits, playing shuffle-board, and chatting in the most lively manner upon all subjects, he would not be taken as an ultra-pious individual, but as an ordinary man of the world. I'll venture he has but slight faith in the superstitions and flummeries of religion, and believes in making life pleasant and jolly. He has a fat position in life. His congregation is rich; they pay him a good salary, and send him to Europe every year, with an occasional trip to Egypt and Palestine. He manages to find his full share of the pleasures of life, and is evidently no anchorite or whining devotee. So long as it pays him to be religious, and to preach to a fashionable congregation, he will doubtless continue it, but when the pay stops he will stop also. I doubt very much whether he really has much more faith in the huge nonsense than I have.

Wednesday, 11th. I arose this morning in time to see the sun coming up out of the ocean, but the sight was somewhat marred by a cloud which provokingly hovered over the glorious orb, obscuring it for a quarter of an hour. The ocean sunrise has often been described in most glowing terms, and it is quite possible the subject has been slightly overdone, still it is beautiful; but a stiff, cold wind, like that which prevailed this morning and has continued all day, detracts somewhat from the interest that would otherwise be felt. The wind continues steadily from the northeast, but the sun is visible most of the time. The sea is rough to-day, but otherwise it is pleasant. Schools of sharks are reported as having been seen in our vicinity, but I was in the cabin and did not see them. One sail was seen to-day.

Judge Pratt's daughter got wet on the day we sailed, and took a severe cold, which resulted in fever. She was thought to be in considerable danger for a few days, but she is now reported better, though still unable to leave her room. The officers of the steamer report more seasickness on this trip than is usual at this season of the year. I could wish the ocean was calmer, with less rocking and tossing. I am able to say, however, that friend Rawson takes it all very philosophically, putting in a regular appearance at every meal, and yielding very slightly to seasickness. He is evidently resolved to obtain, so far as possible, his money's worth. The company charge us, for carrying and feeding, fifteen dollars a day. He does not wish them to make a fortune on him during this trip alone. I have been more considerate and have several times spared them the expense of a meal. I think, however, it arose more from a condition of the stomach than any good quality of the head or heart.

To-day has been tolerably clear, but windy, rough, and cold. The steamer has tossed more than on any day before; the water of the ocean has many times dashed over the sides and washed the deck pretty thoroughly. Sitting and walking upon the deck has been rather unpleasant. Many have kept their rooms pretty closely and I have been one of the number. In fact, this constant tossing has stirred up my rebellious stomach not a little.

"Life on the ocean wave" has been much sung, and many doubtless have a great fondness for it. It of course has its advantages and uses. It gives one an increased idea of the vastness of our globe and of the body of water which helps to form it; it enlarges one's idea of the grand system of the universe of which this globe is an infinitesimal part; but as far as comfort and enjoyment are concerned, give me terra firma every time. An ocean voyage of moderate length may do very well now and then, for a holiday excursion, but for "steady wear" give me the solid land every time. If the weather is unfavorable, a sea voyage becomes a punishment. I am quite glad for my part that this is not one of the six or eight weeks' voyages that a trip to Europe often necessitated forty years ago. I think I much prefer London, Paris, or New York, or still more perhaps, the rural districts in either country.

Thursday, 12th. The wind abated in the night and old ocean became much milder, and the steamer has much less motion than on yesterday. I was on deck quite early and found it raining, with the atmosphere thick and foggy. The wind soon changed to the south and the air became warmer. The boatswain with his whistle was around ordering the sailors to shift the sails to suit the new wind. Schools of porpoises were seen in considerable numbers, jumping and rolling, looking after their breakfast. They are a clumsy looking fish, from four to six feet in length, and cannot make much more than twelve miles an hour. On the crest of the waves they jump about half their size out of the water, which gives them the appearance of rolling along like a wheel. Gulls were also occasionally seen looking for their morning meal; some of them are light in color. We are now nearing the coast of Ireland and gulls will grow more numerous as we go along. The sun has pierced the clouds and good cheer is visible on the faces of all and a general wish is expressed to reach Queenstown, where many will leave the steamer to make a tour through Ireland, Scotland, etc. We will continue on to Liverpool and take cars for London. The steamer will probably reach Queenstown tomorrow morning and Liverpool on the following night. I will mail this letter at Queenstown so it may take the first mail for New York.

I have become well acquainted with Mr. S. B. Brague, attorney, of New York, and find him a very affable gentleman. He knows many with whom I am acquainted. Himself, wife, and two or three friends are in company. Their staterooms are adjacent to the one occupied by Mr. Rawson and myself. Politics has been something of a topic with us. He has been a Republican, and afterwards affiliated with the Greenbackers, but finding so many of them dishonest and designing, he has rather subsided into a state of indifference. Politics is unquestionably a dirty pool, and one can hardly lave therein without becoming defiled.

I have also become pretty well acquainted with an English druggist who resides near Manchester, who has been over to America to visit a brother who has been residing there over twenty years. It was interesting to compare notes with him as to customs of America and England.

This has been the pleasantest day yet, the sun being out the most of the time. Five ships and steamers have been in sight, some of them tolerably near. We had a beautiful sunset; the sun, golden and rich, gently dropped into the water, and it was most interesting to watch its latest glimmering rays until a mere dot of fire seemed to rest upon the surface of the ocean. A more beautiful sunset I hardly ever saw. But within an hour the sky was completely overcast, and a thick fog set in, which necessitated the frequent use of the fog-horn or whistle. This fogginess is common near the British Isles. It tends to moderate our speed somewhat, as a collision in the fog with another steamer would be a most fearful thing. This fog, then, inevitably holds us back, for we want no repetitions here of the Narragansett affair on a large scale. Oh, no!

It is now 10 P.M. One hundred of us are in the dining hall. It is brilliantly lighted, and the four tables, running lengthwise, are occupied; many writing to friends at home, several reading, and more chatting and drinking fancy liquors. The amount of liquors sold on this steamer on a single trip is decidedly large. Being, however, so impregnable to temptations, I do not indulge. Almost every one save myself has his bottle of wine, ale, or something of the kind at meals, but I have no use for it.

A Spanish couple discoursed some excellent music in the dining hall, she on the piano, he on the violin.

I omitted to mention the testing of the ocean for icebergs. A vessel full of water is drawn up with a rope and tried with a thermometer. If it is below a certain point an iceberg may be known to be within a few miles, for it cools the water for miles around. Fortunately we have been troubled with no icebergs.

Friday, 13th. Land ho! The rocky hills of old Ireland on our left. Before the sun was up this morning several of us were on deck betimes to see the welcome land of Mickeys, Bridgets, and potatoes. It was indeed pleasant after eight or nine days of tossing on the ocean's bosom to set eyes on land once more. The southern coast of Ireland is very broken, rocky, and bare. Not a tree can be seen from the steamer for fifty miles along the coast, but all sterile piles of rocks, interspersed here and there with what look like patches of tillable land, the yellow grain fields being most plainly seen. A few houses are seen, but they look small and inferior. So far, Ireland does not present the green and fertile appearance one would expect from the Emerald Isle. After we pass Queenstown and pass up St. George's channel toward Liverpool, I am told, the Irish coast presents a more lively appearance, but both the Welsh and Irish coasts are rough and wild. Signal stations are on the most elevated positions on the rocks, and our coming has doubtless already been telegraphed to Queenstown, London, and very likely to America to appear in the morning papers in New York, the time being over three hours later there than here. We have not made a remarkably quick trip. The head winds and fogs have conduced to this, and I learn that one of the steam pipes had partially given out. But, all things considered, we have had a satisfactory passage, and the weather this morning is mild and pleasant. Many sails are seen around us, and the sea-gulls abound in great numbers. Flocks of them have followed us thirty miles or more, occasionally diving down to pick up the crumbs and bits of food thrown from the steamer's kitchen. They fly over the after part of the vessel, and sometimes seem not more than fifty feet from it. They seem almost tame and friendly, but their cry or squeak has a wild-goose sound. Some of them are more than three feet from point to point of wings. Most of them are white. How they can be constantly on the wing is quite a mystery.

I have just been taking another view from the deck at the coast as we pass along at a distance of four or five miles, and it improves most decidedly. In looking through a field-glass the farms and farmhouses can be seen in large numbers. The houses are mostly white and look cosy. Hundreds of grainfields are ready for the harvest. But there is still a great absence of forest trees; none are visible. In the interior it is different, and trees are more abundant, as in our own country.

We are rapidly nearing Queenstown, where several of the passengers disembark for a tour through Ireland. As the mail is taken ashore there, I will close this letter in time for its departure. I will let you hear from me from time to time, as we pass along. We will arrive in Liverpool in the night, having doubtless a good view of the Welsh and Irish coasts as we bear northward toward the Irish sea. To-morrow we will whirl along from Liverpool to London, possibly stopping at Stratford-on-Avon to visit the home of Shakspere.

Kindly adieu, D. M. Bennett.

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League.

To the Auxiliaries and Members of the National Liberal League, Greeting:

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held at the West End Opera House, 431 W. Madison st., in the city of Chicago, Ill., on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next. All charter and life members of the National Liberal League, the President and Secretary of each local auxiliary and three delegates from the same are entitled to seats and votes in the Congress, and all annual members of the National League are entitled to seats, but not to votes.

As a President of the United States is to be elected this year, it is important that every one of the now two hundred auxiliaries shall be represented, and that a republic, every citizen of which professes that the state should be independent of the church, and the church of the state, shall no longer stultify itself by subsidizing ecclesiastical corporations in exempting their property from taxation, supporting religious instruction in schools, robbing the people of their time by Sunday laws, paying salaries for religious services, and exacting religious oaths as security for truth and fidelity to civil obligations.

If the National League has any voice, now is the time to hav it heard. The Constitution under which we liv consecrates the rights of speech and opinion and has no punishing power except for accurately-defined and proven crime; and the depositaries of this punishing power, national and state, hav their well-defined provinces and limits as servants of the people and protectors against all personal violence and fanatical persecution. The great question of the day is whether these bulwarks of individual liberty shall be swept away by the greed of power truckling to bigotry and superstition, or the voice and votes of a free and enlightened people shall teach political partisans that the whole is always greater than any part in the administration of our republic.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 9, 1880. Elizur Wright, Pres.

We hope all our friends who can will attend the Hornellsville Convention. H. L. Green, the indefatigable worker for Liberalism, called upon us for a few moments last Monday and informed us that the meeting is going to be a great affair. People from everywhere write to him that they shall attend. Mr. H J. Thomas, from this office, will hav a large stock of our own and other publications for sale there. He will also receive new subscriptions and take the money for renewals if any be offered.

T. L. Brown, M. D, President of the New York State Association of Freethinkers, will speak at Hornellsville on "Knowledge and Belief Contrasted."

Reduced Railroad Rates to the Chicago Liberal League Congress.

Arrangements hav been made for greatly reduced railroad fare from stations on the line of the Erie and Atlantic & Great Western Railroads to persons attending the Liberal League Congress that meets in Chicago, Sept. 17th, 18th, and 19th. Any one desiring information on the subject will please inquire of H. L. Green, Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L., Salamanca, N. Y.

How to Get to the Hornellsville Convention from the East and North.

The nearest and the cheapest way to go to the Hornellsville Convention from north and east of Geneva, N. Y., is to go to Geneva and there take the Syracuse, Geneva & Corning Railroad.

The round trip, from Syracuse, is $6 00; from Geneva, $4.64. H. L. Green.

Miscellaneous.

Our Next President.

[The following somewhat amusing prognostications as to the result of the present political campaign will perhaps be read with interest by some of our readers. How much the planets hav to do with the affairs in our world is perhaps a question upon which there is much doubt. The astrologer, however, in this case is a special friend of ours, and we know that he is positiv that the stars do govern and portend much that relates to the inhabitants of earth. This appeared in the Mercury of the 1st inst.—Ed. T. S ]

On the 17th of March, 1879, there was published in these columns a remarkable series of astrological predictions concerning the future of eminent American politicians. Among those whose horoscopes were "cast" were Senators Blaine and Sherman, ex Governor Tilden and General Grant. The predictions of the astrologist in regard to the position of these gentlemen in the political field in 1880 hav been verified with literal exactness, and in none more fully and completely than in the case of General Grant, whose candidacy and rejection at Chicago were prophesied with minute accuracy. From the same venerable source a Mercury representativ has obtained the verdict of the stars regarding the prospects of the two rival candidates for Presidential honors.

"That which is written in the heavens, which is to man the book of fate, can neither be effaced nor changed. The pen that has impressed on the starry firmament the future of each earthly atom of humanity, is a diamond one, and its writing remains unchanged; for the stars that governed and watched over birth through life, watch over and accompany man to the grave; their watch is ceaseless, and fate's immutable decrees, of which they are but the servants, are carried out inexorably by them." Thus spoke the venerable astrologist, as with compass in hand he prepared to mark the magic circle with its inner series of dissecting lines that formed the outside maserial form of the horoscope of fate. The circle was completed, and then after consulting a slim piece of paper which the reporter handed him, and which contained the name of General James A. Garfield, born 19th of November, 1831, in the early morning, the astrologist inserted the name, together with the date of the nativity, in the middle of the chart, and after consulting a book at his hand, made certain mystic signs which the astrologer said represented signs of the zodiac. In the inner circle, between the bisecting lines, he also drew strange hieroglyphics. Finally, having worked out the problem to his satisfaction, he turned to the reporter and signified that he was ready to be questioned.

"Tell me," said the reporter, "What the heavens say about General Garfield." "General Garfield," the astrologer answered, "in his 'astrological significance,' is a somewhat striking, though uninviting character. His mentality, what there is of it, is perchance a share above mediocrity, but nothing exceptional; there is far more outward show than sterling worth or depth. He has perseverance, and also more than an average amount of human luck. He was born under the sign 'Libra,' which makes Venus his significator astrologically; she was at home in the house of his birth at the time that that took place. Strangely enough, the only two planets above the horizon at the time of his nativity were the moon, the vacillating moon, and Saturn, stubborn as old Nick; all the other stars were already beneath the horizon. Now the peculiarity of this horoscope is that, while being born under the ægis of the moon and Saturn, as it were, insures a certain elevation in the world, their conjunction betokens that that career will never be a pre-eminent one, though at the same time the proximity of the moon and Saturn at the time of his birth, and the fact that they alone watch over and exercise malign or favorable influences over him, indicate that he would rise out of the common rank of those among whom he was born, and the first planet that made mid-heaven proves that whatever popularity, power, or eminence he may obtain would not be lasting, but, on the contrary, would pass away.

"When General Garfield was nominated for President on the 8th of June last, between the hours of one and two in the afternoon, I felt interested and wished to cast his horoscope. I didn't do it then, but will do so now. Anything, therefore, that I may find written therein, will be equally new to me as it is to you."

Again the magic circle was deftly formed, the bisecting lines "run in," the zodiacal signs placed, and hieroglyphic figures scattered over it. Then the astrologist pondered for a while, thinking deeply.

"What do you find?" at length the writer ventured to ask. The sage awoke from his reverie. "I find that at the hour of his nomination the stellar influences were strongly against him. For on casting the figure for the hour of his nomination I find that the stars prognose a powerful opposition. The planets that are opposed to him are much more powerful as they are much more numerous than those that are in his favor, and still from the fact that Saturn, stubborn Saturn, as I hav already called it, is on his side, and, astrologically, is never known to yield with a good will but hold on to the last, I declare that there will be a hard fight made by Garfield. Curiously enough, all who are born under the influence of Saturn; that is, while Saturn is in the ascendant and not in conjunction either in sextil or in square with some other star, are unfortunate. There is a malign astrological influence that haunts their footsteps, and in the end, whatever fortune or favors they may hav enjoyed, their lives at the last are embittered by loss, by misfortune, or by ill health. As for General Garfield, the significance of his horoscope is plain. Astrologically, his friends will go over to his enemies; that is, the signs show that his friends hav found habitation in the homes of his enemies. Mars, the god of war, has already found entrance into the house of his friends, and, all-powerful in its 'dignities,' is rapidly approaching the meridian, while Venus, his governing and guiding star, sinks equally rapidly beneath the western horizon. And, as if this was not enough of bad luck for the Presidential candidate, just at the hour of his nomination, I find that Jupiter was in exact opposition to Venus, his significator at birth, showing that opposition strong and powerful, because coming from unexpected and financially powerful sources, would spring up against him when and where least anticipated. Uranus also, tricky, shifty Uranus, I find here is in the eleventh house, which is the house of his friends, and in close square to Venus, his significator. This denotes treachery even more strongly than anything else. He will be sold out by his friends. That's what it amounts to. Now, observe that the moon, which represents the body politic, is void, leaving Venus weak and helpless. This clearly indicates that the nation has nothing to giv him beyond the barren honor of the nomination. He will not be the elect of the people of this great nation. I only wish I was as sure of heaven as I am that this prognostication will prove correct."

Worn out with exertions, the venerable sage leaned back for a few minutes without speaking. Rousing suddenly, as if recollecting that he had but half accomplished his task, he took from the writer's hand another slip of paper, on which was written the name of General Winfield S. Hancock, born February 15, 1824, with the words, "soon after midnight." The horoscope was cast, and carefully considered. Then the learned doctor spoke sapiently, as follows:

"When General Hancock was born, Mars, his significator, was in Libra; Scorpio, too, was rising to the zenith, while the moon was also nearing the center in the sign Leo. These signify and depict the aspect and character of the man; large of person; in middle life becoming stout and heavy. Characteristically, we hav good-tempered, generous, sound of sense, brave, discriminating, little of a speaker, though capable of writing an epistle replete with common sense. In fine, a representativ man. Observe that here we find the moon and Mars in sextil, denoting that popularity belongs to him after reaching middle life. Mercury and the moon face each other; that is, they are opposit; suggest thoughtfulness, quietness, and decision. Mars and Mercury being in juxtaposition, the fact that the former is apparently trying to out-run the other in the race for the zenith, indicate sharpness, natural acuteness of perception, and logical discrimination, while Mar's position, so near the zenith of the heavens, denotes exaltation, success, and permanent fame. He was born a natural soldier. His path in life was laid out for him long ere he was able to act for himself, and heretofore he has simply been fulfilling his destiny.

"Let us cast his horoscope at the time of his nomination. Remark this wonderful coincidence. Mars, his significator, his watch-dog, favorit star, is again in the ascendant in exactly the same relativ position as it was in the realms of space to a second at the hour of his birth. Astrologically speaking, Mars is what is termed Lord of the Ascendant. It is approaching mid-heavens, denoting extreme power, popularity, and success. Its aspect, too, toward Jupiter. Saturn, and Venus is favorable, while the moon is on the "cusp" of the fourth house. Significant all this of ultimate permanent triumph. Mars, in the ascendant, speeds through mid-heaven, his relativ position to Jupiter and Saturn, which are under the earth, being what is astrologically called in good aspect. Thus the three great planets are in unison, and augur magnificently. This on the one hand; on the other Jupiter and Saturn are just below the crest of the earth. They are rising above the horizon, and will be in it about the same time that Mars reaches mid-heaven. They will be in sextil and square respectivly. Indicativ this of strength and force unconquerable. These are the favorable aspects. What are the unfavorable signs written in this book of fate? I see none. The only malign influence that could be exerted against him is that of Venus. She, however, is in the eighth house, the house of his friends, and therefore is, of course, weak and powerless."

"Let us now cast his horoscope for the date of the election." For the last time the magic circle was deftly drawn and the intricate series of signs and bisecting lines inserted. "When the balloting commences," said the white-haired sage, "Mars, General Hancock's significator, will be in close conjunction with the sun, the most powerful of the planets. Now the sun represents magnitude, acquisitivness, and fame, signifying distinction and power, and in conjunction with Mars is significant of irresistible force, carrying everything before it. Venus, his only malign influence, again has her hands tied, being in square with Uranus, whose power is greater than her own, meaning defeat and disaster to her. On the contrary, Mars, the General's watch-dog, is in benign aspect to Uranus. The reading of the stars is favorable. The General's destiny to reach power and to use it for the good of others is written on the plane of heaven. That destiny he will fulfil. There are no sinister lines drawn across his pathway. Nothing either to corner him into doing that which is wrong or to interfere with or depreciate his influence for good. His elevation is a certainty. There is no misinterpreting the writing in the book of fate. The stars hav said it, and General Hancock will be the President of these United States in the year 1881.

"His future life beyond that period will be one of honor and distinction. There are no malign influences that hav sufficient power to mar his life. It will be serene and useful, and well prolonged."

---

The old saying that lightning does not strike twice in the same place will not always hold good, for on the farm of Alexander Loucks, of York, Penn., is a walnut-tree that has been struck no less than five times during a single season.

---

Gunpowder is one thousand times denser than the atmosphere.

The Gospel Jesus a Myth.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In Mr. Bennett's last reply to Mr. Mair, he says that recently an English writer has asserted his ability to prove that the entire "Annals of Tacitus," containing the reference to Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, were forged by Poggio Bracciolini, a papal secretary, who died in 1459. If Mr. Bennett had looked at the last two pages of "Revelations of Antichrist" he would hav seen that the forgery has been proved. The book is entitled "Tacitus and Bracciolini" (London, 1878). Having procured a copy at considerable cost and given it a careful examination, we hav no doubt at all of the forgery of the "Annals," by Poggio.

A short time before the existence of that scholarly work was known to us we had made the astounding discovery that Paul flourished before the Christian era, and that Simon Kepha, afterward called Peter (which was only a translation of the Syriac word Kepha, meaning "rock)," was contemporary with Paul, and a disciple of a Jesus who was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 B C. (See Sepher Toldoth Jeshu and the Talmud.) Having previously proved that Paul knew no Peter, but that he always referred to his rival apostle as Kepha (Cephas), this completed our demonstration of the non-existence of Jesus Christ or any of his apostles in the reigns of Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, or Nero.

That the story of the crucifixion under Pontius Pilate is a fiction we proved most positivly in various ways. For instance, the testimony of the gospels that Christ was crucified on Friday, the great feast of the Passover, is impeached by the fact, well known to every learned Jew, that no court-session, trial, or execution could possiby take place on that day according to Jewish law and custom; and again by the fact that the first day of the Passover never could fall on Friday, according to established principles of the Jewish calendar. (Wise's Origin of Christianity.)

But again, it is admitted in Mc Clintock & Strong's "Cyclopedia of Religious Literature" that no full moon occurred on a Passover Friday between the years 28 and 33 inclusiv, except in the year 29, when it would be the 18*th of March.* But the 18th of March is too early by several days. The Jewish Passover, says Chamber's Encyclopedia, never occurs before the 26th of March, nor Easter Sunday before the 22d.

We hav endeavored in a book of 446 compact pages to answer every material inquiry into the historical existence of Jesus and his apostles. We hav devoted to the subject years of research and study, with facilities never before afforded, and we never expect to be compensated, except by the satisfaction of having done a good work. For the benefit of students and inquirers we hav made an elaborate and complete index. And now we challenge all the champions of Christianity to refute our demonstrations that the gospel Jesus is a myth.

Antichrist.

True Reform.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: We hav read with a good deal of pleasure many things from the pen of Elmina D. Slenker. She is a prolific as well as a courageous writer, and, in the main, I heartily indorse her conclusions. What she says about this life ending all I consider weak. What she affirms regarding most that is necessary to make the present life true and beautiful appears to me very strong.

Her articles on sexual intemperance though only a restatement of old truths or opinions, is a defiant agitation of a subject that needs complete ventilation.

Comstock and Benedict must be exercised at this brave woman's defiant attitude, and truly if the judge's construction of the law in relation to "Cupid's Yokes" was correct, there will be need of another jury.

It was hoped some other pen than mine would take up this matter and see if it be true that all of Sister Slenker's positions are tenable.

Were I to object, however, it would be difficult where to begin, and were I to commend it it would seem out of place, after a married life of thirty-five years, neither better nor worse, perhaps, than the average class of men, with the usual amount of passions and the usual education or want of education in this direction.

The matter is a delicate one, and Mrs. Slenker handles it in a very practical manner. She upsets, however, all our old religious notions, all the relations of the sexes, and seems to impress us with the idea that while we are purely earthly (beginning and ending all here) we can by a mental and moral process entirely subject, and as it were, blot out the very strongest earthly passional desires of our nature if necessary.

Coming as all this does from a woman who is equally bold and honest in saying all of life we hav is in these very bodies that are the seats of these very desires and passions, it is indeed strange.

What shall be thought of a woman that so outrages our holy religion? Here is a conflict between Bro. Paul and Sister Slenker. He said, "If there be no resurrection let us eat, drink, and be merry for to-morrow we die," of course this merry business included all forms of merriment.

Again he says, "Suffer not a woman to teach. Wives subject yourselvs to your husbands. Let the women keep silent," etc., etc.

Sister Slenker does the very opposit; she speaks right out in church, and she talks to us. She tells how we can be good, and what we must do to be so. It is very evident that she purposes to organize a rebellion in our households, if we don't mend our ways and behave as truly reformed human beings should.

We hav no doubt but that there is a vast army of old men who will think Sister Slenker is just right, and are ready to confess, after the form of the Episcopal formula, that they "hav done those things they ought not to hav done, and left undone those things they ought to hav done." Of course they will seek consolation from the blessed gospel, and say with the beloved Paul, "The things I would do I do not, and the things I would not do, do I."

Then, again, her theory upsets the divine injunction to "multiply and replenish the earth," which, of course, meant that every woman should hav as many children as possible, regardless of the fact of "total depravity," and the danger of endless damnation.

It is plain to be perceived that the author of "Sexual Intemperance," in THE TRUTH SEEKER is a convert to Mr. Preston's notions of "fewer children and better ones," which we are pleased to admit make strong points in defense of his positions, and yet it is hard to hav a woman so iconoclastic in her work as to shatter in a few well-directed blows the habits, customs, and opinions of ages. It is especially hard on the men who hav been imbued with the idea that marriage, viz., "holy matrimony," was a legitimate license to let loose, and very loose, passions that it were dreadfully wicked to gratify in the smallest degree before this legal form was complied with.

There is nothing more sure than the fact that Mrs. Slenker has raised a spirit that will not down at anyone's bidding; no amount of Comstocks or Benedicts can stay the tide of agitation. Mrs. Slenker will find many friends, and a large body of opposers.

Her main positions are doubtless true, some I think are false.

I think she is wrong when she says that the parents are the losers in the relations that beget a child. If this is true it strikes me as an exception to all other departments of our being. Proper exercise of any of the functions of the mind or body develops strength in that part, and by virtue of its relations strengthens all other parts. Use in obedience to law is development. Now if this act can ever be performed in harmony with law, it is not loss, it is gain.

By well authenticated statistical and physiological facts it is proven than married men liv longer than single. Married women quite as long as unmarried women, even in spite of sexual violation, so that Sister Slenker, while she cuts deep and scatters her chips profusely on every hand, may find that the discussion has at least two sides, and that some trenchant pen will enter the contest and do something even for a class of men that in the present state of matters seem without a shadow of justification.

Lockport, Ill., Aug., 1880. GEORGE LYNN.

"Sexual Intemperance."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Mrs. Slenker is a very persistent writer, and some of her communications are readable and instructiv. As long as she kept within proper bounds no one would desire to find fault with her propensity, for on the whole she has been trying to do good. Lately, however, she has commenced to try her hand on a peculiar subject, one which I think a woman of delicacy should let alone, and has given us in THE TRUTH SEEKER several communications on a most nauseous topic, "Sexual Intemperance." Without the least inclination to grumble merely for the sake of doing so, I think Mrs. Slenker ought to hav left experts of the other sex to deal with such a matter. Already numerous books and pamphlets in cheap form hav been published by persons perhaps far better qualified than she to deal with the subject of which she has ventured to treat, and I therefore think that there was not the least necessity for Mrs. Slenker, or anyone else, to befoul the columns of what, in a certain sense, may be called a family paper, by deliberately commenting on a theme which has already brought the blush of shame to the cheeks of some of your readers.

There is unquestionably something very indelicate in a woman volunteering to dabble publicly with this sexual affair. Able and popular as Mrs. Besant, of England, was before she joined Bradlaugh in publishing a pamphlet on "Marriage," and on the "Law of Population," she was subsequently lowered in the estimation of many of her friends, and, no matter what may be said to the contrary, she has never resumed her former status, and probably never will.

I hav lately heard many unfavorable remarks on Mrs. Slenker's recent display of taste and judgment, with which I hav been obliged to concur. I generally giv my copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER to persons who like to read it, but who cannot afford to subscribe, and lately the father of a family of grown up daughters told me that he had to cut out and destroy Mrs. Slenker's communications before leaving the paper for perusal with his children. Without any unkind feeling to her I must condemn her course in writing matter so uncalled-for.

As Mrs. Slenker claims to be a reformer, why in the name of common sense does she use so often the quaint and clumsy "thee" and "thou?" THE TRUTH SEEKER has taken a proper step in advocating an improvement in orthography and in an endeavor to make the English language more clear and simple, and yet it seems strange that Mrs. Slenker, knowing this, should cling to an almost obsolete and rather ungrammatical form of expression, and write "Thee knows." I fully appreciate what Mrs. Slenker has attempted in behalf of the Liberal cause. Only a sense of duty alone urges me to say anything in disparagement of what she has written.

What has become of Mrs. Margaret Chappellsmith? She was by far the ablest and most educated lady correspondent of the Investigator and, I believe, other Liberal papers.

Yours, A. M.

FINELY-POWDERED charcoal, mixed with the food of fowls, makes them fatten more quickly and givs the flesh a better flavor and makes it more tender; and charcoal in lumps should also be placed in chicken-houses.

Lecky on Wesley.

He was a man who had made religion the single aim and object of his life, who was prepared to encounter for it every form of danger, discomfort, and obloquy; who devoted exlcusivly to it an energy of will and a power of intellect that in worldly professions might hav raised him to the highest of honor and wealth. Of his sincerity, of his self-renunciation, of his deep and fervent piety, of his almost boundless activity, there can be no question. Yet with all these qualities he was not an amiable man. He was hard, punctilious, domineering, in a certain sense even selfish.

A short time before he left England, his father, who was then an old and dying man, and who dreaded above all things that the religious fervor which he had spent the greater part of his life in kindling in his parish should dwindle after his death, entreated his son in the most pathetic terms to remove to Epworth, in which case he would probably succeed to the living, and be able to maintain his mother in her old home. Wesley peremptorily refused to leave Oxford, and the reason he assigned was very characteristic: "The question," he said, "is not whether I could do more good to others there than here, but whether I could do more good to myself, seeing wherever I can be most holy myself, there I can most promote holiness in others." "My chief motiv," he wrote, when starting for Georgia, "is the hope of saving my soul. I hope to learn the true sense of the gospel of Christ by preaching it to the heathen" (Tyerman's Wesley, i, 96, 115).

He was at that time a High Churchman of a very narrow type, full of exaggerated notions about church disciplin, extremely anxious to revive obsolete rubrics and determined to force the strictest ritualistic observances upon the rude colonists, for whom of all men they were least adapted. He insisted on adopting baptism by immersion, and refused to baptize a child whose parents objected to that form. He would not permit a non-communicant to become a sponsor; repelled one of the holiest men from the communion table because he was a Dissenter; refused for the same reason to read the burial service over another; made it a special object of his teaching to prevent ladies of his congregation from wearing any gold ornament or any rich dress, and succeeding in inducing Oglethorpe to issue an order forbidding any colonist from throwing a line, or firing a gun on Sunday.

His sermons were all satires on particular persons. He insisted upon weekly communions, desired to rebaptize Dissenters who abandoned their Nonconformity, and exercised his pastoral duties in such a manner that he was accused of meddling in every quarrel and prying into every family. As might hav been expected, he soon became extremely unpopular in the colony, and a disgraceful episode terminated his stay.

A connection, which was at first purely religious, between himself and a young lady of his congregation, gradually led to feelings of a different order. Considerable approaches—according to the lady's account they amounted to a distinct proposal—were made toward a marriage, but before finally deciding he thought it necessary to consult the authorities of the Moravian church, who ordered him to proceed no further in the matter, and whose judgment he accepted as the command of God. The lady soon after married a Mr. Wilkinson—"a person," Wesley very bitterly complained, "not remarkable for handsomeness, neither for greatness, neither for wit or knowledge or sense, and least of all, for religion." Wesley continued, in spite of her husband's express command, his pastoral attentions to her, forced himself repeatedly into her presence, and ended by expelling her from the communion.

It was said among his followers that the lady had made the first overtures to Wesley, and had feigned a greater devotion than was real to her in order to attract him; but the only specific charge alleged against her was that she had not communicated more than three times in three months, and had not intimated her intention to the clergyman before coming to the sacred table. Her husband was naturally and greatly incensed at the stigma thus publicly inflicted on his wife, and he brought an action against Wesley for defaming her character.

It is not surprising that the worst construction should hav been put upon the motivs of a clergyman who acted in such a manner. The grand jury were divided in their opinions, but the majority pronounced his conduct wholly unjustifiable, and took the opportunity of censuring the ritualistic innovations and severities which he had introduced. A trial was impending, but owing to different causes, and in spite of the ardent desire of Wesley, it was repeatedly and almost indefinitly postponed. In the mean time, popular feeling ran violently against him. His position had become intolerable, and his usefulness was almost destroyed. Under these circumstances Wesley, by the advice of his friends, fled from Georgia, and arrived in England on February 1, 1737-8.

The above is copied from Vol. II, pages 602-5 of Lecky's last work, "England in the Eighteenth Century." The account is not very flattering to the great founder of Methodism. But it must be remembered that all this time John Wesley was "in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity," and in the subsequent pages Mr. Lecky givs an account of the preacher's conversion to Christ through the instrumentality of a Moravian priest, which took place on the 24th of May following. Therefore all the wicked conduct of John Wesley as a son, a preacher, a lover, a mischief-maker, and a skedaddler must be charged to the account of the Old Scratch. ANTICHRIST.

A Liberal Offer.

I hav promised our friend Bennett to dispose of one thousand copies of my debate with the Rev. Dr. Ditzler. I will agree to make a present of one copy to every person who orders two copies. I want the work to hav a wide circulation among Christians if possible, and care nothing abo ut profit in its sale. Inclose one dollar for two books, and I will send the third free. Address 172 Clark street, Chicago, Illinois. W. F. JAMIESON.

Camp-Meeting.

The first annual camp-meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists will be held at the Lansing Central Fair Grounds from August 20 to 30, 1880. The Executiv Board hav secured the best talent in the country to address the people during this meeting. The following noted speakers are expected to be present: Giles B. Stebbins, Detroit, Michigan; Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, South Haven, Michigan; J. H. Burnham, Saginaw City, Michigan; James Hay Applebee, Chicago, Illinois; A. B. French, Clyde, Ohio; Charles A. Andrus, Flushing, Michigan; M. Babcock, St. Johns, Michigan; Dr. A. B. Spinney, Detroit, Michigan; also the world-renowned medium, Henry Slade, who has just returned from Europe, has been engaged, and will be present during the entire meeting. Other noted mediums hav been invited, and are expected to be present.

A large and magnificent tent will be erected, which will be devoted to seances during the intermission from speaking. A dancing pavilion will be provided, and dancing, with good music, and other amusements, will be in order from four o'clock each afternoon, and specified evenings during the week.

Dr. Slade will also be accompanied by his niece, Miss Agnes L. Slade, who will take part in the exercises as an independent singer. Dr. C. H. Dunning, of Marcellus, and others, are also engaged as singers.

Excursion trains will be run on the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railroad, both from the East and West, giving ample time to hear the speaking and attend the seances.

Ample accomodations hav been provided on the ground for those wishing to tent free of charge. There will be a first-class restaurant on the ground, where persons can procure good board, also lodgings, and hay and grain for horses, all at reasonable rates. Reduced hotel rates at Everett and Revere House. Reduced railroad rates two cents per mile each way on the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railroad from August 19th to 31st; also reduced rates two cents per mile on the Michigan Central, and Detroit, Lansing, and Northern Railroad.

Committee on Reception: Dr. A. W. Edson, A. E. Nugent, Mrs. G. Merrill, Mrs. S. P. Buck, Mrs. J. M. Potter.

Committee on Grounds and Tents: J. M. Potter.

Committee on Transportation, Renting Privileges, Music, and Dancing: S. P. Buck.

Committee of Arrangements and Corresponding Committee, the Executiv Board: A. B. Spinney, M.D., Detroit, Michigan; B. F. Stamm, Detroit, Michigan; Hon. J. H. White, Port Huron, Michigan.

L. S. BURDICK, President,
Kalamazoo, Michigan.

MISS J. R. LANE, Secretary, Detroit, Michigan.

Book Notices.

I hav just read Remsburg's "Life of Paine, and the Testimonials as to his Character and Good Works." It is well written and very interesting. It is printed on good paper and in clear type. It is a good digest of former biographies of this great man, and is made doubly interesting by testimonials from the writings of one hundred men and women of honorable merit and distinction. This portion of the work is alone worth the price of the little book. To read the tributes of all these writers (men and women, many of whose names are as household words to us) is a treat we rarely hav given to us in so compact and excellent form. I truly hope Liberals will be liberal in their orders for this new book, which is published by the proprietor of the good old Boston Investigator, and beneath the roof of the Paine Memorial Building, a fitting birthplace for the volume. Address, J. P. Mendum, Paine Memorial Building, Appleton street, Boston, Mass. Price 50 cents.

I hav just read M. Babcock's unique little pamphlet, "Why Don't God Kill the Devil?" It is a literary gem "of purest ray serene." The delineation of the startling and impressiv form and features of his Satanic Majesty on the cover is certainly the work of a true artist who was in love with his labor. He must hav recognized how impossible it would be for any intelligent person in this day and age to believe in the real bona fide existence of such a monster. The picture itself is worth, as a devil-destroyer, a whole pile of anti-devil sermons. It speaks to mind, reason, and fancy all at once. The pen-pictures of the "bad man" and his sayings and doings are as sharp-cut and effectiv as the penciled sketch of his outward appearance. There is wit, human, and stirling good sense all through it, and it sweeps away both gods and devils as bad, wicked, demoralizing myths. I should not be at all surprised if "the honorable School Board of St. Johns" should some day raise a monument in honor of the brave, fearless, and good man who is so earnestly and persistently endeavoring to put down obscene and satanic literature as school books for the young. I hope Liberals everywhere will encourage him in his noble work by sending in twenty-five cents each to D. M. Bennett for this splendid specimen of human wit and wisdom. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va.

THE Falls of Tequendama, the single outlet of the waters of the table land of Bogota, are six hundred feet high, and leap down from the temperate zone to the torrid, from rich crops of wheat to a few scattered palms.

Letters from Friends.

SANDUSKY, ILL., Aug. 9, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav distributed TRUTH SEEKERS as much as I could, also "Truth Seeker Tracts," and hav done all I could by lectures and debates to destroy superstition and build up Liberalism, and I think Liberal thought is on the rise, though it is slow. Three years ago I commenced the war with superstition by lecturing on phrenology and physiology, and the leaders of Christianity, knowing I was a skeptic, watched me closely; and as soon as they saw their superstition was in danger, they kicked up and spread out a large quantity of lies, and succeeded in stopping our meetings. Since then I hav lectured at intervals to small gatherings. I think if some Liberal speaker would come here now, besides myself, we could hav a revival of Liberalism. One outspoken Frethinker can do but little against so many preachers, unless they could be got into debate, which I can't get them to do. Last winter a school teacher debated a few times with me and got mad and quit. He did my cause more good than his own.

Let Liberalism organize somewhat like the M. E. church, send out its missionaries, and it would soon clear up this country. If one man comes out openly to advocate Freethought in his community, others see how he is treated and therefore keep still.

I hope Liberals will become more united in pushing forward science; and politically let us hav our candidates in the field; it will show our strength more than anything else.

L. MCDANIEL.

---

BUNKER HILL, ILL., Aug. 9, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find $1 00 as a contribution to the Brussels trip, which I hope will do good to Mr. Bennett and the Liberal cause.

Friendly yours, HENRY GILDEMEISTER.

---

NORWICH, ENG., July 29, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Yesterday, after "doing" the city of London ten days, my wife and self came to Norwich. This is a great old city, 150 miles from London, situated near the sea in a southwest quarter of the realm. Just before leaving London we received, through the thoughtful kindness of Mr. Bennett—and all unexpected to me—a copy each of the two issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER since we left, and to-day also a kind, cheerful letter from Mr. Bennett, mailed at New York on the 17th inst., and forwarded to us here from London. Mr. Bennett informs us in the letter that he had mailed two fresh copies of the paper, and very appropriately remarks that he thought I might be glad to see the wicked sheet when so far away from home sweet home; and I assure you that Mr. Bennett guessed exactly right The English papers hav very little American news, and the two TRUTH SEEKERS, and a copy of the New York Tribune, "all about Garfield," kindly given by Prof. L. N. Fowler, of London, is about all I hav seen from "ome." Mr. Bennett says he will be detained till the 28th or 31st inst., in waiting for Prof. Rawson, before embarking for these shores and Brussels. His kind, thoughtful words to me are cheerful and pleasant. We find religious Liberals here, and also many republicans politically.

Fraternally, DR. T. S. ANDREWS.

---

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 15, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Since the nominations for the Presidency the letters and articles, both editorial and otherwise, hav been numerous, very numerous, too numerous to mention, and the opinions and advice on "the true policy for Liberals" are almost as numerous, and more to come. I can imagin what a trying time this is to our venerable friend and co-worker the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, who always does his level best to please his patrons and the Liberal public, and desires to giv every one a chance to be heard that has got anything to say and knows how to say it. But as this question is of almost, if not quite, vital importance, not only to the Liberal element of society, but to the toiling millions of this highly-favored land, our genial editor must possess his soul in patience and get through the ordeal in the easiest way his wise head can suggest, but giv us all the opinions coming from known Liberals that you can between now and November next. And now permit me to put in an oar by submitting to your readers what I consider an important fact or two, which to my mind has a direct bearing on this, what at present appears to be a much vexed question. First I would state that with all due deference to the opinions of our chiefs, Wakeman, Leland, Bennett, and others, I cannot agree with them in this matter, for the stern matter of facts, both political and social, forbid me. I think it is a well established "fact" that ignorance is the father and mother of superstition, which is inseparable from religious worship of some form or other. And where do we find the most "ignorance?" Not amongst the rich or well-to do, as a rule; no, no, but among the toiling poor, where it is a continued fight to keep the gaunt wolf of hunger from the door. Now this being the case, for I presume it will hardly be questioned, what is the first and most essential work to be done before we can reasonably expect Liberal ideas to grow and permeate the minds of this class? To me there only comes one answer, and that is, banish the "wolf" from the door, relieve them of poverty and distress, make their homes cheerful and comfortable, and this, with a large majority, will produce studious and thoughtful habits, which in turn will expand and develop their minds and lead to that culture and refinement which is absolutely necessary before the most attractiv forms of Liberal thought can take root and grow there. But by whom and how is all this to be done? I think I hear some one say. I answer, "Themselvs; for they alone can do it." But they must be told "how," for at present they, politically, seem to be in a state of helpless ignorance, and I claim that it is the bounden duty of every Liberal, humanitarian, and philanthropist to not only by example show them what to do, but giv line upon line, and precept upon precept, until they can plainly see that their only salvation is in the total annihilation of the old political parties; and this can only be done by an entire separation from them, and the sooner it is done the sooner will we abolish that class legislation which has brought about that unequal distribution of the wealth of the country that is making the rich richer and the poor poorer. But suppose for this or that reason we keep on voting for one or the other of these parties who are now struggling for office and pelf, what will be the result? Why it is simply this, that you vote to keep in power those who for the last twelve or fifteen years hav never shown the least sympathy with either Liberal or labor reform ideas; and in my estimation there is nothing too mean or despicable for either party to do, in the way of legislation, if only the bid is high enough.

I honestly think that if the Democratic party were put in power to-morrow they would be just as much at the beck and call of the church and the banks as the Republicans ever hav been and are to-day. And this is the party that our chiefs ask us to put in power. I tell you it can't and should not be done, because you will be only jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. It has been argued, editorially, that we must (or should try to) put one unpatriotic and corrupt party (the Republican) out of, only to put another in.

I hope that I hav shown it sufficiently clear that if we, the toilers of these great United States, follow out this advice we shall be simply asking them to draw the chains that they hav helped to forge upon us tighter still. So Messrs. Bennett, Wakeman, and Leland, I shall be compelled to take sides with Messrs. Verity, Morrison, Semmendinger, LaFetra, and others, who believe that the Greenback-Labor party is the only party who are disposed to grapple with the financial and labor reforms, which, in my estimation, are the prime issues of the hour. Let us be successful in these, and the rest is easy.

In conclusion, I must tell all Liberals and reformers, both financially and otherwise, that you cannot consistently vote for either of the old parties. Their mission is ended; now they are only playing the role of the barnacles on a ship, and they should be swept off and sunk in the sea of oblivion as far as this generation is concerned, and the party with the new ideas, new issues, and humanitarian principles put in their places. This is the only party that we can expect to establish that justice and equality which is so essential to the growth of Liberalism.

I am yours for the Greenback platform and the success of its nominee in November next, JOHN WARR,

Sec. Paterson L. L.

---

CINCINNATI, OHIO, August 17, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: No man knows better than T. Winter that politics cost money, but it should be remembered that all political parties were once young and weak both in numbers and cash, and they had to begin somewhere, or they could not exist to-day. They rolled their little political ball with energy, and it gathered strength. So also could we, as Liberals, become strong and push our way to the front. The chief requirement is union; that alone is strength; and if all Liberals would firmly unite in one solid phalanx, their numbers, their free principles, and honest intentions, together with some cash, would develop something that would surprise themselvs and startle the old corruptionists If the Liberal party never set up their own banner, they will ever be a tail to another man's kite.

Let us hav a Freethinker's kite, and fly it high, disregarding the laugh. If it be, as some say, that the Liberal party is a very small party, destitute of either money or pluck, it would be a poor help to any party. I believe otherwise. The Liberal party in this big nation is numerous, and, if put to the test, it would display itself in a most formidable manner. Giv it a trial. T. WINTER.

---

FERNDALE, CAL., July 29 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: In your paper of the 17th inst. is an article from the pen of our worthy friend D. M. Bennett, on politics for Liberals, and another on the same subject from R. G. Ingersoll, and, feeling a deep interest in the matter, I take the liberty to giv my views in regard to the matter, which differ from both the above named gentlemen. I believe the time has come to reform the financial affairs of our country, and that both old parties hav failed to offer the required reform. In short, I believe that James B. Weaver stands a better show for election than either of the other candidates. This state is well organized in the Greenback cause, and will giv Weaver and Chambers a large majority. I see by the papers that the Greenback element is spreading like a tidal wave over our fair land, and that next November will roll up a majority for the Greenback ticket that will surprise the world. The platform of the Greenback party does not conflict with that of the National Liberal League, and the fourteenth plank is the same in substance as one that is in our Liberal League platform. I agree with Bro. Bennett that we want a change. I want no more Republican in mine. I hope you will keep the hornet's nest stirred up. I think that Bro. Ingersoll has got the bull by the tail instead of the horns, on the money question. My opinion may not be worth much, but there are hundreds of abler men than I who entertain the same views.

I suppose that Bro. Bennett is on his way to Europe ere this. We feel a pride in being represented by such a noble champion of Freethought, and hope he will be crowned with the honors he so richly deserves

Respectfully, H. SWEET.

---

FARLEY, IOWA, Aug. 10, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: We often hear Liberal men say, "If the women would only leave off their attendance at church in the same proportion that men do, orthodoxy would die in five years." In connection with the above expression they also manifest a desire that the ladies would cut loose from the fables of the church and embrace the more elevating teachings of Liberalism, of nature, of science. We must remember that women are strong, social beings, that they delight in attending parties, sewing circles, donations, prayer-meetings, festivals, etc. The priest, recognizing this prominent characteristic in the female portion of the human family, has originated these gatherings in the name and for the benefit of the church. We cannot expect our wives, our mothers, sisters, or daughters to break away from these pleasant gatherings, and be content to remain at home, out of society, as it were. If we wish them to cut off their patronage from these church gatherings we must form other pleasant resorts, other places of attraction, other and more pleasant ways of spending Sunday. On the very day and hour that our orthodox neighbors are bending the hypocritical knee to an imaginary God let us, with our families and friends, and a basket well filled with something to refresh the inner man, go into a shady grove by the cool and sparkling brook, and there enjoy the beauties and sweets of nature. Let us by these and other "wicked" ways gradually, but effectually, draw our female friends from under the yoke of the church. I venture to say that by proper effort one-half of the ladies who now habitually attend church could be entirely and forever drawn away from it. Liberals, giv this matter a serious thought. If you can form no larger company than your own family, take them, and make Sunday, away from the church, the pleasantest day of the week. H. G.

---

ADRIAN, MICH., Aug. 16, 1880.

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I noticed in your issue of August 7th a statement that Rev. Ira C. Billman, of Jackson, Mich., had deserted his wife, eloping with another woman. Now as this is false, and you profess to be a truth seeker, you will doubtless be glad to learn the truth in this case, and do Mr. Billman the justice to make the correction as public as the libel.

Mr. Billman has declined to longer liv with his wife, with the approval of his church and all who are acquainted with Mrs. Billman. She went home on a visit to her parents, taking her children, and he sent after her their furniture and a letter refusing to longer liv with her for reasons which she already knew, and agreeing to giv her half his salary, and keep two of their children, she keeping the other two. Mr. Billman has the sympathy of the communities in which he has lived, viz, Toledo, Adrian, and Jackson. Mr. Billman is a Liberal thinker, too much in harmony with your own class for you to desire to traduce him, and I hope in your next issue to see full justice done him. He still continues to preach for his congregation.

A TRUTH SEEKER.

[We would state to our correspondent that we desire to traduce no one. We found the item in the daily papers, and as it is such a common thing for ministers to leave their wives for other women we presumed it was true. If it is not we are glad for humanity's sake.—ED. T. S.]

---

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., Aug. 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: It is amusing, interesting, and instructiv to read the various views of your correspondents upon the subject of your next presidential election. Not two of them agree.

It seems hard for some of them to dissolve partnership with the party they hav served for years past, perhaps for a lifetime, for any consideration whatever. But good and weighty principles both for individual and public good cannot be secured without the sacrifice of other ones which hav served their time out.

Nor will it do to estimate political parties more than a thousand and one other things by what they hav been, but by what they are now. All things are liable to change, if not always for the better, else progress and improvement would be annihilated.

I notice that many of your correspondents who decidedly favor free thought, free speech, free press, and free mails, although having been supporters of the Republican party ever since it has existed, do not hesitate to say that it has become extremely corrupt in its various principles of administrations, no doubt, from its long-continued term of service, even to the detriment of the above-mentioned principles.

I therefore quite agree with you in your views, as also some others, that it would be policy on the part of your party to thoroughly unite in ousting the Republican party, and place the Democratic party in power for the next term, as you evidently are numerous enough to do so. And if they prove an improvement for your party and the country at large, put them in for another term; if no improvement, then set them aside again. Accomplishment in anything requires experiment, and purging proveth beneficial to parties even as unto individuals.

Although not inclined to adopt others' property for my own benefit and use, please allow me for the once to imagine myself an American citizen, and appendix this with a selection from a recent number of the priceless TRUTH SEEKER: "A scratcher on politics," and a first-rate scratcher he is too on that subject.

Having been somewhat familiar with your politics for years past prepares me to adopt his views almost verbatim et literatim. Although you do not require to republish that article, I would advise all who are interested in THE TRUTH SEEKER cause to carefully read it, if not having done so already; and after you hav done so, do, I pray you, unite in one solid phalanx and giv battle to the enemy, for united we stand, divided we fall.

Hoping Mr. Herbold will excuse my boldness, I subscribe myself yours as ever in the interest of truth and progress forever, C. B. THOMPSON.

---

ROCK FALLS, ILL, Aug. 8, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The best, most logical article I hav read in your paper for many months is that in a recent number by R. E LaFetra. I hope every reader of the paper will study it well. If I were in your place I would not on any account vote the Republican ticket, though I hav heretofore voted with that party. But I am unable to see how we can better it by supporting the Democratic ticket. If we vote the last named ticket to keep the Republicans out, without agreeing with the principles of the party, we are strengthening the opposition to our most cherished ideas of reform. A vote is simply giving our opinion of the matters in controversy, saying how we wish matters of the highest importance settled. But if we vote contrary to our own convictions of right the vote is a solemn lie. We cannot hav a true Republican government unless our votes reflect the true will of the people. But to vote against our settled convictions for what we suppose to be the strongest party, is to me the most childish thing a man can do. But please read the article I refer to. I hope he will continue to write.

W. E. LUKENS.

---

SENECA, S. C., Aug. 16, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: The Utica Herald says a singing campaign is proposed by the Republicans this year. Gen. Garfield will hav a good following from the Young Men's Christian Association no doubt, as he is a frequent attendant at their meetings, but you may put it on record that many Republicans in this Piedmont county will vote for Hancock if never again for the Democratic party.

Yours truly, SENECA.

---

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., August 9, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I, too, accept D. M. Bennett's solution of the political problem, and hope all true Liberals will do the same. Anthony Comstock has been President long enough. Whoever votes for Garfield votes to re-elect Anthony. I dislike to vote for either of the old parties, but being more a Liberal than a partisan I shall put my ballot where it will do Liberalism the most good. For the infamous treatment Liberalism has received from a Republican administration let us defeat that party, as a wholesome chastisement. It will do it good.

If any Liberal feels like licking the hand that smites him let him do so, but I believe in giving our smiters another kind of licking entirely.

A party that will violate sacred principles and trample the Constitution into the dust to please the clergy and the Young Men's Christian Association cannot receive my vote any longer.

The Liberals can swing New York and Indiana, and perhaps two or three other states, for either candidate. Let us giv them to Hancock, and break up this church and state betrothal. No clergyman is fitted to be President.

S. R. SHEPHERD.

BALTIMORE, MD, Aug. 13, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I do not see how any Liberal can vote for either of the political parties. You favor the Democratic candidate. It is well known they favor and cater to the Catholic element. Here in Baltimore, where they control city affairs, they hav ignorant Irish police, stop Sunday travel, and vote the people's money to keep up their institutions. The Democratic papers berate Ingersoll when he lectures here; and I would sooner vote for the Christian's devil than for them. On the other hand, the Young Men's Christian Association, God in the Constitution, and Comstockism are upheld by the Republicans, so I hope the Liberal Congress about to meet in Chicago will giv us another candidate for some of us to vote for, even if they should not get one thousand votes. We want no vast amount of money. Giv us the candidate, and let the Liberals in the various localities attend to getting their tickets as we did down South when Lincoln was first run for the Presidency. I was one of three that voted the Lincoln ticket in a Congressional district. I think, as a Liberal, I "know what I am talking about" when I say no Democrat or Republican can hav my vote at present. Co-operating with either party is not my plan; they would scarcely know that a Liberal existed.

Yours respectfully, E. LIVEZEY.

---

JASPER, FLA., August 9, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A word or two in regard to the political situation: From the general tenor of letters and communications published in the Liberal papers, one cannot resist the conviction that Liberals are irreconcilably divided as to the proper course to be pursued in the approaching political campaign—two of our leading men, D. M. Bennett and Col. Ingersoll, advising or prescribing diametrically opposit courses, and so on to the end of the chapter.

Under the circumstances it is not only proper but highly necessary for each and every Liberal to express his sentiments, freely and above-board, in regard to the political situation, that is to say, in regard to what he, individually, thinks ought to be done in order to unite Liberals, and thus enable them to cast their votes in an intelligent and effectiv manner. The only way to do this, in my humble estimation, is to concentrate our forces by casting our votes en masse in favor of candidates nominated by our own party; or else hold ourselvs in reserve, as an independent political organization, ready to co-operate with that party whose candidates shall pledge themselvs, publicly and formally, to carry out the Nine Demands of Liberalism. This requirement should be our ultimatum; and in case the respectiv candidates decline to comply with our reasonable request or requirement, let us adhere to the nominees of the National Political Liberal Convention, soon to assemble at Bismarck Grove, Kan., or such other place as may be designated by the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League.

It is pretty generally conceded, I believe, that a majority of the Liberals hav hitherto voted, and will still vote, the Republican ticket. If so, by voting for our candidates we will withdraw our support from the party in question and virtually co-operate with the Democracy, as we are requested to do by such men as Elizur Wright, D. M. Bennett, T. C. Leland, T. B. Wakeman, H. L Green, and others, whom we hav been accustomed to regard as our leaders, and whose influence with Liberals is confessedly great, and patent even to the mind of the most casual observer.

Brethren, speak out, and proclaim, freely and fearlessly, your innermost thoughts in regard to the question under consideration.

A. J. OLIVER.

---

SOLEBURY, PA., July 10, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Though the word grates rather hard or harshly on my educated Quaker proclivities, hence I would say:

Oh, how hard for human nature
All prejudice to shun,
And never use proscription
As saintly souls hav done.

I fondly hoped in my old age I had found in THE TRUTH SEEKER an open door for all honest souls to express themselvs in their own peculiar way, without having on "the wedding garment" of fashionable speech to please the book-learned literati consensus of the competent, but as my two or three former articles hav not appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I must conclude that the demon of proscription stands guard ensconced behind the portal gate of true democracy that seeks untrammeled expression in your valuable paper. Now here is where true Liberalism is "wounded in the house of its friends."

Respectfully, E. W. ALLEN.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL THE DEVIL?

If God should kill the devil
What would the clergy do?
Their trade would then be gone;
Their bread and butter too.

Their saving plan would be upset,
With all its cunning wit;
And hell without a devil
Would be an empty pit.

Self-righteous saints would mourn,
Their hapless fate bemoan,
To miss the pleasant pleasure
To hear the wicked groan.

Hence we see it would be hard
To spoil their saintly revel,
And that's perhaps the reason why
Their God don't kill the devil.

E. W. A.

---

PRATT, ILL., July 19, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I like your article on the political situation in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 17th. My course has been similar to yours. I had always been a Republican until after the election of Hayes, but now as all the old issues are past, dead, and gone, I do not think that either of the old parties should take credit or blame to obtain office at the present time, as many of the old Democrats now belong to the Republican party, and many of the old Republicans now belong to the Democratic party, so that it would be unjust for either of the parties that now exist to claim all the merit of saving the Union and doing away with slavery. And as there is no difference in the issues in the Democratic and Republican platform, I therefore agree with you that a change would be the means of burying the bloody shirt and putting a stop to this bitter sectional strife. But while I am perfectly willing that you or any one else should vote as you please, I shall vote for Weaver, as I believe there is a principle involved in this matter that must eventually win, or else we will hav a worse slavery among the poor whites than the negro slavery was.

I see by Ingersoll's letter to H. L. Green, that unless Garfield will extend to Ingersoll every right that he asks for himself, he (Ingersoll) will not vote for him; but Ingersoll thinks he will. Now, friend Ingersoll, let us see about this. In what estimation do Christians hold unbelievers? As traitors, rebels against God, fit subjects for an eternal hell; and don't you forget it, that if Garfield should be willing to grant you your rights his party will not allow him to do it. How about Hayes? He knew Bennett was unjustly condemned, and he knew it was his duty to pardon him, but his party would not let him; and so it would be with Garfield when you come to the Liberal element. I believe that you will find five Liberals in the Greenback party to each one in any other party, and for this reason I believe that the Liberal element, if it would join this party, might eventually succeed, and could hav a working majority in the party. Why is it that R. G. Ingersoll, with all his brilliancy, honesty, and good sound judgment, and his great work for the Republican party, can get no office? He is above the seeking of office, and for the very reason the office should seek him, but it never will from that religious Republican party. But if Ingersoll should giv the financial question an investigation, and become convinced that the finance should be run by the government and not delegated to wealthy corporations, I will venture the assertion that in four years more Ingersoll will be President of the United States.

Now I would like to ask G. M. Mair one question: Did he ever know a coin to be counterfeited before its existence? Is not the counterfeit always of later date than the one counterfeited? and if the other religions are more ancient than his, then if any is a counterfeit, must it not be his?

Respectfully, JAMES M. PRATT.

---

RICHLAND, July 25, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I would like to say a word or two upon the question, How should Liberals vote this fall? I find a great diversity of opinion. Some stand by one party and some by another, and some want a new party. I see no need of a new party; we hav one now that is composed of honest men, who earn their bread by honest toil, very many of them Liberals. Spiritualists, and Freethinkers, and many more with no fixed belief, who being too poor to belong to a church of God, hav been left to think and reason for themselvs and are fast becoming the foundation of the future ruling power of this government, and to them we must sooner or later turn for our liberty. They hav declared for the equal taxation of all property; the right of suffrage to all citizens of the United States, and a government of the people, by the people, and for the people; and they hav done this without the influence of an Ingersoll, Wakeman, or any prominent Liberal. Now, what more can we ask at this time? Which of the old parties promis as much?

There is a sufficient number of Liberals and Freethinkers in the United States to make their power felt if they will but act in concert, and since our only danger now lies in the legislation of our country, and our only hope of entire freedom comes from the same source, is it not right and proper that we should take a deep interest in the politics of the country, and is it not for our safety that we should unite as against a common enemy? I am surprised at the position taken by Col. Ingersoll; how any Liberal can vote the Republican ticket I cannot see, much less lend his influence to help forge the chains that are fast binding us down in religious bigotry, superstition, and degradation. What do we care what Gen. Garfield's expressed views may be? It is the party that backs him, the power behind the throne, that we hav to fear—the one from which all our troubles hav arisen. Did not Hayes say that you had committed no wrong, broken no law, and still he had not the courage to do justice, denying the prayer of nearly a quarter million of the people of his government? Would Garfield do more? I can see why some would vote the Democratic ticket, for they hav in nomination one of our country's noblemen, a brave, true man, and one that I had a chance to study, through three years of strife and bloodshed; and there is a hope in the party and a strong presumption of success, and it is a step in the right direction. But, fellow-laborers, of whatsoever name you may be called, the time is near at hand when will be decided what our future status is to be. Is it not folly to be halting. Let the dead past bury its dead. Arise, gird on your armor, and strike for the present and the future, for those to come after us. Let every man and woman look calmly to the issues and then decide for themselvs. There are yet three months to think. The National party is growing every day. It has come to stay, and to that party will we be indebted for our emancipation. Then let us hew to the line, and take such course as will pass the inspection of our consciences in future years. I am truly thankful that you passed so well the time of your martyrdom. Who knows (should we hav another four years of the rule) who will be the next victim? I am glad you do not propose to risk money on our not getting an electoral vote. I am confident you would lose.

Yours for universal liberty, WILLIAM J. LOGAN.

---

NORDHOFF, CAL., Aug. 4, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: Jesus is reported as having said, "He that believeth in me shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." And old Paul, "If any man teach a different doctrin from that I preach, let him be accursed." And then we hav sixty or seventy thousand ministers and priests—not including F. E Abbot—who tell us if we do not accept their interpretation of God's word, they will send us all to a fire and brimstone hell to be eternally punished. Now an unsophisticated wretch like me would naturally suppose that poor humanity was sufficiently environed with difficulties without anything more, but here comes Charles E. Townsend in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 24th, under the heading "Equal Eternity of Mind and Matter and their Characteristics," and promulgates an entire new theory, and very gravely tells us that all who reject his conclusions, need not in future lay any claim to intelligence. Now I do not propose to antagonize Mr. Townsend's theory, but in all humility would like to ask what use he has for a first cause of that which never had a beginning. You see my early education was sadly neglected, and my subsequent opportunities hav been limited, hence my desire for information. Fraternally yours,

FRED ROBINSON.

---

SAVANNAH, GA, Aug. 10, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: We, as a band of brotners organizing Liberal Leagues to resist the encroachments of the church and state power, must harmonize as one man and look at the situation in which we find ourselvs and govern ourselvs accordingly. The work which we hav in hand, and to which some of us are devoting the best energies of our lives, is worthy the candid and unselfish consideration of every Liberal in the world. For a century and more has the republic of North America been the refuge of the oppressed from every land, and the eagle of liberty has spread her wings over the land of the free and the home of the brave, and not until within a year or two has the emissaries of ecclesiasticism endeavored to plant the noxious seeds of sectarianism in the minds of the rising generation. God in the Constitution, Bible in the public schools, espionage of the press, tampering with the mails, ostracism of freemen for opinion's sake, Sunday laws, and many more abuses hav aroused free thought and speech, and freeborn citizens hav been sent to prison for no other reason than the honest publication of their opinions and thoughts upon subjects which most interest humanity—their happiness and destiny.

Now we, the people, by right of power invested in us as free citizens of a republic, knowing no higher tribunal than our collectiv franchise, do rebel and solemnly declare that we will not brook the encroachments of Anthony, and, united as one man, we will vote for the candidate who will pledge himself and party to carry out the reforms necessary to the secularizing all the laws of our land and giving the franchise to every person who is capable and willing to reason. And, furthermore, we are determined that when the dominant power will not giv us these pledges and carry them out we will organize a new political party, and by this means defeat their success, for we are a power in this land.

I should advocate the propriety of all our Liberal Leagues uniting with the Democratic party to destroy our deadliest enemies, the Republican party, and the mother of all abominations, the orthodox church, for the first stole our government, usurped the chief magistracy, and imprisoned our citizens for no crime; and the second has endeavored to set up a mythical ruler over the people, who are guaranteed the right to rule themselvs by making their own laws and bowing down to no higher tribunal than reason and common sense.

The founders of our republic, and the authors of the Declaration of Independence, knew too well what they and we might expect if they left a loophole for superstition to enter, and they closed all the avenues where priestcraft could enter, and lopped off all the limbs on which could grow the parasites of rotten and decaying theology. The Fathers founded a secular government and gave us a liberal Constitution, and the states delegated to the Congress of the United States such power as the people, in their wisdom, saw fit as a check, on the one hand, and a safeguard on the other, against the usurpation of power by ambitious demagogs and an interested and cunning priesthood, who hav ever been the enemies of progress and Liberalism.

J. EDWIN CHURCHILL.

---

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 14, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: I must express my surprise that New York Greenbackers, who talk so unctiously about "principle," and how much better they are than the rest of us, should so foolishly let the cat out of the bag by hinting ever so gleefully that they may succeed in throwing the election into the house. They know they hav no earthly show before the people in the election, but the states being equally divided among both parties in the House, with De La Martyr in possession of the casting vote of Indiana, they hav an indistinct feeling that they might gobble up something handsome in the event of the failure by the people to elect. In other words, they hope that the Indianapolis parson may be so placed as to elect the President for nearly fifty millions of people. Well, that contingency is far off. The people will elect Hancock or Garfield absolutely, and sit down on the Fiatists besides. (See record of Alabama's vote.) But it shows what these reformers and friends of the people are really after—spoils and a grab at the public crib with their brethren of the other parties. Yours,

CHAS. J. HERBOLD.

---

PORTLANDVILLE, N. Y., Aug. 5, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: The monotony of our neighboring towns were somewhat disturbed last week by the presence of Anthony Comstock, who arrested a lady on the charge of a misuse of the mail privileges. In another town a barber was fined twenty dollars for shaving a man on Sunday morning. But the best of all is to be stated in the following:

One of our neighbor farmers while drawing a load of hay to his barn on Saturday was caught in a brisk shower. Sunday morning he backed the wagon load of hay out of the barn and shook up the top of the load in order that it might dry out and keep from damaging. The villain was arrested, and he had the choice of paying a fine or going to the county jail.

In another village a wagon-maker of Liberal views mildly expressed his doubts as to the reality of Christianity while under examination by a clergyman. There was a Christian secret combination formed against him and carried into his business, and he was compelled to leave the town or starve.

I hav been informed by a friend that this is what they propose to do with me. I cannot doubt it, as about three-fourths of the public patronage has been withdrawn from me since they hav learned my peculiar views and Liberal sentiments. They hav been quite willing to accept my gifts for their Christian poor, and now they are quite as willing to snatch the last morsel of bread from my children's mouths to compel their father to hold his tongue or proclaim Christianity. But they will find they hav a hard nut to crack. They may starve me and my children, but I shall never, no, never, hold my tongue nor bow before their superstitious, dogmatic altar. I am at a loss to know which I would prefer, death by the gibbet or by starvation. So far as I am concerned personally, I would care but little for this Christian persecution, but it does rather prick a father's heart when they fasten the penalty upon his helpless children. But such is the Christianity of to-day, and the power of the church in its way. There are some exceptions to this stigma. But remember, my friends, that this is but the leading step. Then may I ask, What shall the last be?

Just let us allow ourselvs to fool a little longer with party politics and Greenbackism, and we shall soon learn that we hav lost something that greenbacks cannot buy.

Truly yours, PETER SOULE.

---

GREEN ISLAND, Aug. 7, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: T. C Leland has expressed my mind exactly with regard to how Liberals should vote in the coming election. Although I hav been a radical Republican ever since the party had an existence, and in fact long before, nevertheless I am willing to sacrifice my preference for party when I see, as I do, that it has done its work of reform, which it was organized to do, and instead of continuing to be the reform party, it becomes the church party, and opposes the Freethinkers with all its power. Whatever the Democrats may do we know not; but can they do worse? I trow not. Their record is much better, so far as it affects our principles, and I, for one, would be glad to giv them a trial. Nevertheless I will vote as the Liberals decide to vote at the convention. I believe it is our only salvation to vote together in a body.

Yours in hope we will not split, HIRAM WILBUR.

A Summer Idyl.

Beneath the green boughs of summer-robed trees
I sit and muse in fitful lyric thought—
See the changing clouds, hear chirpings in the breeze,
Studies of sky and grove by nature taught;
What radiant light is over the land,
Showing so brightly all that God hath made.
Most unseemly creations of his hand,
And the color of the flowers his hands hath laid.
In forest recesses the golden light
Drives away the darkness from den and lair—
Makes the bands of Orion sparkle bright,
And casts its refulgence everywhere.
God is great and good, without sin or guile;
Through infinit ages of grand old time
He has stayed not his golden light the while,
Nor hidden his glory from any clime.
Who hath not thought in soul to meditate
Upon the sky, the rocks, the passing day,
Asking the better faith, willing to wait
Till truth alone shows the more perfect way?
Oh, how long and patient hath been the race
Of man! To-day touched by some new bright hope,
To-morrow onward still with brighter face,
And upward, advancing, with wider scope,
As if the innermost secrets of God
Were yielding up at last the final key
That unlocks the way of the celestial road
To show mortal how the immortal shall be.
Oh, the springing tide upon which this age
Moves out to explore the farthest sea!
Science, siren-voiced for poet and sage,
Pleads sweet necessity, but not decree.
Come, go where the uttermost reach is made,
Thrice beyond the polar star and upward;
Analyze the golden light that ne'er can fade,
But shines as bright as when the Syrian shepherd
Watched his flocks till eve on the sacred hills
Of old Palestine. Oh, the patient stars,
More patient than frail man can be or wills,
Triumphant over time and human wars.
Oh, thought divine, mixed with human sadness,
Sweet melancholy, touched with human joy!
O happy faith, that saves the brain from madness,
That the Infinit One shall ne'er destroy
One human soul he's given life and form
On this beautiful earth! Nature's sweet voices
Speak through all her symbols, in calm and storm,
To the spirit of man. The sea rejoices,
And the rocky coasts echo back the sound,
Far over and under the deepest main.
And the voices of nature go round and round
Till faith and hope grow strong—inspired again—
Inspired with the grand truth that man alone
Is conscious of—that he alone shall liv
Till the uttermost work of God is done.
As long as he endures has power to giv.
And is not his life and power infinit?
And can he not do with man what he will?
Make him his own and immortal, despite
The doubt and evil that hang around him still?
He shall not die and molder all the ages
In the grave with all his grand desires and dreams;
His name a blank in eternity's pages,
All else just and real, he's not what he seems.
Come, go with me into the open air;
Smell the delicious fragrance in the breeze;
See beauty around thee everywhere,
With the richest gifts he hath made to please:
Gather fresh hope as fragrant as the flowers,
And inlay thy soul with fancies sweet:
Make love with nature in her sunny hours,
'Neath the blue sky or in the sylvan retreat;
Wrap about thy soul sweet thoughts as a flame
Of living light; gather in all bright gleams
Of thought of whatsoever hue or name,
And stamp them on thy soul as more than dreams
Of thy fitful life fast passing away.
So act thy part upon the stage of life
It may be said after many a day
Thou wast not a mock hero in the strife.
At last the showy pageantry goes by,
Moves with lightsome speed on the summer hours.
The deepening gray clouds gather in the sky,
And time and frost hav come upon the flowers.
Go, then, to thy silent home in the earth;
Return to its bosom thy borrowed clay;
Find in the quiet grave thy nobler birth—
The coming of night, the breaking of day.
The lapse of years shall for thee not be in vain,
Thy gilded dreams, brighter than sun or gold,
Shall waken in thy soul and liv again,
And light thee on when the ages are told.

—Welcome O. Spencer.

---

THE American Bible Society is an exceedingly lively organization, with no political affiliation. Whether it is for Hancock or for Garfield, as a body, we are not aware, although its political leanings may be surmised from the fact that at its last "stated meeting" report was made that Mr. Rutherford B. Hayes had accepted the post of Vice-President of the society. What will more vividly stir the readers of Truth, however, is the announcement in the annual report of the society, that communications hav been received concerning the reprinting of the Bible in the Bengal language, the cost of colportage in Siberia, and the progress of the translation of the Old Testament into the Zulu language. What on earth the Old Testament should be translated into Zulu for we are at a loss to imagin. How, for instance, would the following "verse" from Genesis look in Zuluese? "And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Ananim, and Lehabaim, and Naphtutium." Can any one blame the irate Zulus for revolting against a system of civilization that imposes on them compositions like that?—Truth.

---

THE great principle and foundation of all virtue and worth is placed in this: that a man is able to deny himself his own desires, cross his own inclinations, and purely follow what his reason directs as best, though the appetite may lean the other way.—Locke.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

---

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

---

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.
"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100.00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.
"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5 00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON, tf32 209 West 34th st., New York.

---

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

---

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.
Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size . . . . | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size . . . . | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK

---

Wanted.

A widow of thirty-two would like to correspond with an educated Liberal-minded gentleman. Address SINCERITY, care of TRUTH SEEKER office. 4t32

---

THE
Anonymous Hypothesis
OF
Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

---

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13'27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

---

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

---

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

---

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE,

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

---

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth street, New York.

---

Correspondence.

A gentleman, "Positivist," desires correspondence with a lady of a genial disposition, having literary, vocal, and instrumental musical accomplishments. Brunet preferred, and object matrimony. Address FAVORITE, 3t34 TRUTH SEEKER office.

---

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

---

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

---

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

---

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON,

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4 50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

---

UPPLYSNINGENS TIDEHVART

(AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT).

A SWEDISH WEEKLY,

Devoted to the culture of Freethought, to the investigation of the religious systems of our times, and to the discussion of religious and social questions in general.

The only Swedish religio-philosophical publication in America.

TERMS PER YEAR . . . . $2.00

Exchange is desired with any other papers in any language.

ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Meeker Co., Minn.

---

For sale, in the Swedish language:

A BETTER RELIGION.

BY FRANZ HERMAN WISTRAND,
Editor of the Truth Teller,
Lake Constance, Buffalo Post-Office, Wright Co., Minnesota.

Published by ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Minn.

---

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.
To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y.
Wansi,

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. Just out. By

COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp, $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo, 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 180 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

TRUTH only smells sweet forever, and illusions, however innocent, are deadly as the casher-worm.—Froude.

There livs more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds.
—Tennyson.

INVESTIGATION frequently leads to doubt, where there was none before. So much the better. If the thing is not true, inquiry can do no possible harm.

TRUTH at the bottom of her well is of about as much use as water there, and is of very little use without some appliances to bring it to the lips of the thirsty.—Henry Rogers.

THE number of those who believe in a system already established in the world, does not, in the least, add to its credibility; but the number of those who doubt it, has a tendency to diminish it.—Fontanelle.

THE master said: "Shall I teach you what knowledge is? When you hav a thing, to hold that you know it, and when you do not know a thing, to allow that you do not know it, this is knowledge."—Confucius.

Now this, overdone or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure of the which one must, in your allowance, o'erweigh a whole theater of others.—Shakspere.

NO REAL greatness can long co-exist with deceit. The whole faculties of man must be exerted in order to noble energies; and he who is not earnestly sincere, livs in but half his being, self-mutilated, self-paralyzed.—Coleridge.

PERHAPS there are few less happy than those who are ambitious without industry; who pant for the prize, but will not run the race; who thirst for truth, but are too slothful to draw it up from the well.—Sharpe's Letters and Essays.

LET there be no violence against the superstitious or unbelieving. Let him who believes draw near, and let him who does not believe stand aloof. Nobody is to be constrained; liberty is essential to faith and all that belongs to it—Luther. (See Romans xiv, 5 7.)

AS FOR our mis-education, let us not make bad worse; waste not the time yet ours in trampling on thistles because they hav yielded us no figs. Here are books, and we hav brains to read them; here is the whole earth and the whole heaven, we hav eyes to look on them.—Carlyle.

DOUBT, instead of being crime, we regard as true wisdom. Without doubt, there will be no investigation. Without investigation, there will be no advancement. Doubt is the handmaid of progess. Our motto is; "In all things that can be demonstrated, unity; in things that admit of doubt, free diversity; in all things, charity."—B. F. Underwood.

WHAT does an ascertained imposter deserve but to be denied, exposed, insulted, trampled under foot, danced upon, if nothing less will serve, till the very geese take courage and venture to his derision? Are we to wreathe aurities round the brows of phantasms lest we shock the sensibilities of the idiots who hav believed them to be divine?—Froude.

IF, after a deliberate and impartial use of our best faculties a professed revelation seems to us plainly to disagree with itself or to clasp with great principles which we cannot question, we ought not to hesitate to withhold from it our belief. I am surer that my rational nature is from God than that any book is the expression of his will.—Dr. Channing.

A PERSIAN lad, Herodotus tells us, was educated in three especial accomplishments. He was t aught to ride, to shoot, and to speak the truth; that is to say, he was brought up to be brave, activ, valiant, and upright. When a man speaks the truth, you may count pretty surely hat he possesses most other virtues. Half the lies in the world rise out of cowardice, and one who is afraid of lying is usually afraid of nothng else.—Froude.

WE may now ask, Who is he that yields to the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the son of God? That man swims with the current. Were Jesus in Christendom and heard one name him the Messiah, he could no longer say the compliment came not of flesh and blood; but to any one amid the crowd who should say, Thou art a man, a right and true man, than whom none do I love more his hand Christ must surely clasp and say, Blessed art thou, my brother! Flesh and blood did not tell you that, neither conventional opinion nor priest, nor your own interest; but the spirit of truth and patient thought. Blessed are thou!—Conway's Idols and Ideals.

THE day is fast coming when the Bible, with its mythical God and Savior, will be relegated to the encyclopedias, to the poets, the painters, and the curiosity hunters—along with Jupiter, Baal, Pluto, and other mythical deities of the ancients. There is nowhere on record an account of a single religion in the past that ever came to life or was ever revived and renewed after it had once died out and people had learned that the universe could move along quietly and harmoniously without it. Not even a part of a religion once outgrown is ever again taken up afresh. The old fire and brimstone hell is departing little by little from Christian churches all over the land. In the minds of all cultured preachers you cease to find its shadow. The low, ignorant whites and credulous blacks still dream of devils with horns, hoofs, and forked tails, and smell the sulphur and dread the fire; but the happy few who are science-taught hav forever given it up, and many declare that the Bible does not teach it.—Elmina

Odds and Ends.

A LITTLE girl who was sent out to look for eggs came back unsuccessful, and complained that "there were lots of hens standing around and doing nothing."

"WHERE is my bow?" asked a fascinating little female archer, when seventeen sprig swells sprang forward and said, with an idiotic smile, "Did you call me?"

"JOHN, how many times hav I told you always to eat bread with your meat?" "Papa, how many times hav you told me never to do two things at a time?"

AN army officer is retired when he goes out of service, and a wheel is retired to go into service again. When a sheriff releases a prisoner he loses possession of him, and when he releases a house he regains possession of it, and this is a howling old language of ours, ain't it?

A LADY recently married was detailing to the girl she wished for a servant the advantages of the place. "The work is very easy. There are but two of us, and we hav no children." "Oh, madam," cried the girl, "I pray you will not inconvenience yourself on my account. I adore children."

THE master of a negro in Virginia threatened to giv his sable attendant a flogging if he boiled his eggs hard again. "You rascal," shouted the enraged planter, "Didn't I tell you to cook those eggs soft?" "Yes, massa," said the frightened negro, "an' I got up at 2 o'clock dis mornin', and biled dem five hours, and it seems to me I never kin get dese eggs softer."

"YES," said an old undertaker, talking to a careless assistant, "that's just your way, you sling the loose tacks all around the inside of the coffin when you are tacking in the lining, and when you are done you just leave them there to stick a corpse almost to death. Why don't you hav some feelin' about you?" And the good old man laid his arm affectionately on a rosewood casket and sighed.—Steubenville Herald.

MR. SPOOPENDYKE'S PRAYER-BOOK.

"Now, my dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, cheerfully, "be lively. It's twenty minutes past ten, and we mustn't be late at church. Most ready?"

"Yes, dear," beamed Mrs. Spoopendyke, "I'm all ready. Got everything?"

"I think so. Hymn-book, umbrella, and—where's the prayer-book? I havn't got the prayer-book."

"Where did you leave it?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, turning over the volumes on the table hurriedly.

"If I knew where I left it I'd strut right to that spot and get it," retorted Mr. Spoopendyke. "I left it with you. Where did you put it? Can't you remember what you do with things?"

"I havn't seen it since last Sunday," retorted Mrs. Spoopendyke, faintly. "I know," she continued; "perhaps it is at church."

"Perhaps it is," mimicked Mr. Spoopendyke; "perhaps it got up early, took a bath, and went ahead of us. Did you ever see a prayer-book prowl off to church all alone? Ever see a prayer-book h'ist up its skirts and strike out for the sanctuary without an escort? S'pose a prayer-book knows the difference between a church and a ham sandwich? Where did you put it?"

"I mean you may hav left it in the pew-rack. You know you did once?" suggested Mrs. Spoopendyke.

"I didn't do anything of the sort. I brought it home and gave it to you. Where do you keep it? What did you do with it? S'pose I'm going to swash around through that service without knowing whether they are doing the apostles' creed or an act of Congress? Spring around and find it, can't you? What are you looking there for? Don't you know the difference between a prayer-book and the Wandering Jew? Find it, can't you?"

"Never mind it, dear," fluttered Mrs. Spoopendyke; "I know all the responses, and I'll help you along."

"Oh, yes, you know them all. What you don't know about religion wouldn't wad a gun. All you want is a bell and a board fence to be a theological seminary. Think you can find that prayer-book between now and equinoctial?" howled Mr. Spoopendyke. "Got any idea whether you sold the measley thing for china vases or stirred it into the wheat cakes? Hav I been chawing divine grace all the morning? Where's that prayer-book? Going to get the prayer-book before the Revelations come to pass?" and Mr. Spoopendyke plunged around the room, tumbling books about and breathing heavily.

"I don't see the use of making such a fuss over a thing you don't really need," sobbed Mrs. Spoopendyke through her indignant tears.

"Oh, you don't?" raved Mr. Spoopendyke. "You don't see any use in putting things where they belong, do you! How d'ye s'pose I'm going to keep up with religion without a prayer-book? How d'ye s'pose I'm going to know when it's my turn to show what Christianity has done for me unless you can find that dodgasted book for me between now and the resurrection?" and Mr. Spoopendyke spun around on his knee like a top, and knocked over a Parian jar.

"Wait a minute, my dear," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, looking at him earnestly. Then she went behind him and fished out the prayer-book.

"Got it, didn't you?" he growled. "Had it all the time, I s'pose. Where was it, anyway?"

"In your coat-tail pocket, dear," and Mrs. Spoopendyke jabbed the powder puff in her eyes, and stalked down stairs, leaving her lions

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Sypners. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 81. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 4 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Ben- | 5 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 2 |
| 139 | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off, on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

Was Christ a God?

Conclusions Drawn from Apostolic Writings.

BY F. MENSIGA.

CONTENTS.—Questionable Dogmas, Superstition and Religion, the Appearance of Christ, the Life of Christ, Comments and Explanations of Jude, James, John, Peter, Paul (all his epistles), Acts, the Four Gospels, Revelations, a Summary, Erroneous Theories of Deity, Heaven, Devil, Hell, the Author's Intuitions, Evolution of Life. A work of strength and merit.

An octavo volume of 253 pages. Price, $1.50. Sold at this office.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, | 5 |
| On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N Y.

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 6. No. 37. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, September 4, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

Look out for a clergyman of medium size, fair complexion, smooth face, very light moustache, and about 30 years old. He is the Rev. C. L. Crowther, a swindling fugitiv from Findlay, O.,

A CHURCH warden, in taking up a collection on a certain Sunday not very long ago in a western village, handed the plate to a stranger, who said, "Go on, I'm a deadhead; I've got a pass."

CORA L. V. RICHMOND, the spiritual clairvoyant, explains that the spirit after death is not clothed in external garments, fashioned as earthly garments are, but affectionate friends, spirits who are in sympathy, gather around and adjust the raiment. Garments are woven of atmospheric conditions and spiritual substances surrounding the individual.

HERE is something singular: Rev. J. W Grieberson, residing at Santa Paula, California, was last week bitten by a rattlesnake, and, strange to say, the minister died while the rattlesnake lived. Eminent scientists are about to examin the contents of that snake to see what preparation he used before engaging in this singular encounter.

THE Central Presbyterian has this: "'She outsatins them all,' remarked a witty lady, as one of the belles at one of our fashionable watering places sailed by in her decollete dress." How these sacred cusses do like to come just within an inch of losing their immortal souls!—Commercial Advertiser. Some of them like to get closer than that.—Truth.

THE call for the Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be found in another column. The object of the Convention is set forth in the call. The League has the power to say which of the two shall be the next President, Garfield or Hancock, and it ought to speak with no uncertain voice. The present is its opportunity; it should make the most of it. —Cloud County Blade.

D. M. BENNETT, editor of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, who served thirteen months in the Albany Penitentiary ostensibly for sending a book through the mails, but really for publishing a so-called Infidel paper, sailed on the 4th inst. to represent the Liberals of the United States at the Brussels Congress. We hope he will be received in Europe as we in America are in the habit of receiving those Europeans who suffer for human freedom and human rights.—Worthington Advance.

A LETTER has been received at Troy from the Rev. Dr. Krohn (whom we referred to last week as being a swindler and libertin), in which he says he will not return. It is understood that charges will be preferred before the Troy Conference charging him not only with financial irregularities, but with immoral practices. Members of the West Troy church declare that he kept a mistress in Troy, another in Albany, and a third in Watervliet. The probable action of the Troy Conference will prevent him from accepting the pastorate in, or in the vicinity of, Chicago, for which he was a candidate.

NO ONE who walks the streets of New York and Brooklyn can ignore the fact that the Chinese are becoming exceedingly numerous. At present, it is true, they confine themselvs to the art of washee washee, but there is no telling how soon they will do in New York what they did ten years ago in Massachusetts, and throw out nativ born laborers by underbidding them in prices. There is little use in attempting to ridicule the great Chinese problem: either America is and must be open to all who come within its borders eager to earn a living or the Chinese must go. When a nation of hundreds of millions is the subject of this discrimination, it is difficult to see how the tenets of our forefathers are to be logically carried out. If the Chinese come here proportionately in as great numbers within the next twenty years as they are coming now, "melican man" will hav to go.—Truth.

THE revision of the Bible givs rise to an interesting question of literary property. The literary work has been done both in England and America. In England Macmillan & Co. will hav the copyright, they having largely borne the expense of the revision. They naturally also desire to control the business in this country. Should they be protected, another question still more interesting will occur. Where do the royalties go? The book is God's book, so, at least, we are told, and on principles of equity, some part of the profits, therefore, ought to go into the exchequer of heaven. But it may be said that Macmillan & Co. are the proprietors. That, however, helps the matter very little. How do they become proprietors? Do they hold heavenly letters patent? Is the monopoly conferred upon them as a favor? or hav they paid for it? and if they paid for it, when and whom did they pay? But seriously, can anything be more absurd than to confer upon any individual a proprietary control of a divine revelation?

THE Massachusetts Board of Health reports that adulteration of staple groceries are not as common as the public hav been led to suppose. For the purpose of test, the expert of the Board took samples of flour, sugar, bread, soda, cream of tartar, and baking powders, obtained in stores in forty cities and towns. The flour was found in all instances to be wholly free from foreign substances, and, with the exception of one or two coarse varieties of brown sugar, no adulteration was perceptible in that article, and in these isolated cases there was reason for thinking that the defects were due to imperfections in the process of manufacture. The soda examined, although sold under a variety of names, such as saleratus, bicarbonate, supercarbonate, and cooking soda, was all found to be much the same article, and nearly all of it good. The poor soda was that which had not been properly purified of the crude soda ash, but this sulphate is not injurious to health. Baking powders were found pure in twenty-four instances out of thirty-three. The adulteration consisted in an excess of flour or starch over that needed for mixing the soda and cream of tartar. There was also some alum found. In cream of tartar a considerable amount of adulteration was detected.

ABOUT 8 o'clock on Thursday evening of last week, Prof. E. C. Pickering, Director of the Harvard Observatory, was so fortunate as to make a discovery which has been characterized as one of the most important discoveries in stellar physics of the present century. Prof. Pickering uses in some of his investigations a prism, placed between the object-glass and the eye-piece of his telescope, and this apparatus, of his own device, has led him to the following observations: In the ordinary telescope a star is seen as a point of light, hardly larger than it appears to the naked eye. With the instrument containing the prism a star, instead of giving the appearance of a point of light, is drawn out into a continuous band. When, however, the telescope with the prism is directed to a planetary nebula, the light is collected into a star-like point without any band, and these facts enable the astronomer to distinguish instantly between a star and a planetary nebula. This principle has already enabled Prof. Pickering to discover several planetary nebulæ. On Thursday evening (Aug. 25th) an object was observed which presented the appearance of two star-like points within the band, in the modified telescope. Astronomers do not venture to express any decided opinion as to what the newly-discovered object is. It is entirely different from anything heretofore observed in the telescope, and is regarded as a very important object for investigation.

THE extent to which Mr. F. E. Abbot is acting as the ally of the orthodox malignants may be judged by the appearance of the following article in the weekly Witness of this city—the most malignant and querulous of all the organs of orthodoxy: "F. E. Abbot, the leader of the so-called Liberal party, but really Atheistical party, says, 'I hav been a keen watcher of the weather-signs in the sky of reform for years, and an editor has better opportunity than others for this kind of watching. There is a thunder-storm brewing ahead, unless Liberalism is indeed the morally rotten and worthless thing that orthodoxy says it is. I do not mean a storm from without. That is to be expected at all times. But I do mean a storm from within. Liberalism has got to-day to show what stuff it is made of; it has got to come to a fair and square understanding with itself. For two years and a half the very worst elements in society (outside of the distinctivly criminal classes) hav been seizing more and more the control of organized Liberal movements; and their ambition is to seize them at last. I look about me and ask: What is to prevent their success? Nothing at all, in the present apathy of the Liberals at large. Healthy organization has come to a complete standstill; unhealthy organizations are springing up like mushrooms all over the land. To go into the work of Liberal organization to-day, without the keen vigilance of which I see no sign at present, would be to play directly into the hands of a party that is an incarnate moral pestilence.' Bennett, the vender of obscene literature, is a prominent light among these people, and their great apostle is Ingersoll. Mr. Abbot's testimony deserves to be noted."

THERE it goes again! A nephew of ex-Governor Hunt, of Colorado, kills a gambler from New York, in a dance hall at Albuquerque. Charles Hunt, a gambler, shot and killed another gambler. The papers say that there was a quarrel between those two gentlemen over a "depraved woman." Now, what is a depraved woman? She is one who is looked up to by that noble animal, man, when he is lower in the scale of life than the one who made her a victim. A woman who has had her passions overheated by a man; who has been ruined by the gossips of her own sex, who being bloodless are therefore passionless, or who being ignorant are therefore garrulous and gossipy. She is the victim who by the hand of lust has been thrown from a home into a ditch, and who being helpless is therefore depraved. Men are never depraved. They are gentlemen. They get roaring drunk, foolishly besotted, wickedly inhuman, but are never depraved. They make love to unfortunates whose nature is to cling to somebody, who are thrown into hell by the religious element, who hav no society to enter save that of the wild and fearful, who do openly what many real nice folks do in private, who do without the marriage ceremony what many others do with it as a protection, who liv upon men who are willing to support them, and, therefore, are depraved. Well a well! The world is full of those who are willing to be supported. Bloodsuckers of church, state, politics, enterprise, society, and the so-called affections; but none are depraved except those who are openly or secretly hired and supported by that noble animal—man. Depraved woman! There must be something good in a woman over whom a quarrel is waged by gentlemen, therefore we doubt the correctness of the statement as to the character of the woman who, if she has lived to no other good purpose, has indirectly rid the earth of one useless being.—Denver Great West.

IT is refreshing to find an expression in one of Talmage's sermons having the advantage, which his sermons do not generally enjoy, of combining good sense and fact. Last Sunday he said, "Instead of the church converting the world, the world is converting the church." This remark is strictly true. The world is converting the church, and it has been converting the church for centuries. With greater success, however, during the few years just past. The church taught that the earth was flat and that the sun daily moved over it. This teaching was based upon the Bible. The world taught the church better, and the church teaches that nonsense no more. The church taught that the world was created six thousand years ago in six days. This teaching was also based upon the Bible. The world again taught the church better, and now the church concedes that the world was long ages in reaching its present condition. The church taught the divine origin of slavery. This is also based upon the Bible, but the world again showed it its error, and now slavery is reckoned by the church a curse and a sin. The church taught that men ought to be persecuted and massacred for unbelief. The world taught it to respect the sanctity of the human person and of human life. And now the church is teaching threadbare, though harmless, creeds, which the world is rapidly teaching it are false and barbarous. And while all this is going on the church is really making no progress, unless its following the lead of the world may be called progress. It spends thousands in its foreign missionary enterprises without making any inroad into the faiths of heathendom. It spends thousands in home missionary efforts without converting any but those whose early education has prepared them to be converted, and who in belief hav never been away from the church, but only out of its recognized membership. Verily, Talmage is right. "Instead of the church converting the world, the world is converting the church."

Events of the Week.

GRANT is out for Garfield.

BUTLER is out for Hancock.

HAYES is going to California.

THURLOW WEED is in very poor health.

JOHN SHERMAN has taken the stump for Garfield.

THE ribbon weavers of Patterson, N. J., are on a strike.

TWO firms of St. Paul, Minn., lost $525,000 by fire last week.

DR. CHARLES T. JACKSON, the eminent geologist, died last Sunday.

CHIEF OURAY, of the Utes, has gone to the happy hunting grounds.

PREMIER GLADSTONE is making a tour of the English coast for his health.

THE Hornellsville meeting commenced on Wednesday to last five days.

ST. JULIEN, the wonderful trotter, made a mile in 2:11¼ at Hartford last week.

T. C. LELAND has gone West and will attend the Marshalltown, Iowa, camp-meeting.

SANFORD R. GIFFORD, a prominent artist of this city, died on the 29th, of pneumonia.

TWO MEN were hung in Texas the other day. They were to hang a third, but he escaped.

GREECE has doubled its army. The chances for a "European complication" are improving.

THE steamer Marine City, of Detroit, was burned to the water's edge last Sunday. Eight persons were lost.

THE St. Louis and Southeastern Railroad owes between $12,000 000 and $13,000,000, and is to be sold to satisfy the debt.

VENNOR predicts hot weather the first of September, to be followed during the month with rainy and cold weather.

THE Spanish government has banished several hundred Cuban patriots to the islands of Mariana, a most unhealthy place.

LAWYER MUNDY of Crosby's Society has commenced to wage a war on the hotels of Coney Island which sell liquor on Sunday.

SUPERINTENDENT WALLING reports to Mayor Cooper that ninety-one arrests of lottery men hav been made in this city since last December.

THE French Chamber of Deputies desires that the religious decrees be enforced; and M. Lepere, a friend of Gambetta, says they will be carried out to the letter.

THE census takers of this city hold daily meetings to protest against the action of the government in cutting down their pay for services performed.

AN excursion train on the Housatonic Railroad collided with a freight train. The engineer of the excursion train was killed, but the passengers escaped.

GEN. GRANT'S cousin has been taken to Colorado by a United States marshal, where he is wanted for $18,000, being that much short in his account with Uncle Sam.

IT is said that over 28,000 persons are destitute in Kansas, and in danger of starving. A meeting was held in St. Louis last Saturday to take measures for their relief.

FIVE young men were crushed to death by a low bridge while riding on the top of a car on the Lowell and Lawrence railroad, about three miles below Lowell, on the 28th.

THE Democrats of Kansas hav nominated Miss Sarah E. Brown for Superintendent of Public Instruction. She is at present Superintendent of Public Schools of Douglass county.

THE regular Democratic State Committee of New York has called a convention to nominate a candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals. Tammany will withdraw its candidate, and the Democratic family is once more united.

A TERRIFIC hurricane swept over the island of Jamaica last week. Shipping, dwellings, public buildings, and plantations were destroyed. It is estimated that the island has been set back two years by the storm.

Communications.

Mr. Wakeman on the Postal Laws.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mr. Wakeman concedes the power of Congress to pass laws against the importation of obscene publications, but denies that it has the same power to "regulate" the mails, on the ground that it is authorized to "establish post-offices," but not to regulate them. This is very strict construction. Under that rule, Congress has no right to fix the rates of postage; it cannot "regulate" the transmission of mailable matter; it cannot enact that it has exclusiv power to carry letters or to prosecute common carriers for carrying them. His rule proves too much.

The colonies never had separate colonial post-office establishments. The people never delegated them the power to establish or regulate them. In 1775 the Continental Congress abolished the royal mail, and established its own post-office system, as a national matter. It has been so since. Congress before the adoption of the Constitution "regulated" the mails. Since then it has passed acts entitled acts to "regulate the post-office establishment." From the days of Chief-Justice Marshall to the Jackson case, the power of Congress to regulate the mails, the rates of postage, the classes of mail matter, and the creation of new classes of mailable matter, has been conceded. In the Jackson case it was expressly upheld. This disposes of Mr. Wakeman's constitutional argument on the power of Congress to regulate the mails.

He argues as though the law givs a terrible and unwarrantable power, because in general terms it declares obscene publications unmailable, and claims that this makes every postmaster and postal agent an inspector of the moral character of publications.

Mr. Wakeman knows that there is a general knowledge among men as to what is and what is not obscene. He knows that one class is obscene—"works written for the single purpose of corrupting the morals of youth and of a nature calculated to shock the common feelings of decency in any well-regulated mind." Of this class of books he said in the Bennett trial, "The publication and circulation of this class of books . . . are conducted in a secret, obscure, and covert manner, and not openly."

Another definition he indorsed was that that was obscene "which offends modesty and is indecent, lewd, and tends to the creation of lascivious desires."

This class of books is undoubtedly meant in the declaration of Congress that obscene books are unmailable. Is it a violation of the freedom of the press to prohibit the mailing of such matter? Let the discussion be kept down to the issue actually made. I hav not taken up the question of merchandise made for lewd purposes, nor lottery tickets, nor articles or medicins for the procurement of abortion. These come under a different head from "publications" as such, and the constitutional guarantee of the freedom of the press has nothing to do with them. They come under the head, more properly, of commerce; the nation stepping in as a common carrier, taking these parcels at cheap rates, has under its general power to regulate commerce the power to define what it will carry under the head of third or fourth-class matter; also to make regulations to determin whether letters are being carried under the guise of second, third, or fourth-class matter. The espionage over this matter is by law confined to postmasters at the office of delivery. Mr. Wakeman should keep to the point, and not go off in a general tirade about the regulations against abortionists, lottery dealers, and persons who employ the secrecy of the mails to defraud their fellow-men.

Anthony Comstock and his work call forth the ire of Mr. Wakeman, and he charges that what he does he does as a limited special agent, and that he exercises an espionage over the mails. This matter has been tested in open court. Mr. Wakeman cross-examined Mr. Comstock. He answered that he was "chief special agent" for the Society for the Suppression of Vice; that he was authorized to seize obscene books or prints "under the law of the state of New York" with a search-warrant "based on affidavit;" that in serving out search-warrants he acts "generally as executiv officer of the Society."

Mr. Comstock further testifies to what he did in that case as special agent of the Post-Office Department. He said he sent an "official order to the Granville postmaster, as a special agent of the Post-Office Department for the purpose of detecting crime in the Post-Office Department, that I would use a certain box in his office for that purpose, and he was to forward to me in an official envelope anything that came to that box." Also that he procured an envelope from that post-office postmarked with its stamp, which he registered in New York and sent to Mr. Bennett.

If Mr. Comstock had the large power of espionage claimed by Mr. Wakeman, it would not hav been necessary for him to use such circumlocution to obtain evidence. All he did as special agent was to use the means allowed special agents for the ordinary purposes for which they were appointed. Neither the postmaster at Granville nor the clerk in New York who registered the letter, so far as the evidence shows, knew that Mr. Comstock was ordering an unmailable book. The law prohibited them from knowingly aiding or abetting "any person engaged in any violation of the provisions of law prohibiting importing, advertising, dealing in, exhibiting, or sending or receiving by mail obscene or indecent publications" (Sec. 1, 253, R. Stat.).

It was a penitentiary offense for Comstock to order obscene publications to be sent by mail. He caused them to be deposited. He aided and abetted Bennett, if Bennett was guilty under the law. He knew that the post office officials could not lawfully aid him if they knew he was ordering an obscene book.

The evidence shows that if Bennett was a criminal, Comstock surreptitiously and criminally used the appliances of the department to further his schemes as "chief executiv agent" for the Society for the Suppression of Vice.

Mr. Wakeman, after the testimony was in, made his opening speech, in which he said that society had "suffered from the exuberant zeal of their chief executiv agent."

"Who is it," he asked, "that stands here directly responsible for the inauguration of this charge, for the arrest of this citizen, and for putting in motion the machinery of this court? Why, it is the chief executiv agent of this society, Anthony Comstock, and no one else."

This disposes of the present charge that Comstock did what he did as special agent of the post-office department.

Having proved that the Society for the Suppression of Vice had set on foot this trial, and furnished the evidence for the prosecution, Mr. Wakeman spoke of that society with a tenderness and respect the converse of his present denunciations of the administration. He said in regard to the charter of that society: "Well, there may be a diversity of opinion as to the propriety of such legislation, but your representativs hav made the law, hav incorporated this society, and I think and I know for a good purpose, with a good design, with a most commendable intent, and I wish them in the performance of the specific duty placed in their hands by the legislature every possible Godspeed, and we are not here. I am not here, gentlemen, to find fault with that society if it keeps within its bounds and executes its duty and its trust and its powers with all the care that is possible. I am here to say that they hav done hard work, great good, and for which we owe them our sincere and hearty thanks; but it is a fact that that society has in it imperfections, like every other organization, whether individual or corporate."

This is a full indorsement, not only of the law chartering this society, which in general terms authorizes it to suppress the trade in or circulation of obscene literature and articles of indecent and immoral use, as "forbidden by the laws of the state of New York or of the United States," and givs its agents large police powers and one-half the fines imposed in prosecutions it may bring.

Contrast that with Mr. Wakeman's present comments on the postal laws.

He said further of Comstock: "If he, the chief executiv agent of this society, wished to hav suppressed this book, wished to hav put this publication out of existence, so far as this defendant is concerned he could hav done it without the least difficulty if he had only adopted the machinery which he states to you was within his power. He could simply hav made an affidavit, obtained a warrant, and (taking the responsibility) walked into the store of my client and taken possession of every one of the copies of this pamphlet and had them destroyed; or he could hav had this gentleman arrested and tried in our county court without the aid of the judiciary of the United States, without calling our people here in this capacity. The state statute is the proper law That authorized him to go into this shop and take these pamphlets and destroy them, and if he chose to hav him punished by state authority it could hav been done if the charge against the pamphlet is a true charge."

The arbitrary power of an agent of this society to arrest a bookseller, confiscate and destroy suspected books, is conceded by Mr. Wakeman. This purpose he says is a proper purpose. When Mr. Comstock as its agent makes a mistake or is guilty of oppression, and is notified by the Attorney-General of the United States that indictments will not be found for printing an "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," Mr. Wakeman kindly calls it "exuberant zeal of the chief executiv agent." Mr. Wakeman does not denounce the charter which givs Mr. Comstock authority to prosecute for violations of United States laws against obscene publications. His authority to act as informer, to search and seize suspected property, is confined by state law. Mr. Wakeman is satisfied with this. He says in effect, as he said in Heywood's case, "You hav long-standing and sufficient laws on the whole subject in Massachusetts, and if Mr. Heywood had been found guilty under them I should hav left the matter to you as her citizens; I should never hav come here to enter a protest."

The sum of Mr. Wakeman's loud shriek about the invasion of free speech is that he is a state rights man, and don't want the right of the state trenched upon by United States officials. He wants the state to enforce all laws against obscene literature; the United States to enforce none. The right of another to print and own books which may by mistaken zeal be deemed obscene may be impeached by the state. He will enter no protest. But let the United States simply declare obscene books to be unmailable, and he cannot find words strong enough to condemn this invasion of state rights. The state of New York, in carrying out the provision of the Constitution, that "no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," has given the Society for the Suppression of Vice extraordinary powers, and creates its special agents sleuth-hounds on the trail of obscene literature. This is an eminently "proper statute," which, as well as the society itself, Mr. Wakeman gushingly indorses.

All this talk on his part about the invasion of free speech by the postal law is shown to be sheer cant.

I cannot accept Mr. Wakeman's plea of ignorance on my part in regard to the law covering all fines imposed under the postal laws into the United States Treasury. The distinction between fines and penalties and forfeitures has been well defined since 1812, when Judge Story held that "penalties and forfeitures" must be restrained to such as might be recoverable by civil process in personom et in rem. (United States vs. Mosun, 1 Gall., 186.)

Sec. 57 of the Act of 1872 required all fines and penalties to be paid into the Treasury except "such part thereof as may by law belong to the party informing or prosecuting for the same."

Mr. Wakeman has not cited the United States statute which givs a moiety of the fine for mailing obscene publications to an informer. Such a statute never existed.

Sections 234 and 237 gave a moiety of the pecuniary penalty imposed for breaking bulk on ship before delivering all the letters on board or for concealing letters in packages on ship board, or on cars, or other vehicles, for the purpose of defrauding the revenue. In these cases questions of revenue were involved. Sec. 317 provided for the moiety of seizing-officer in such cases.

The law of 1872 is not in force. Secs. 234 and 237 hav been embodied in the revised statutes. Secs. 57 and 317 hav been consolidated and materially amended, and now constitute Sec. 4,059 R. S., which reads:

"All penalties and forfeitures imposed for any violation of law affecting the Post-Office Department for its revenue or property, shall be recoverable, one-half to the use of the person informing and prosecuting for the same. . . . All fines collected for the violation of such laws shall be paid into the Treasury for the use of the Post-Office Department."

Sec. 4,050, R. S., provides that "all fines and penalties imposed for any violation of the postal laws, except such part as may by law belong to the informer or party prosecuting for the same, . . . shall be deposited in the Treasury under the direction of the Postmaster-General as part of the postal revenue."

Laws imposing a fine for mailing unmailable matter are not laws which affect the Post-Office Department for its "revenue or property." The law expressly prohibits revenue from obscene prints or pamphlets.

Mr. Wakeman in his devotion to state rights seems to hav neglected a careful study of statute law as well as judicial decisions.

W. S. Bush.

Liberals and Politics.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In theory ours is a government of the people, but in practice we are governed by the party politicians and the machine. This fact is so notorious as to need no proof, and will be accepted as true by Liberals of every shade of opinion. It makes no difference which party is in power, the wire-pullers and machine managers control the government. The evil is in the system, and is too deep-seated to be cured by any change of parties.

Of course the "machinists" are forced to pay a certain amount of attention to the wants and notions of their constituents, and in a great crisis like that of the war the people dictate the policy of the country, and the politicians obey the popular will enough to keep possession of the machinery and run it in the interest of patriotism until they can run it, as before, for their own benefit.

While the system remains as it is and has been ever since the doctrin, "To the victors belong the spoils," and the practice based upon it, hav prevailed, the politicians are sure to defeat any attempt at reform on the part of Liberals and Progressivs, for the reason that in the game of politics the former are professionals; and amateurs are always beaten in contests with those who make such things a business.

If, however, we can discover what creates and maintains the party politician, we, the people, may be able successfully to escape his baneful influence by abolishing the cause and him with it.

Albert Stickney has written a book called "A True Republic," which ought to be read by every Liberal seeker of the truth, who is determined to follow it whithersoever it may lead, in which he considers and discusses this question in a very able and vigorous manner, and comes to the conclusion—and, as I think, correctly—that the root of the evil is the "term system."

So long as our public servants are elected or appointed for a term of years, and depend for continuance in office upon the success of the party which put them there, with little or no reference to their fitness for the discharge of its duties or their actual conduct of the business of the office, so long inefficiency in the work they ought to do, and efficiency in the party machine work which they ought not to do, will be the rule.

Perhaps all my Liberal friends will not agree with me that the term system is, as Mr. Stickney believes, at the root of the difficulty, but I beg any who doubt to read his book before deciding that it is not, and after that, if they still differ, to favor us with a criticism of the book, and a statement of what the evil is caused by, with hints of a remedy, since we all agree that a monstrous wrong does exist, and that we are somehow virtually cheated out of a voice in the selection of our lawgivers and rulers.

It seems to me that this would be a much more profitable work for Liberals to engage in than any party politics whatsoever. Especially do I regret to see our friends waste their energies or their hopes for any good to the Liberal cause in an attempt to bring back to power a party whose past history, recent and remote, proves it to be democratic only in name; a party which manages to be on the anti-Liberal side, or the side of oppression, and against the rights of the people at every critical period of the nation's life; a party which, during its long career of power, was governed by the Southern oligarchy, the most ignorant Northern vote, and the Catholic church. It is still so governed. No Democratic wire-puller, however honest and Liberal he may personally be, can retain his hold of power or be allowed to run the machine unless he runs it in the interest of those elements.

All our political parties tend to the level of their most numerous and lowest constituents, and it is because the masses of the Republican party are more intelligent and think more for themselvs that their leaders are forced to giv more heed to the real interests of the country than the Democratic party can do.

Can any Liberal believe that the Democratic party would ever carry out a policy or seriously advocate measures not approved by the Catholic church? They never hav done so, because to do it would be suicide, and they will never die in that way. Neither would or could they commit suicide by doing anything not desired by the South, since the majority of their electoral votes come from there, although it is notorious that this would not be so if the negro vote could be freely cast and honestly counted.

It was, in my opinion, a great political blunder to giv the freedman the vote in the way in which it was done. It was certain to end in a hollow mockery, a travesty of justice and suffrage. But as it was done, it is a gross outrage to render that vote nugatory, as is done by the Southern Democrats; and this crime against liberty furnishes a sufficient reason for not striking hands with the party whose only hope of regaining the power which they abused is through that monstrous violation of the first principles of democracy and human rights.

Of course, under a system so inherently vicious as ours, the party in power must always be open to severe criticism; and the Republicans, while they hav carried the country through a great war and the consequent hard times, are by no means to be defended for all their acts. But it would be the greatest unwisdom, in order to punish the leaders who hav done wrong, to throw open the offices and the treasury to a crowd of hungry office-seekers and starved politicians whose only idea of reform is a change in all officials and a free distribution of the public funds to partially compensate the South for their losses during the war. If the spoils belong to the victors, they would certainly in this case belong to the South, for they would hav furnished the great majority of the votes, and would necessarily dictate the policy of the administration.

This is not saying that they would attempt to restore slavery or to secede, but it is inconceivable that they should favor secularization, or separation of church and state, or civil service reform, or any measure desired by Liberals. Perhaps the Republicans will not do much either, but at least they will not undo what of good has been done in the direction of civil service reform, for the great majority of those who favor better methods of administration of the government are in that party. They will not check our financial, and industrial, and commercial prosperity as the Democrats of the South would be very apt to do if the utterances of Wade Hampton in Virginia are correctly reported. Whether he actually used those words or not, and as yet they stand uncontradicted, all who know the South recognize the sentiments as those sincerely held by that section of the country. I quote: "Consider what Lee and Jackson would do were they alive. These are the same principles for which they fought for four years. Remember the men who poured forth their life-blood upon Virginia's soil, and do not abandon them now. Remember that upon your vote depends the success of the Democratic ticket." Has the South ever inaugurated any progressiv idea, or when they had the power ever passed any measure in aid of progress—free men, free speech, or free thought? Not one. Why should they? How could they? Their great claim is that they are conservativ, that they hav no isms, and who will dispute their claim? Is the other great controling element in the Democratic party, the Catholic church, likely to advocate any progressiv measures? Are they the chosen champions of the Liberals, to advance and maintain for us free government, free speech, and free thought? Do the people flourish where the church rules? In our country are the voters whom the church controls the most intelligent, the best educated in American ideas, and therefore the most fit to govern us?

Is any Liberal fresh enough to suppose that in the improbable event of the success of the so-called Democratic party the Liberals would hav any voice in shaping its policy? I cannot believe it. It is true that we hav little to hope directly from either party. But that is no reason for destroying the little good we hav and postponing the chances of forming a real party of progress for no one can tell how long. Let us work in our own way, promulgating the truth as fast as we see it, and when the time comes let us unite our forces and put forward those principles and men representing them which will make our country really free.

F. S. Cabot.

Whom Shall We Vote For?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: This is the question now before the country? It is well, therefore, for every one to define his position. And I am more proud of The Truth Seeker now than ever, because it permits everybody to define the color and complexion of his politics. For several weeks past I hav read the correspondence in its columns relating to the party issues with great interest. I am not disposed to be a partisan. I want no party to own me. As I now view politics and politicians, I can look upon the scrub partisan, the party hack, only as a dog under the wagon.

Ever since I hav had a vote I hav cast it for the Republican ticket. But that party has received its last vote from me. Since it has sold out to capital, creed, and corruption, it is beyond redemption. I am glad to know that thousands of Liberals who, like myself, hav supported this party now turn from it with utter abhorrence.

But if I leave my party, or it has left me, for whom shall I vote in the coming presidential election? I am in principle a Greenbacker. I regard reform in our monetary system as of most vital importance. But we cannot succeed in achieving this reform immediately. It is doubtful whether the Greenback ticket will carry one state. It certainly will not carry any state without uniting with the Democratic party. Greenbackers will show their strength by voting their ticket solid, but they will exert their influence practically by uniting with the Democrats. In the history of the Greenback cause in Maine we hav an illustration of the practicability and utility of this alliance. No state in the Union ever made the Republican Belshazzar tremble as did Maine two or three years ago. The Greenbackers and Democrats united and were victorious. Nor has such union tended to disintegrate the Greenback party. It is stronger there to-day than ever before. The Greenback principles will keep, and will constantly grow more popular. Let us remove the present party from their arduous labors, and giv them a rest. It will teach them, besides, that this is the people's government, and while they are meditating on this in retirement their condition may teach the new administration the necessity of listening to the voice of the people, the necessity of dispensing justice. My voice and vote are for Hancock.

W. S. Bell

P. S.—In all my lecturing in the West I never received a good friendly notice from a Republican paper, but I hav had scores of candid criticisms of my lectures in Democratic papers. Wherefore this thusness? W. S. B.

Some More "Chatter."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: As an admirer of the The Truth Seeker I acknowledge a good deal of solicitude as to the effect its "new departure" will hav upon its prosperity. Many of its best friends hereabouts doubt the wisdom of its course. Still we may hope for the best when we find that both sides are granted a full hearing, and no Liberal ought to oppose the fullest discussion of all subjects.

I am not a partisan. I care nothing for a name. I claim to be utterly independent of all cliques and parties. Yet I feel constrained to offer a vigorous protest against tendering to the Democratic party the support of the Liberals as a body.

It is not to be wondered at that Mr. Bennett, smarting under the indignities put upon him, should fight the Republican party so warmly. Yet many persons will look upon it as a personal warfare and not altogether one of principle. I hav read all his arguments, and rise from their consideration unconvinced. As for "Tee Cee Lee," I always devour his sparkling sentences, and then, like Oliver Twist, ask for more. But on this subject his bright sayings are very like, in the language of the negro hymn, "bright sparkles from de churchyard," the phosphoric gleam of decay. I am still unconvinced, and I will tell you why.

As regards the two great parties, the Republican has always represented the party of progress, while the Democratic party represents the conservativ element. One has always pulled ahead, the other has always pulled back. It is impossible, in the very nature of things, for the most progressiv element in society to unite itself with the most conservativ; hence the inconsistency of Liberals uniting with the Democratic party is almost too great to speak of.

Next, the Republican party is not alone responsible for the objectionable Comstock laws, for if a Republican Congress with the aid of Democratic votes passed said law, a Democratic Congress has made no move to abolish it. Consequently you hav no reason whatever to expect any better things of that party should you assist it to power.

Bro. Leland proposes to defeat the Republican party in order to rebuke it, and unblushingly proposes to "use" the Democratic party for that purpose.

What consternation would there be in the Democratic camp were they aware of this fell purpose of T. C. L. to use their cat to pull the Liberal chestnuts out of the fire! How it would worry them! No one supposes for a moment that the aforesaid cat would appropriate the spoils, but would surrender them incontinently without a murmur. I think I see her doing it. Bro. Leland talks very confidently of our ability to kick them out again at the next election if they persist in refusing to toe the Liberal scratch. You remember the fisherman in the oriental tale who liberated the monster from the iron chest, and then found, when too late, he could not get him back. Had we not better go a little slow before we get ourselvs into a similar predicament?

I don't say that this leopard cannot change his spots, but I do say we havn't any evidence that he has done so to any perceptible extent as yet. Look at the last election in Alabama and see the record it bears of him. It is very easy to return the stereotyped Democratic answer, that these reports are manufactured in the North, but that answer won't do now any more than in the palmy days of slavery and the lash; they are too well authenticated. The Greenback orators who went down there to stump that state are unanimous in agreeing that free speech is unknown in the South, and some of them were compelled to leave in order to escape personal violence. They were stigmatized as "white men with black hearts who came down here to divide the Democratic party."

I realize as much as any one how desirable it is that sectionalism should cease. But before the marriage can be completed between the North and the South, you hav got to get the consent of the latter. And, just now, that seems to be an impossibility unless the former will agree to return to the condition—in a measure—of ante-bellum days and giv the South the inside of the house while the North browses around in the yard or sleeps in the stable.

My dear fellow-sinners, the best of us are too prone to look at questions from a too circumscribed point of view. Standing on a plain or in a valley, our horizon is very narrow. We can see but the most immediate objects. Let us climb a mountain, metaphorically speaking, and get a broader mental vision.

We hav suffered some indignities at the hands of a Republican administration; true, but what do they amount to compared to the wrongs that are even yet inflicted upon a portion of our citizens in a part of the country now under Democratic rule? Nothing. True, we hav a Comstock, but that frisky individual is not unknown in the South, and he is supplemented with the shot-gun. Until in every portion of our country, every citizen, no matter what his color, condition, or belief, may exercise his prerogativs freely and without let or hindrance, the mission of the party that antagonizes Bourbonism is not ended. All other reforms may and will come after.

What reason hav we for hoping for anything from the Democratic party?

Do we not know that the states that giv the largest Democratic majority are the most dominated by religious bigotry? Do we not know that in comparison with the Republican North, Infidelity and Freethought are almost unknown in the Democratic South?

Do you know of a Republican state where an Infidel would be subjected to the brutal treatment inflicted by a band of Christian ruffians on Dr. Bell, in the stanch Democratic state of Texas, last summer?

I look upon the "Liberal plank" in the Democratic platform with a good deal of suspicion; as some one expresses it, "a dodge to catch gudgeons." Bro. Leland goes into ecstasies over Hancock's proclamation in Louisiana. I hav nothing to say against that, but why does he so carefully refrain from any allusion to the "Liberal plank" in his letter of acceptance? For the reason that nearly one million of the voters upon whom he depends for his election are members of that church which holds it as its first principle that the Catholic church is superior to the state; and, in the language of one of its brightest lights, "The state must be subservient to the church."

Though T. C. L. strives hard to pierce Col. Ingersoll with his poignant quill, that gentleman's wisdom and consistency are still plainly apparent. If the Republican party has neglected Ingersoll and failed to reward his eminent services, he, by his steadfast support of that party, shows that he is actuated by principle, and not by self-interest; and, apropos of the questions he proposes to ask the rival candidates, allow me to quote the following extract from a speech delivered by Gen. Garfield, in Congress, June 22, 1874:

> The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere, in any state, or in the nation should be exempt from equal taxation; for if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a church tax upon the whole community.

Liberals, what more can you ask of a man than that? No one could hav stated the position of Liberalism upon this question more fully or pertinently. And this alone proves that Gen. Garfield is a man of broad and generous ideas and instincts. What if he is a Christian? Liberals cannot consistently ostracize a man on account of his religion. For my part I am willing he shall indulge in all the "psalm singing" he chooses so long as he exercises the broad liberality manifested in the above extract.

My political sympathies are with the Greenbackers, and I propose some day to cast my lot with them; that is, providing they survive Herbold's assault. But for the present I confess my duty seems to counsel me to put my vote where it will do the most good in the way of defeating the Democratic party. When that is finally accomplished there will be a chance for the new party.

I am aware that I hav laid myself out for an operation by the great American scalper, but I shall "grin and bear it," however severe. Come on with your "kyarving" knife.

Clinton, Iowa, Aug. 15. W. F. Peck.

Mrs. Briggs to Mrs. Slenker.

Sister Elmina: I hav just finished reading your fourth article on "Sexual Intemperance." I am more than ever convinced that no one person can know all things. I was so delighted with your first article, and that you were strong enough to write upon the subject, that I felt like taking pen in hand and congratulating D. M. Bennett for the opportunity and independence to publish that and future articles from your pen on that subject.

Once I believed as you do; now I do to a certain extent. But you go to the opposit extreme. It reminds me of an interview between Henry C. Wright and a friend living in Boston. Henry taught the same as yourself, and this friend said to him, "Henry, do you believe what you write thus and so?" "Well, no, but by teaching, as I do, one extreme I hope to bring people to an equilibrium." I believe this is not your case, judging from my own past opinions. I hav talked with hundreds upon this subject, listened to scores of experiences, and hav had to change my mind. Much that you say, if not nearly all, in your first three articles I indorse, but one fact you do not understand. Man and woman represent a perfect globe; either alone only one-half. If properly mated they are positiv and negativ, and by coming together temperately, spontaneously, and mutually, both are benefited. If there is a loss of vital force it is more than made up to both by the blending of the positiv and negativ elements. The sexual act can be made the highest or lowest act in life, also the most beneficial or damaging, according to the intelligence or ignorance of the parties.

I am more than pleased that this important subject has a hearing, and only hope that these hastily-written lines (after all our household are in bed) may inspire some others to continue the subject and giv light upon the one subject of all others most important to be understood by the people.

Fraternally thine, Ruth W. Scott Briggs.

"Rather hot, isn't it?" said a Sunday-school teacher to one of his "heathen Chinee" pupils, the other day, by way of salutation. The wash-man looked up at the teacher with a face illuminated by a cherubic smile, and emphasized an affirmativ nod, "Yes, damee hotee! damee hotee!"

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 4, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 2.

LONDON, Sunday Morning, Aug. 15, 1880.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: Here I am in this the greatest city of all the earth, and I don't know of anything I can better busy myself at before breakfast than dropping you a few lines to tell you what progress we have made thus far.

I closed my first letter as we were nearing the port of Queenstown in the south of Ireland. The Gallia did not enter the harbor, but came to anchor two or three miles off from shore, where a small steamer belonging to the Cunard company came out to us, bringing us twenty or thirty passengers and taking thirty or forty of ours in exchange. Among those who disembarked at Queenstown were my friend S. B. Brague, wife and two sisters-in-law, Hon. John A. J. Creswell and wife, Dr. Biggar, Mr. Burnham, and others, who went ashore there in order to make the tour of Ireland before visiting other parts of Europe. They will go to Cork, which lies a few miles up the harbor, to the Lakes of Killarney, Dublin, Belfast, the Giants' Causeway in the extreme north of the island, and other places of interest. Some of them may likely kiss the "blarney stone" before they leave. We would like to take a run over the Emerald Isle before we go had we time, but we delayed our departure from home so long we cannot "do" Ireland and Scotland now, but will have to leave them till the last thing before our return. The Brussels business cannot be deferred, and we must be there betimes.

We put off at Queenstown one or two hundred bags of American mail for the different parts of Europe, and took some aboard as well. By landing the mail at that point it goes at once by rail, crosses St. George's Channel by steamer to Holy Head, and reaches London half a day earlier than if taken to Liverpool; and every hour counts in this world of ours.

We also took on from the little steamer a quantity of vegetables, milk, eggs, etc., to keep us in eating materials to the end of our voyage. Thirty or forty minutes sufficed for the transfer, and we were again upon our course, all hands gazing after the little side-wheel steamer, as she made her way back into the harbor. The waving of handkerchiefs was long kept up by people on board both boats, many of whom, perhaps, may never meet again.

The day was lovely, and sitting on deck and watching the passing vessels and fishing-boats as we made our way into St. George's Channel was decidedly pleasant. We had arrived at Queenstown about 10 A. M., and to reach Liverpool, two hundred and eighty miles distant, required some twenty hours more. In the afternoon the wind grew stronger and colder, and soon became too fresh to be agreeable on deck.

St. George's Channel is wide, and we were again out of sight of land, seeing far less of the Welsh coast than I expected. We retired to bed for the last time on the Gallia, knowing that we would be at Liverpool some time during the night. We reached the mouth of the harbor at about 2:30 A.M., but the fog was so dense that we lay to for two or three hours until daylight made its appearance, when we slowly moved up the harbor toward the city, going very cautiously, lest we might run into some of the steamers or other craft constantly passing out into the channel. It was a regular English fog, and did not rise till four hours after daylight, though the sun rose pleasantly and tried its best to penetrate the British opaqueness. We were constantly on deck trying to pierce the obliquity and see what we could of the extensive harbor, the miles of dock, the piers, etc., for which Liverpool is justly noted.

The city has a splendid harbor, extending for several miles, formed by the river Mersey (the s having the sound of z), as it enlarges when entering St. George's Channel. The docks of Liverpool extend for five miles, occupying a water area of three hundred acres, and are of the most solid and permanent description, being built of granite from Scotland. They are at a considerable distance from the mainland, so that vessels can pass around inside of them and unload, the cargoes being placed in the numerous warehouses which line the shore and stand upon the docks. In front of the stationary docks are floating piers made in compartments, the solid floors being of Norway pine. Everything connected with the docks is of the most permanent character, and is in striking contrast with the New York piers, composed of piles and presenting a very wooden appearance. The docks of Liverpool were made to last, and will be permanent one thousand years from this time. They are superior to anything of the kind in the world.

Liverpool is one of the principal ports on the globe, and has an immense shipping trade. Several lighthouses are about the mouth of the harbor, and numerous buoys are on either side of the passage to tell mariners where the rocks are which must be shunned. On the docks are several towers fifty feet high, perhaps, many of them having clocks in them. These towers are all of granite, and are neat and handsome, as well as solid.

We had an early breakfast, expecting to make an early landing, but the fog deranged our plans. The Gallia cast anchor in the middle of the harbor, and as the tide was out, we waited nearly two hours for tenders or lighters to come and take us to the dock. This time seemed long, and we were all a little impatient. But after a time the two small steamers had all the passengers and their baggage on board, and we soon steamed a mile or two up to the dock. And here another ordeal had to be undergone—passing through the Custom House inspection. The baggage was all taken into a large room, about 150x60 feet, and arranged alphabetically in piles on one side. The passengers occupied a room adjoining, and quite anxiously waited for the examination. The room was well filled, and a hundred or more stood upon the floating pier outside. We could not reach the main land until duly examined. A door connected the waiting-room with the large one in which were the trunks, etc. Once in fifteen minutes or thereabouts this door was opened, allowing, say forty persons, to pass in where the baggage and Custom House officers were, when a hurried examination was made. Each passenger, finding his baggage in the alphabetical manner in which it was arranged, opened his trunk or trunks, when the officers very courteously made what seemed a rather superficial or unthorough examination of the contents. The clothing was carefully raised to see if anything contraband was discoverable. Whisky, brandy, tobacco, and cigars are the main articles sought for, and if found in excess of the quantity allowed for individual use, the regular duty is imposed. The question, "Have you any whisky, tobacco, or cigars?" is put to nearly every person, and if the answer is in the negative the passenger is allowed to pass with a hurried examination.

It was easy for me to answer in the negative, as I make no use of the articles named, and have no occasion to carry them. When I replied to the question the official placed a label upon my satchel without its being opened, and that gave us egress to the outer world, where we were free to go whithersoever we pleased. This custom-house examination is something of a bore in entering all countries, but the only way to avoid it is to stay at home and never travel "foreign countries for to see." I saw in the waiting-room a lady just from New Zealand via the United States. She was not a little annoyed by the custom-house delay and examination, but endured it without murmuring. By a little past 9 A.M. all had passed examination and scattered in various directions to see what is to be seen.

Mr. Rawson and myself passed some little distance up the docks and saw numerous fine ferry-boats well loaded with passengers coming in from Birkenhead, Bromborough, Eastham, New Brighton, Rock Ferry, etc. Birkenhead is immediately opposite Liverpool and is noted for its shipbuilding. With the rapid development of the shipping trade of Liverpool it sprang suddenly into existence. Laird, the great shipbuilder, is there, and there the Alabama was built which so troubled our shipping in our late civil war. The docks of Birkenhead occupy an area of 500 acres, 170 of which are devoted to floating docks, the remainder to quays, wharves, and warehouses.

Liverpool has a large trade with America, consisting of imports of cotton, corn, and timber, and heavy exportations of Manchester cotton goods, etc. Nearly all the cotton imported into England comes to Liverpool. It has a population of about 450,000 and is a very thrifty town. Its former name was Litherpool, but long ago its th was changed to v. In educational matters it holds a distinguished rank, boasting several colleges and institutes. It is well supplied with public parks and public edifices, among which are St. George's Hall, the New Town Hall, the New Exchange, Corn Exchange, Custom House, Post-office, Art Gallery, Public Library, hospitals, etc.

Liverpool is not so old as many towns in England, but there has been something of a town there for over five hundred years. When the patriotism of British ports was invoked to volunteer ships for the siege of Calais in 1838, Liverpool contributed one sloop with a fighting crew of six men. In 1619 it was constituted a separate parish, having previously been a chapelry to the parish of Walton. Now there are near seventy-five churches in the town, but not a cathedral of any note. It has only recently been able to boast a bishop. There are many Catholics, Presbyterians, and Nonconformists. In 1710 it obtained an act authorizing the construction of a dock, but for nearly half a century two wet docks sufficed; they now stretch along a range of fully five miles, from Toxtheth Park to Kirkdale, and are of enormous capacity. As late as 1764 more than half the African slave trade was carried on by ships fitted out by the merchants of Liverpool. It has since made good atonement in the promotion of a legitimate, healthy commerce.

We passed up Church street, which is one of its principal business streets, and watched with interest the lively scenes transpiring before us. We made our way to the Central Railway station (they rarely say railroad here or depot), an edifice with an arched iron and glass roof, and is 680 feet in length by 270 to 110 in width.

After securing our seats in the next train for London, we had time to examine, rather hurriedly, some of the more prominent features of Liverpool. We first visited St. George's Hall, an imposing and extensive structure, in front of which are four very large lions made of red stone. They are larger than oxen, and their size, perhaps, might make them dangerous, but Rawson assured me they were perfectly tame and harmless. Very near by is the Duke of Wellington, standing much larger than life on a beautiful column a hundred feet or more in hight. He and the lions appeared to agree very well, and one does not move till the others do. They have an immense amount of dignity about them.

We visited the art gallery, free reading-room, and museum—two fine buildings standing in close contiguity. In the first are two stories, divided into many capacious rooms filled with magnificent paintings and statuary. Enough is there to keep an admiring critic in deep study for weeks. But we did not spend that much time over them. In the museum are untold thousands of rare and startling curiosities in all the different departments of wonder which compose first-class museums. I was particularly struck with the splendid collection of fossils and relics of past ages of the earth—the miocene, pliocene periods, etc. There were huge saurian reptiles, with enormous heads, bodies, jaws, feet, teeth, and all the rest of it, in quantity and variety sufficient to make up a large catalogue, but we did not take the time to note down a single specimen. We rather rushed through as though doing the job by contract. Neither could we take the time to do justice to the library, not reading nor even opening a single volume. Though I will readily admit there is much in the large collection worthy of notice, yet I am compelled to leave that pleasant duty for some other pen than mine. I must say, however, that there is one feature about the Liverpool art gallery—and also the library, reading-room, and museum—of which I can hardly speak in too much praise, and one I am always in favor of patronizing—they are free, and every well-behaved person has access to them without paying a penny. The art gallery and building were the gift of a single Liverpool individual, their cost amounting to £50,000, or $250,000. I am afraid there are many who, if they possessed that amount of money, would not give it away to those who would hardly thank them. But that man undoubtedly had a big heart. I wish every city and town had men with such hearts and purses.

We saw the exterior of the Northwestern Hotel, a magnificent structure; the Exchange, the Custom House, the Town Hall, the Sailors' Home, the Nelson monument, the Seamen's Orphanage, the Blue Coat Hospital, etc., but so hurriedly that I will not undertake to describe them. Suffice it to say they are all about what they should be, and do credit to the rich and enterprising city of Liverpool.

The last exhibition we stopped to look at was a free Punch and Judy show on the street, or at least everyone could give just what they pleased. It consisted of puppets of Punch and Judy operating on a rather diminutive stage, talking and cutting up pranks peculiar to themselves. If Rawson had stopped one more minute to look at them we would hav been too late for the London train, and would have had two or three more hours to inspect the Liverpool sights. But we wanted to go away.

We intended to have come by the way of Birmingham and Stratford-on-Avon, and stop and pay our devotions to our esteemed friend, William Shakspere, who is said to have lived at Stratford over three hundred years ago, but we could not make it convenient without bringing us too late on the route to this great city. So, being quite well assured that we would not find Willie at home if we called on him, we deferred the visit till a more favorable opportunity. Could we have been assured that the author of Hamlet and a few other little pieces was to be found at Stratford, we would have gone, had we been all night in getting there, and been under the necessity of nearly walking our legs off in the attempt. But alas, William has not been visible there for a long time, and nobody knows for certain where he is. The little church, containing a rather poor bust of the great man, the house in which he was born, but in a modified form, are about all that are now to be seen. But his glorious memory lives, undimned in the hearts of millions of admirers, and will continue to do so as long as the English language is spoken, which, from present indications, will be a good many years yet.

English railways, their cars, etc., have peculiarities of their own. The roads are very solid and good, the cars are about half or two-thirds the length of ours, and are divided into compartments, crosswise, about six feet in width with two seats running crosswise of the cars and facing each other. These compartments are first, second, and third class according to the quality of their cushions. The first class has fine cushions; the second class has a cheaper style of cushions, while the third class has plain cushions, and not profusely stuffed. These classes are in the same train, and even over the same set of wheels, so the third class man gets from Liverpool to London just as rapidly as the second or first class. We did not take the first class nor the second, and I will, from this little hint, leave you to infer which class we did take. I heard a man on the steamer say there were only three classes of people who rode first class on English railways, and those were dukes, fools, and Americans. As we deny belonging to the first two classes, we concluded to forego the danger of being thought not of the last by showing that we had some slight regard for pounds, shillings, and pence. I was glad to learn that it is not considered disgraceful in England for a man even from America to show that he does not wish to throw his money needlessly away. There are many here who think a man is a fool to pay ten pounds for a finely cushioned seat when a plainer one for five pounds will answer just as well; and I am glad it is so. The prices of these classes of car seats are about like these: First class from Liverpool to London, over two hundred miles (I will state it in American currency), $10; second class, $7; third class, $5. Need any further explanation be made why we did not take the first class?

One way they have here that I cannot specially commend, and that is the locking of passengers in their compartments, and virtually making them prisoners, making it impossible for a person to get out of the cars, of passing from one car to another, or from one compartment to another. For instance, Mr. Rawson and I were locked in a compartment, and there we had to stay, nolens volens. We were by ourselves for a hundred miles or so, after that we had four or five male companions, and when they left, three ladies and some children were put in with us, at all of which we made no complaint. We are nearly as meek as Moses was.

As soon as we took our seats the train began to move, and I had my first railway ride on English soil. We whirled first through a series of artificial tunnels, until without the city limits, when we struck out into what seemed to me a beautiful country. I was eager to see all I could of English life and scenery, and was prepared to take in as much as possible. I liked the country very much, and thought I had never seen one so beautiful and well finished. The peculiarities that struck me in the English country homes were the neatness of the farms, the neatness of the hedges, the snugness and neatness of the farm houses, barns, etc. The land is divided into much smaller fields than our American farms. They seem to run from an acre to three, five, and six acres, not many larger. There is no waste land; every foot is occupied, and made to produce all that is possible. The main crops on the route are barley, wheat, oats, hay, turnips, beets, beans, cabbages, etc., but I did not see a single hill of corn in the two hundred miles from Liverpool to London. The entire country looks almost like a continuous garden. The crops are abundant in quantity and appear good in quality. The hay harvest is pretty well over, and the grain harvest is about half done. From the hay lying cut and partly cured in the fields, I judged the yield is about three tons to the acre. The shocks of grain are close together, and the yield of wheat ought to be from twenty to forty bushels to the acre. The weather has been most unfavorable for harvesting, it having rained a great deal within the past three weeks. Much of the wheat has sprouted, and a great portion of the cut hay has been nearly ruined by the continued wet. In some countries the rain season only lasts six months, but here it usually continues the year around.

Reapers and mowers are in use here, but they are smaller than those in our country. Some of them are operated by a single horse. The hay and grain is also hauled in by a single horse and cart, the latter having ladders before and behind, with something similar also at the sides. The loads are, of course, much smaller than I have usually seen in America. Stacking is also followed, for hay especially, the stacks being in all cases an oblong square. I did not see a round stack. The barns, usually of brick, are small. I saw no such large barns as are common in New York state and Pennsylvania. The farm houses are also of brick, with one occasionally of stone. I don't think I saw a frame house between Liverpool and London, either in town or country. It is very noticeable how little wood and lumber is to be seen, no sheds, no hovels, no corn-cribs; nothing scarcely made of wood; no fire-wood even. Coal is everywhere used for fuel. I saw no woods except in two or three instances, and those on pretty hilly land. The country is wholly cleared, and every foot in cultivation. Shade trees are abundant on all the farms and many of them beautiful, but very few groves and no woods, to say nothing of forests. There is no rail timber and not a rail-fence in two hundred miles. The fences are largely hedges, neatly trimmed, with some board fences, some iron fences, and stone in places where stones are to be had. The most of the country is quite free from stone and of gently undulating surface, but in the vicinity of Peak Forest and Chapel-en-le-Frith, there were considerable stone and rough hills. An immense business is done in that locality at burning lime. The kilns are large and on the improved plan, unlike any I had before seen. There are great numbers of them, and hundreds of men are employed in the business. I saw in the distance a large granite quarry where six hundred men are employed in quarrying the stone. A large excavation had been made.

I saw women working in the harvest-fields in several instances, some raking and binding grain. The men and women looked ruddy and healthy, though I cannot deny I saw several who looked thin and dyspeptic.

The weather tried to be pleasant, mild, and quiet, but the sun seemed to be shining through a blanket, and the clouds looked as though they could weep at a moment's notice. It would not be called good haying weather in our country. I have not yet seen an hour's bright sunshine since I have been in England.

I could not help noticing the splendid character of the roads in the country; all are macadamized and as smooth and perfect as could be wished, but I saw but few carriages upon them; not much riding about for pleasure; I judge every man is working to secure the crops.

The horses are large and strong, but I did not see many that looked like roadsters. In Liverpool and in this city the horses are very large and strong, somewhat like the brewery and heavy truck horses in New York. I noticed, also, quite a number of small donkeys, not larger than Newfoundland dogs, harnessed into carts suited to them. There are more in the cities than in the country, and in the aggregate amount to a large number. I see in this city many pony horses for light wagons and carriages.

The profuse rains with which England has been recently visited are made apparent in various ways; first, by the throwing down of the heavy wheat and grass, rendering it difficult to cut them with a scythe; second, by the carrying away of bridges and the standing water still to be seen in low places in many fields; third, by the striking greenness which the country presents. With the exception of the ripening grain fields, everything is as fresh and green as in the middle of June. With us at this season of the year we very often have protracted drouths, which parch up our pastures and fields and make everything look sunburnt and yellow. Nothing of that kind is seen here. Every pasture looks vigorous and abundant.

The fine blood cattle and sheep looked fat and hearty, and were so often seen reclining upon the soft sod that one easily comprehends that they do not have to be working all the time to fill their paunches with the succulent grass. I have seen many pastures in our country in August and September that were so bare of grass that cattle, sheep, etc., were required to use the utmost diligence to pick up enough during the day to satisfy the desires of their appetites. I have not yet seen here an impoverished, emaciated specimen of the bovine species, or a poor sheep; all are fat and heavy. I must say, too, that I think more attention is paid here to the breeds of cattle and sheep than with us. Here they look to be of the first class; not long-legged and slab-sided, but large-bodied, square, and smooth. I am not sufficiently an adept in blooded cattle to undertake to say what breeds are most grown here, but I am quite sure that the Texas breed has not been largely introduced. I have seen several flocks of sheep driven into this city for the butchers, and I was struck with their fine, plump appearance.

The English, probably, beat the world in mutton, it being fine in quality and flavor. I have tried several mutton chops, and will have to say it surpasses much American mutton I have tasted. Mutton is almost a national viand here.

The first large town after leaving Liverpool via the Midland Railway, which was the route we patronized, is Manchester, on the river Irwall, a flourishing manufacturing city, including suburbs, of eight hundred thousand inhabitants. There are more cotton spindles and looms running in that town than any other in the world, or perhaps any five cities in the world. It is emphatically the cottonopolis of the planet. The fabrics are largely calicos, muslins, velvets, fustians, dimities, checks, tickings, jeans, and almost every kind of cotton and silk goods, and these go to almost every country in the world, and largely all through central and southern Asia. There are also large iron foundries and chemical works, and manufactories of hats and various other commodities.

Manchester is a city of considerable antiquity, and like many of the towns in England, its name has been changed. In Druidical times it was called Mancunium, and afterwards Mancestre, and was one of the principal stations of the priesthood. The British tribe, the Brigantes, made upon a place near the confluence of the Irwell and the Medlock a stronghold which they called Mancession, meaning "the place of tents," the site of which is still called "Castle Field." After the departure of the Romans, the Britons occupied the station for nearly four centuries, and it was the scene of many struggles between the Britons and Saxons. Its more definite history begins about the year 620, when Edwin, king of Northumbria took it, annexed it to his dominions, and founded a colony of Angles. In later times it suffered in the conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes, and in 920 was taken by Edward the Elder, who rebuilt the town and strengthened the castle. During what is called the civil war it was the scene of bloody contentions which may not be now repeated. Upon the establishment of the commonwealth under Cromwell its walls were thrown down and its fortifications demolished. The restoration was hailed there with acclamations of joy. In the reign of Henry VIII., Manchester had risen to a populous and thriving town and has never receded since that time.

It has an old cathedral and numerous churches, which cost a mint of money to sustain. The same effort to keep up the almost senseless system called Christianity exists here that prevails all over Christendom. The churches, the bishops, the priests, and all the appliances hav to be paid for by the working classes, but yield them a very poor recompense in return. In institutions of learning, from colleges down to high schools and grammar schools, Manchester acquits herself most creditably. Among her public buildings are the Royal Exchange, Corn Exchange, Stock Exchange, Free Trade Hall, commercial buildings, assize halls, various markets, etc. I noticed particularly the residences of the working class. They are all plain brick buildings, joining each other, of two stories mostly, of rather narrow dimensions and uniform in style for a hundred squares together. There is a small yard belonging to each dwelling, but no grass, no shrubbery, and not a shade tree for miles. I cannot see how people can be fully happy with such surroundings. It is a hum-drum, work-away life they lead, with but little to cheer and enliven.

The people in the country are undoubtedly the happiest, but a mournful fact is that none of the tillers of the soil are the owners of it. The land is owned by the lords and a few heavy land owners, and the rents are so high that the poor toilers have all they can do to come out even at the end of the year, and when the crops are damaged, as they are this year, it makes it very hard on them. The next great reform for this country is the land reform. The present system of land tenure and entail must be supplanted by the more just system of the land being owned by the people and every man being made to earn his own living. The curse of what should be happy England is that the working classes are bound to support a great, idle, opulent class of nobles, bishops, and priests, who yield them no good in return. May some of us live long enough to see the working classes here become intelligent and wise enough to comprehend the situation and take in their own hands the legal means to redress their wrongs! These remarks may also apply to our own grand and loved America.

I will not mention all the towns we passed through nor stop to write their history. There are so many of the small towns and villages on all the railways of England that it would become tedius to even mention all on any single line. They are near together everywhere, not more than one or two or three miles intervening between them. Before we hardly leave one village the tall chimneys of some manufacturing establishments in another comes in sight; but our train whirled by them so rapidly that I could scarcely read the names of the stations at the depots. England is almost a continuous city, with surburban villages, all looking pretty thrifty, snug, and cleanly. But I am sure the people are entitled to be far happier than they are. I am sure, too, there is no being above the clouds who has the least objection to toiling humanity's being just as happy as possible, and it rests with humanity itself whether it shall be happy or not.

We passed through Stockport, Warrington, Derby, Trent, Leicester, and Bedford. Near Leicester is Bosworth field, where Richard III. fought that famous battle of his, and at Leicester his bones repose. It is an old town. It is said to have been founded by King Lear, 800 B.C., and was afterward a Roman station of importance. Under the Saxons it was

(Continued on page 568.)

Discussion.

What Objections to Christianity?

MR. MAIR'S FIFTH LETTER.—CONTINUED.

I have referred to the design of the miracles of Moses. Perhaps I should not bring it in here, as miracles is the subject of our second thesis; but while I refer to them now I wave the point of their truth or falsity, referring only to one of their designs, to show how utterly absurd is the thought of any affinity between Jehovah and the gods of Egypt. I quote from a little book called the "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," written by a converted Infidel, and describing the processes of mind through which he passed from Infidelity to a belief in Christ. I would affectionately commend the book to any real seeker after truth, anxious to impartially judge both sides.

The following is from a chapter proving that the only way the Almighty could reveal himself to men—as human nature is constituted and the world then existed, morally—was by the means which the book of Genesis declared he used, thus forming a moral demonstration that if there is a God, and he ever did reveal himself to men, the Pentateuch is true. Speaking of the miracles of Moses, the author writes:

"The first miracle, while it authenticated the mission of Moses, destroyed the serpents, which among the Egyptians were objects of worship. Thus evincing in the outset that their gods could neither help the people nor save themselves.

"The second miracle was directed against the river Nile, another object which they regard with religious reverence. . . The water of this their cherished object of idolatrous homage was transmuted to blood, and its finny idols became a mass of putridity.

"The third miracle was directed to the accomplishment of the same end—the destruction of faith in the river as an object of worship. The waters of the Nile were caused to send forth legions of frogs, which infested the whole land and became a nuisance and torment to the people. Thus their idol, by the power of the true God, was polluted and turned into a source of pollution to its worshipers.

"By the fourth miracle of a series constantly increasing in power and severity, lice came upon man and beast throughout the land. 'Now, if it be remembered,' says Gleig, 'that no one could approach the altars of Egypt upon whom so impure an insect harbored, and that the priests, to guard against the slightest risk of contamination, wore only linen garments and shaved their heads and bodies every day, the severity of this miracle as a judgment upon Egyptian idolatry may be imagined. Whilst it lasted no act of worship could be performed, and so keenly was this felt that the very magicians exclaimed, 'This is the power of God.'

"The fifth miracle was designed to destroy the trust of the people in Beelzebub or the fly-god, who was venerated as their protector from visitations of swarms of ravenous flies. . . . The miracle now wrought by Moses evinced the impotence of Beelzebub and caused the people to look elsewhere for relief from the fearful visitation under which they were suffering.

"The sixth miracle, which destroyed the cattle, excepting those of the Israelites, was aimed at the destruction of the entire system of brute worship. This system, degrading and bestial as it was, had become a monster of many heads in Egypt. They had their sacred bull and ram and heifer and goat and many others, all of which were destroyed by the agency of the God of Moses. Thus by one act of power Jehovah manifested his own supremacy and destroyed the very existence of their brute idols.

"Of the peculiar fitness of the sixth plague (the seventh miracle), says the writer before quoted, the reader will receive a better impression when he is reminded that in Egypt there were several altars upon which human sacrifices were occasionally offered when they desired to propitiate Typhon, or the evil principle. These victims being burned alive, their ashes were gathered together by the officiating priests and thrown into the air, in order that evil might be averted from every place to which an atom of the ashes was wafted. By the direction of Jehovah Moses took a handful of the ashes from the furnace (which very probably the Egyptians at this time had frequently used to turn aside the plagues with which they were smitten), and he cast it into the air, as they were accustomed to do; and instead of averting evil, boils and blains fell upon all the people of the land. Neither king nor priest nor people escaped. Thus the bloody rites of Typhon became a curse to the idolaters, and the supremacy of Jehovah was affirmed."

The author continues to show that the ninth miracle proved the impotence of Serapis, the locust god, and the eighth and tenth miracles the superiority of Jehovah over Isis and Osiris. Thus the very miracles of Moses were designed to show the difference between Egyptian mythology and zoolatry and Jehovah. There are some readers who may still insist that they were essentially the same. I can only pity them. They will find some day a more convincing argument; but alas! truth which if received now will lead to eternal life will then be the awful prelude of eternal judgment and punishment.

There is nothing new in Egypt being called to the help of Infidelity, but ever with the same damaging testimony against its cause. Even now, as in the days of Israel's king, "Pharaoh is a broken reed," a poor defense to rest on. It may not be inappropriate to recall the following anecdote of the discomfiture of those who sought to prove from Egyptian monuments a disproof of biblical chronology. Says Dr. Hawks in his little work on the "Monuments of Egypt:" "Among the monuments which had in an especial manner attracted the notice of the French savans who had accompanied Napoleon to Egypt, none had excited more learned controversy than the zodiacs, the one sculptured upon the ceiling of the temple of Dendera, and the other upon that of the temple at Esneh, in upper Egypt. For these monuments there was claimed an extraordinary antiquity, and it was confidently asserted that they completely exploded all scriptural chronology. M. Jomard made them at least three thousand years old when the Christian era commenced, while M. Dupuis would not abate a second of four thousand years, and M. Gori was very sure that they could not be younger than seventeen thousand years. 'Like birds of the night,' says Osborn, 'hovering over or perching upon the uncouth remains of ancient superstition, they filled the air with their dismal forebodings of the downfall of Christianity, or with shrieks of laughter more revolting when they thought their object was accomplished. All these, however, were soon to be put to flight by that of which they professed themselves to be all the while most devoted worshipers—the light of truth.'

"When Champollion, in the course of his researches into royal rings, came to read that upon the zodiac of Dendera he found the title of Augustus Cæsar, while on that at Esneh he read the name of Antoninus. That temple, therefore, which M. Dupuis had declared to be four thousand years older than the Christian era proved to have been built about the time of its commencement, and the edifice at Esneh, which had been profoundly demonstrated to be seventeen thousand years old when the Savior came, was shown to belong to a period one hundred and forty years after his advent."

I have taken too much space with Hindoo and Egyptian superstitions to make a full examination of those of Greece and Rome, which you allege to have also contributed to originate Christianity; the merest glance, however, would satisfy a mind capable of ordinary discernment of the absurdity of the derivation.

It has been conclusively proved that all mythology sprang from the same source, whether among the Hindoos or the Egyptians, in Babylonia or Persia, or, nearer home, among the Greeks and Romans, even to the frigid, inhospitable clime of the Norseman, the ever-varying changes of that manifestation of the workings of God's laws and powers, which we thoughtlessly call "Nature," furnished the physical facts and appearances which in process of time grew into the most intricate and often beautiful conceptions.

